Of course, we salute these great achievements for the benefit of mankind by Dr. May and Dr. Eddy, and we should pay deserved tribute to their patriotism and humanitarianism in assigning their patent rights to the Government to enable broader manufacture and, perhaps, quicker availability of the product of their discovery by the practitioners of the medical sciences.

But there is another factor to consider in connection with the announcement of this historic discovery, namely, that this is, in actuality, one of a large number of medical uses for byproducts of coal—many of them already discovered and in production.

These obviously are many other uses to which coal may be applied.

Yet, I remind my colleagues that the coal industry is a sick industry—notwithstanding its tremendous importance to the economy and the security of this Nation, and especially, to coal-producing States such as my home State of West Virginia.

I call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that we have employed in the bituminous coal industry of West Virginia approximately 48,000 miners. Just a year ago we had 57,000 coal miners in our State. Approximately 10½ years ago there were 125,000 bituminous coal miners productively employed in West Virginia.

I see present the distinguished and able junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MORTON.] He would think of these serious unemployment figures in connection with decreased coal production in his own State.

An industry so ill that its employment rolls have been sharply curtailed cannot and will not be able to afford the capital outlays for research and development which are needed so urgently to restore the coal industry to its rightful estate and thereby maintain a steady flow of production so essential to the national well-being in many aspects—economic, social, and healthwise, especially.

It was my privilege in the middle 1940's to cosponsor, as a House Member, with the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the synthetic liquid fuels bill which provided for a program whereby gasoline and other products could be made from coal and oil shale by synthesis and other methods. This research and pilot-plants effort has been successful, and needs to be carried forward and expanded, too.

S. 49 is, indeed, an important item of legislation—not only to the coal-producing States but to the whole of the United States and the world at large.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANSFIELD in the chair). The time of the Senator from West Virginia has expired. Does the Senator desire additional time?

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from West Virginia may have 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the Senator may proceed.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MORTON. I am glad the Senator from West Virginia has placed the article, to which he has referred, in the RECORD. I think it is important that we call it to the attention of our colleagues. It shows what can be done with research. We are only beginning in the field of research. I am glad to be a cosponsor of Senate bill 49, to which the Senator has made reference. I hope the appropriate committee of the Senate will take speedy action in the consideration of the bill.

ACTION OF THE SENATE ON CHANGES IN CLOTURE RULE

Mr. MCGEE. Mr. President, one of the more peculiar arguments advanced during the recent debate on rule XXII was that Senators would be risking their political necks unless they voted for majority cloture.

Personally, I have more faith in the American people and in their judgment than those who made this argument.

Americans want Senators who vote their intellectual convictions, not their fears.

But if the statement of political risk is an accurate one, the Senate should be complimented upon its courage in voting its convictions.

The Washington Star makes this point today in a very able editorial. I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Star, Jan. 14, 1959]

COURAGE IN THE SENATE

The manner in which the Senate has disposed of the filibuster issue is a refreshing testimonial to the skill of Majority Leader JOHNSON, and to the courage of all those Senators who refused to bow to political expediency.

Under the Johnson proposal, adopted finally by a vote of 72 to 22, it will require a two-thirds vote of Senators present and voting to limit debate by invoking cloture. The old rule required a two-thirds vote of the entire Senate membership.

One virtue of the change is that Senators will no longer be able to vote against cloture, in effect, by absenting themselves when the vote is taken. If a Senator is against limiting debate of a given issue he will have to stand up and be counted—and this is as it should be. Another virtue is that the Johnson plan does away with the absolute bar on debate limitation on a proposal to change the rules. Henceforth, the two-thirds of those present and voting rule will apply. The plan also discourages fights over changes in the Senate rules by specifying that the rules continue from one Congress to another unless changed in accordance with the new system, and we believe there is some merit to this.

It is true, however, that the Johnson plan does not make it easy to break a filibuster. And it should not be easy to do this.

There never will be a filibuster which can hope to succeed, except in the closing hours of a session, unless Senators, representing approximately one-third of the country are united in determined opposition to a given measure. Where such opposition exists it should not be made easy for the majority to impose its will. Under the new rule, however, the significant fact to be kept in mind is that any bill can be passed if two-thirds of the Senators voting are persuaded that it is in the national interest to adopt the measure. This being so, we do not think that legislation of really great importance will be defeated by a filibuster. Should experience demonstrate to the contrary, the rule under the Johnson plan, can always be changed.

One of the best reasons for applauding the Senate's action may be found in some of the arguments raised against the Johnson proposal. For example, let's take the case of Senator JAVITS, Republican, of New York.

We assume that Senator JAVITS has a lively awareness of the direction in which the political winds blow in his home State. At any rate, he keyed his argument to the proposition that the people in November had voted for liberalism and that the Senators, and especially the new Senators, were risking their political necks by supporting Senator JOHNSON.

It is difficult to understand how Senator JAVITS knows what the people outside of New York voted for in November. Assuming that he is right in his interpretation of the election, however, he has not risked his own neck, and that is his privilege. If other Senators have risked their necks by voting for the Johnson plan, we are glad that they had the political courage to do so. For we need Senators in this country who when faced with an important national issue, are willing to vote their convictions, even if, by doing so, they may risk their necks when they come up for reelection.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I was greatly interested in the remarks of my distinguished colleague from Wyoming [Mr. MCGEE]. I should like to say I share my colleague's views.

It was reported in a newspaper column this morning that I had promised a responsible official of a prominent labor organization in my State that I would vote for the Anderson motion. The statement, as reported in the press, is untrue, and I want the RECORD to show it. I have never promised anyone how I would vote on any measure in the U.S. Senate. All I have said to anyone is I would give due consideration to his views.

Some of us who wanted to hear the debate and the discussion on this important matter voted as we thought we should. I was one of them. I again say I want the RECORD to show that I voted to table the Anderson motion because, in my judgment, after reflection and consideration, I thought it was in the best interests of my constituents and the people of the country to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, is morning business concluded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business?

Mr. WILEY rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire recognition during the morning hour?

Mr. WILEY. I do, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

DECISION OF FEDERAL COURT IN BETHLEHEM STEEL AND YOUNGSTOWN STEEL ANTITRUST CASE

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, there was decided recently a highly important antitrust case in the Federal district court in New York City.

The district judge enjoined the Bethlehem Steel Corp. and the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Corp. from merging. The opinion was issued on November 20, 1958, in U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York, civil case No. 115328. However, the paper-backed Federal reports of the case have not yet been issued.

To show the importance of the decision, I mention that the opinion has already been printed by a publishing company for sale.

The great importance of this decision to me is its showing that judgemade law can handle most of the problems under our antitrust statutes. The courts apply the existing law to the facts in each case and progress with the times.

This decision makes it more difficult for companies to merge. This is welcome news to many who have feared the increasing size of corporate units.

Mr. President, in order that all who are interested, in and out of the Senate, may have an opportunity to read a businesslike analysis of this decision, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks an article in the January 3, 1959, issue of Business Week entitled "Antitrusters Heft a New Weapon Against Mergers."

In my opinion, it would benefit every Member of the Senate to read the down-to-earth analysis contained in this article published by the economic publishing company, of McGraw-Hill.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANTITRUSTERS HEFT A NEW WEAPON AGAINST MERGERS

Now that they've had a chance to study the Bethlehem decision, lawyers view it as a landmark in antitrust law. The steel case gives the antitrusters a set of answers for arguments raised in many pending cases. As a result, merger of competing companies is expected to be almost impossible, unless both are small.

The Government's authority to stop business mergers got a huge boost several weeks ago when a judge in New York City flatly turned down the proposed merger of two steel companies, Bethlehem Steel Co. and Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co.

Lawyers who have been studying the decision since are convinced that it was a landmark in antitrust law. For one thing, both industry and Government lawyers agreed before the case was decided that it was a definite test of the 1950 law that was intended to bolster the Government's authority to stop a merger before it happens. Until the 1950 law was passed, the Government couldn't prevent a merger from taking place and had been spectacularly unsuccessful in unscrambling mergers years after they had gone through.

SIGNIFICANCE

The verdict against the merger of Bethlehem Steel (No. 2 in the industry) and Youngstown Sheet & Tube (No. 6 in the industry) did two things:

It gave the antitrust lawyers the biggest new weapon they'd found in years—and it gave businessmen with merger on their minds a very severe blow.

It's now becoming clear that the Youngstown-Bethlehem decision raised—and answered—many of the major arguments and legal theories involved in dozens of other merger cases.

Particularly, the experts are taking a look at mergers already in court—but not decided—involving such companies as Continental Can Co., Gulf Oil Corp., Brown Shoe Co., American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corp., Crown Zellerbach Corp., Owens-Illinois Glass Co., Procter & Gamble Co., and Reynolds Metals Co.

Looking at these mergers and merger proposals, here's what the Bethlehem decision means:

It sets up a tough line against any merger between companies that significantly compete with each other.

It puts just as strict a ban on mergers that eliminate—or threaten to eliminate—an important source of supply or a significant sales market for other companies.

It makes clear that a single product of a company—as well as the whole industry line—can be used to test a merger's legality.

It demonstrates that a market area as small as a single State—or as big as several States, a whole region, or the whole Nation—can be used to measure a merger's effect on competition.

It underlines the importance of market share figures—both to define markets and to show a merger's impact.

I. MAIN TARGET

As a result of the Bethlehem ruling, acquiring a competitor virtually invites a lawsuit with the antitrusters. This is particularly true in industries that, like steel, are marked by relatively few competitors sharing the bulk of production or sales.

In such an industry, it seems clear now, any merger between one big company and another would be declared illegal. And even a merger between a big and a small company in such a concentrated industry would probably hit the same snag. Reason: If allowed, it could well set off a trend, by encouraging the other big companies to buy up the remaining small companies.

The antitrusters effectively used this argument against touching off a trend in the Bethlehem case—and got specific court recognition of this factor. The same argument will be used in virtually any merger case you can name.

This does not mean, of course, that two small companies in an industry like steel could not merge. The Bethlehem case dealt with giants. There's nothing there to suggest that, even in the steel industry, the Clayton Act necessarily bars any and every steel merger. And the antitrusters have already sanctioned small company mergers in the automobile industry.

Ease of entry: Another factor is ease of entry into an industry. Steel is a big industry—even the small companies are, by comparison with small companies in other industries, really substantial in terms of investment and sales. It's an industry that requires heavy outlays of capital in the first place, and similar financial resources to stay even. And according to the Bethlehem decision, the merger law was designed to prevent the elimination of even one competitor in such an industry.

This factor varies with each case and each industry. But ease of entry could change the complexion of a merger seemingly similar to Bethlehem.

For example, there has been at least a preliminary ruling at the Federal Trade Commission that Brillo Manufacturing Co. did not violate the merger law, even though it acquired a major competitor with a substantial share of the same steel wool market. Reason: New companies can easily enter this field; several have done so recently, and there are still as many companies in the field as there have been historically.

II. WHAT PRODUCTS COMPETE?

Of special importance—so far as other cases are concerned—is the guidance the Bethlehem case lays down for appraising the market facts in a merger. Often, the definition of a product market or a geographic market used by a court in a particular case will make or break the merger.

In the Bethlehem case, Judge Weinfeld said any products with peculiar characteristics and uses make up a line of commerce or product market under the Clayton Act. This is the same test used by the Supreme Court in the Du Pont-General Motors case to hold that automobile finishes and fabrics are a product market by themselves, separate from all other finishes and fabrics.

Emphasis on customer: The use of such a narrow test in both the Bethlehem and Du Pont cases pretty much wrapped up the final result—illegality. And this would be true in many of the pending cases, as well. It puts the emphasis on what customers buy from a seller and how they use what they buy rather than on how the seller thinks of the product.

The Bethlehem decision does not rule out, however, an opposite approach using a broader test. In fact, acquisition of a beet sugar refining company by a cane sugar refining company has been blocked by a court—on grounds beet and cane sugar are reasonably interchangeable, and so compete with each other.

This broad test, however, is more often identified by the antitrusters with another recent Supreme Court decision on cellophane. It came in a monopoly case, not a merger case, and the antitrusters hope to avoid having it grafted permanently into the law on mergers. It's easy to see why.

Du Pont case: The Supreme Court said Du Pont did not have an illegal monopoly of cellophane, because there is no narrow, separate market for cellophane. It must compete with a host of other flexible wrapping materials. Thus, Du Pont with a 75-percent share of cellophane escaped antitrust conviction because cellophane accounts for less than 20 percent of the broader flexible wrapping materials market.

Many of the pending cases pose this crucial issue on competition between products. The antitrusters realize that in some cases, a narrow definition of production market will help them, while in others it will hurt them. If cans, for example, are a separate product line from glass bottles, then a merger of the No. 2 canmaker (Continental Can Co.) and the No. 3 glass bottle maker (Hazel-Atlas Glass) probably is not illegal.

The same issue arises, but looks different, in the case of the Brown Shoe Co.'s acquisition of G. R. Kinney Corp. The case may be the next important court decision under the merger law.

Brown Shoe argues that the line of shoes it produces is not competitive with the line of shoes produced and sold by Kinney because the two lines sell in a different price range.

The Government, on the other hand, argues that despite any differences in prices, both lines of shoes compete with each other for the customer's dollar and must be considered a single line of commerce or market.

In the case of Crown Zellerbach Corp.'s acquisition of St. Helens Pulp & Paper Co.—now headed for court review—FTC said the market was coarse papers—including wrapping, bag, and sack papers, and converting papers. The company argued that other coarse paper or papers in other fields that it said could be interchanged with the coarse papers should be included, but FTC rejected these arguments. The Commission looked at the buyers. It concluded the narrow field was a proper market because the papers in it were sold to particular customers for particular uses. As for substitutes, FTC said that while some products—such as containerboard—might theoretically replace each other, there is little such substitution by users in actual practice.

III. DEFINING THE MARKET AREA

Selection of the market area involved in a merger can go a long way in deciding its legality, too. And the Bethlehem case makes it plain that in any area where two companies each make sales—even if only a small percentage of total industry sales—they compete with each other. Thus, a merger can be judged on its impact in a small geographic area—and not necessarily in the areas where the bulk of a company's sales are.

In the Crown Zellerbach case, FTC turned down the company's argument for a broad market area. Instead, the Commission said an 11-Western-State area was the natural market for western producers and that purchaser preferences and shipping costs have effectively separated the West as a competitive area from the rest of the country.

In the Brown Shoe case, both the companies and the Government recognize that the market area consists of a series of local markets. In fact, the Government in this case has undertaken a complete census and lists all the cities where Brown and Kinney sell a significant amount of shoes.

To show how the antimerger law can be pinpointed to a really small market, an FTC hearing examiner recently ruled against a merger of sand suppliers in Ohio on a finding that the geographic market involved is the southern shore of Lake Erie from Buffalo to Sandusky and extending inland 12 miles.

IV. IMPACT ON COMPETITION

The Bethlehem case also sets out specific standards to judge a merger's effect on competition. According to Judge Weinfeld, if a merger does any one of these things, Congress meant the law to block it:

Does it substantially increase concentration?

Does it eliminate a substantial factor in competition?

Does it eliminate a substantial source of supply?

Does it create relationships between buyers and sellers that deprive rivals of either of a fair opportunity to compete?

According to Weinfeld, any one of them would have been enough to bar the merger. And the antitrusters point out this is one reason why the Bethlehem ruling—even though it came in a merger of real industrial giants—also applies to mergers involving much smaller companies.

Weinfeld put special emphasis on the competitive impact of the steel merger on buyers. He says the antimerger law not only relates to competitive effects between the merging companies and their direct competitors, but to effects on buyers as well.

Often, he says, the real competition that counts is rivalry among buyers for sources of supply. And the law was particularly designed to assure buyers of the widest possible freedom of choice in selecting suppliers. Hence, any merger that removes one major source—thus reducing the alternates available to buyers—can violate the law.

The FTC says much the same thing about Crown Zellerbach's acquisition of St. Helens. The acquisition, FTC says, removes one of the few integrated paper companies in the market.

V. WHAT LAW ALLOWS

Does the Bethlehem ruling make all mergers illegal? The answer, of course, is no. After all, the FTC has counted over 900 industrial mergers or acquisitions of all types this past year—and there have only been about 40 antimerger cases filed by the Government since the law was made stricter in 1950. Not only are many mergers legal, but the antitrusters just cannot tackle even all of the questionable ones.

Because of the broad sweep of the Bethlehem case, it's also important to emphasize some of the specific things it does not do.

The Bethlehem ruling does nothing to bar any acquisition of a failing corporation—a company that would have gone out of existence anyway, because of a hopeless financial situation.

The ruling says nothing about conglomerate mergers—in which companies in unrelated fields join enterprises.

Undefined issue: Actually, a conglomerate merger has not been defined as yet by the courts. And the Government antitrusters have not yet specifically attacked one under the merger law, though several pending cases may raise conglomerate aspects.

The law is not clear on whether a chain grocery store, for example, would violate the merger law through a conglomerate type of acquisition in which it buys into a new market by taking over a local chain of stores.

Nor is the law clear on a more remote type of conglomerate, where one company moves into one line or industry after another through the merger route. The antitrusters suspect they could attack such a string of mergers, since competition could be affected in any one or all of the industries involved. Antitrusters suggest such a move by a big company into an unrelated field could transform an industry previously made up of small companies into one dominated by giants.

But, so far there has been no indication the Government will go to this point to file a case. And nothing in the Bethlehem case raises this issue.

FEDERAL FINANCIAL AID TO EDUCATION

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a newspaper article which appeared in the January 11 edition of the Washington Star, "Federal Cash Denied South's Closed Schools," and a statement which I made on the Senate floor on August 22, 1958, concerning the conference report on H.R. 13247, an education bill. The article and my statement, when read together, are self-explanatory.

There being no objection, the article and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Star, Jan. 11, 1959]

FEDERAL CASH DENIED SOUTH'S CLOSED SCHOOLS

Federal grants under the 1958 National Defense Education Act will not go to public schools closed down or changed over to private schools, Welfare Secretary Flemming assured Senator JAVITS, Republican, of New York, yesterday.

Senator JAVITS said this policy would apply immediately to schools already closed in Virginia and Arkansas.

"From the language of the National Defense Education Act it is evident that no Federal payments could be made with respect to schools which are not in operation," Mr. Flemming wrote in a letter made public by the New York Senator.

WOULDN'T GET U.S. FUNDS

"In the case of schools which have been converted to private institutions, their very denial that they are any longer public would render them ineligible for Federal grants allotted under the act to secondary schools.

"On the same basis such schools could not receive indirect aid from Federal grants to the State educational agency or the local school district, since all such grants must be distributed in accordance with plans submitted by the States and approved by the Commissioner of Education."

Senator JAVITS said that this ruling currently affects 13 Virginia and Arkansas schools. He noted that eight Southern States have various laws which could be used to close public schools ordered to integrate.

OTHERS ON OWN ALSO

If additional schools are shut, he said, they also would be automatically ineligible to receive any of the approximately $90 million authorized by the National Defense Education Act.

That 1958 law established a 7-year program of aid primarily for public school instructional facilities in science, mathematics, and foreign languages and for student testing and guidance programs.

"Clearly, the Health, Education, and Welfare Department has decided that the law requires its administrator to consider the Supreme Court's Little Rock opinion of last September that neither ingenious nor ingenuous schemes to evade Federal court orders should work," Senator JAVITS said.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR STROM THURMOND, DEMOCRAT OF SOUTH CAROLINA, CONCERNING CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 13247, EDUCATION BILL, ON SENATE FLOOR, AUGUST 22, 1958

Mr. President, I rise to speak in opposition to the adoption of the conference report on H.R. 13247, a bill to provide Federal financial aid to education. Though I was and am opposed to Federal aid to education, since the States have never delegated the field of education to the Federal Government, I find an additional serious objection to the education bill agreed to by the Senate conferees.

The Senate conferees have agreed to accept certain provisions of the House bill which can have no other effect than to cause further deterioration of race relations, which have already been severely damaged. Mr. President, I refer to the provision in the House bill which has been agreed to by the Senate conferees and which provides that student loan funds shall be administered by institutions of higher education, instead of by State commissions as was provided in the Senate bill. Under the House provision Federal moneys would be allocated to public and private institutions of higher education, for the purpose of making educational loans to students in attendance at the institutions.

The House method of administration causes me grave concern, Mr. President, because the administration now in power—or any future administration—could deny loan funds to any educational institution which follows a policy of segregation. The denial could be very simply accomplished by an Executive order requiring the U.S. Commissioner of Education to withhold loan funds from any segregated institution. The same objective could be accomplished by the Commissioner of Education, himself, by means of an administrative regulation issued by him.

In the face of such an order, or administrative regulation, southern colleges would have to forgo the benefits of the loan funds and likewise students in attendance at such colleges would have to forgo the benefits of educational assistance loans. As a consequence, southern citizens would be taxed to establish loan funds which their children could not even use.

To say that such an Executive order or administrative regulation would never be issued does not allay my fears concerning this matter. I recall that statements of similar purport were made shortly prior to the dispatch of troops to Little Rock.

The fact is that there is nothing in the conference version of the bill, or in any Federal law, to prevent this administration, or any future administration, from denying loan funds to institutions which practice segregation. In view of the fact that political considerations outweigh good judgment in the councils of national administrations, it would be most unwise to adopt the proposed procedure regarding loan funds.

Mr. President, I do not charge that the loan fund administrative procedure has been purposely selected to bring about the consequences which I have described. Nonetheless, I would consider it a breach of faith with the people whom I represent, as well as a failure to meet my obligations to my Senate colleagues, if I did not point out the dangers which lie ahead if the administrative procedure agreed to by the Senate and House conferees is permitted to become law.

For these reasons, I feel that the Senate conferees should make a further effort to have the loan funds administered by State commissions, and, failing in that, should endeavor to have the loan fund title stricken from the bill altogether. Finally, Mr. President, I would express my strongest and most sincere hope that the conference report will not be adopted.

DEATH OF FORMER SENATOR DAVIS ELKINS, OF WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a short eulogy about a most illustrious former colleague who served his community, State, and Nation to an extent seldom matched. I refer to former United States Senator Davis Elkins, of Elkins, W. Va.

There being no objection, the eulogy was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C., January 5, 1959.—Former United States Senator Davis Elkins, of West Virginia, died today from an extended illness. Death came in his sleep at a hospital in Richmond, Va., where he had been a patient.

With the death of Senator Elkins there passed from the industrial scene of West Virginia one of the last of a long list of pioneers in the development of much of the natural wealth of the State. The former United States Senator Stephen B. Elkins, father of Davis Elkins, had collaborated with former United States Senator Henry Gassaway Davis, his father-in-law, in processing and marketing timber and coal and in building many of the original railroads of the State.

It was from the late Stephen B. Elkins that the city of Elkins received its name.

Senator Elkins is survived by his widow, three children, and six grandchildren. His children are Mrs. Charles J. Kelly (Katherine) of New York City; Davis Elkins, Jr., of Elkins, W. Va.; and Mrs. A. Thomas Zirpolo (Maureen), of Cleveland, Ohio.

The family has been active in Republican politics in West Virginia and the Nation for three-quarters of a century.

Davis Elkins was born in Washington, D.C., in 1876 while his father was serving as a Delegate in the U.S. Congress representing the Territory of New Mexico. His mother, the former Hallie Davis, daughter of the then U.S. Senator Henry Gassaway Davis, met and married his father when he came to Washington as a congressional delegate.

He attended Lawrenceville, N.J., preparatory school; Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and Harvard University.

He was a veteran of the Spanish-American War, having served as a first lieutenant with Company E of the First West Virginia Volunteer Infantry. He reentered the active service of his country during World War I and served as a major in Europe. It was during his service in the Army that he was elected to the United States Senate from West Virginia in November of 1918. He did not seek reelection at the conclusion of his term in 1925.

Upon leaving the U.S. Senate, Senator Elkins undertook the active management of his coal and timber holdings, principally in northern West Virginia. He actively pursued this interest until his retirement due to ill health several years ago.

He had helped shape the Republican Party activities at the end of World War I and had played an important role in the party's financing during the period from 1920 until his health no longer permitted his active participation.

It was upon this withdrawal from a leading role that his wife, Mary R. Elkins, began to represent him in active participation on the political stage and was sent from their home congressional district in West Virginia as a delegate to the 1952 Republican National Convention. Following that Mrs. Elkins was twice a candidate for Congress in the Second District.

The Elkins family has been one of the political and social leaders in the Nation since Stephen B. Elkins came to Washington in the 1870's. During the period of Davis Elkins' business career in West Virginia, he also maintained a home in Washington, and most of the Nation's political leaders were frequent guests with him and his family.

The Davis and Elkins College, in Elkins, W. Va., was an original joint gift to the Presbyterian Church by the two families who had lived in and developed that part of the State. Their original homes still serve as dormitories on the campus on the school.

Funeral arrangements are incomplete, but the body will be interred in the family plot at Elkins.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, is morning business concluded?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is concluded.

SIZE OF SENATE COMMITTEES

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 24), as follows:

That paragraph (1) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate (relating to standing committees) is amended—

(1) by striking out "fifteen" in subparagraph (a) (relating to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry) and inserting in lieu thereof "seventeen";

(2) by striking out "twenty-three" in subparagraph (b) (relating to the Committee on Appropriations) and inserting in lieu thereof "twenty-seven";

(3) by striking out "fifteen" in subparagraph (c) (relating to the Committee on Armed Services) and inserting in lieu thereof "seventeen";

(4) by striking out "eleven" in subparagraph (e) (relating to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service) and inserting in lieu thereof "nine";

(5) by striking out "nine" in subparagraph (f) (relating to the Committee on the District of Columbia) and inserting in lieu thereof "five";

(6) by striking out "thirteen" in subparagraph (g) (relating to the Committee on Government Operations) and inserting in lieu thereof "nine";

(7) by striking out "fifteen" in subparagraph (h) (relating to the Committee on Finance) and inserting in lieu thereof "seventeen";

(8) by striking out "fifteen" in subparagraph (i) (relating to the Committee on Foreign Relations) and inserting in lieu thereof "seventeen";

(9) by striking out "fifteen" in subparagraph (j) (relating to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce) and insert in lieu thereof "seventeen";

(10) by striking out "thirteen" in subparagraph (l) (relating to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare) and inserting in lieu thereof "fifteen"; and

(11) by striking out "eleven" in subparagraph (n) (relating to the Committee on Public Works) and inserting in lieu thereof "fifteen".

SEC. 2. Paragraph (4) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended to read as follows:

"(4). Each Senator shall serve on two and no more of the following standing committees: Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; Committee on Appropriations; Committee on Armed Services; Committee on Banking and Currency; Committee on Finance; Committee on Foreign Relations; Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; Committee on the Judiciary; Committee on Labor and Public Welfare; Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs; Committee on Public Works; and Committee on Rules and Administration. No Senator shall serve on more than one of the following standing committees: Committee on the District of Columbia; Committee on Government Operations; Committee on Post Office and Civil Service; and Committee on Aeronautical and Space Sciences. The foregoing provisions of this paragraph shall not be effective during any period when there are more than forty-six Senators of the minority party."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TALMADGE in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask that in paragraph 5 the word "five" be changed to "seven." That is a typographical error.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the right to modify his resolution. The resolution is modified accordingly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may suggest the absence of a quorum without losing the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, this rule, which is sponsored by both the majority and the minority leadership, has been carefully drafted.

Through this rule, we hope to accomplish certain clear objectives. All of them will facilitate the work of the Senate.

We hope to provide each Senator with committee posts where his or her background can be fully used.

We hope to provide each Senator with committee posts where his or her interests will be fully engaged.

We hope to distribute the workload—which will be heavy—equitably and fairly.

We hope to combine youth and vigor with the experience of years of service.

It has always been my belief that there is no sensible reason to have young Senators sitting in the anterooms of committees 6 years awaiting an assignment. A Senator should have as full a right to participate in committee deliberations as he does to participate in floor discussions.

We live in a world which has a population of 2,700 million people. It is a world of problems and issues all of which touch directly upon the United States and the U.S. Senate.

We have only 98 Senators. This means that if we are to discharge our responsibilities, we must make the maximum use of the talents and the abilities we have.

Legislative activities will start early. I am hoping that the committees can be organized quickly and efficiently, for there are some issues which are clamoring for resolution.

We need a housing bill with the maximum speed that is consistent with prudence and thoroughness.

We need a labor bill to protect honest, constructive labor from the handful of racketeers and hoodlums who are trying to corrupt honorable organizations and threaten honorable citizens.

We need an airport bill to bring our air transportation into line with the requirements of the jet age.

We need a depressed areas bill to help people who are in economic trouble to help themselves.

These issues do not permit of delay. There is no time to waste. And right behind them—crowding into line—are a number of other issues which we must face.

The Senate is not comparable to a business organization, and Senators are not comparable to private enterprise officials. But there are certain practices which we should borrow from the business world.

In recent years, the business world has made a point of bringing younger men into its deliberations. And we should be at least as effective.

There are certain fields in which we anticipate greater activity. Therefore we have proposed to enlarge certain committees that have jurisdiction. They are:

Agriculture and Forestry—from 15 to 17.

Appropriations—from 23 to 27. It handles an $80 billion budget.

Armed Services—from 15 to 17. It conducts hearings concerning national defense.

Finance—from 15 to 17. It handles social security, veterans affairs, and all our tax measures.

Foreign Relations—from 15 to 17. It deals with our relations with other nations.

Interstate and Foreign Commerce—from 15 to 17. It has jurisdiction which covers a wide scope.

Labor—from 13 to 15.

Public works—from 13 to 15.

In order to work out the mathematics of the situation, we have proposed to decrease the membership of three committees after consultation with the very brilliant and able author of the Reorganization Act [Mr. MONRONEY], with the legislative counsel, with the minority leaders, and with the chairmen of the committees, and the proposed reductions are agreeable. The proposed reductions are:

Government Operations—from 13 to 9.

Post Office and Civil Service—from 13 to 9.

District of Columbia—from 9 to 7.

The Aeronautical and Space Sciences, Banking and Currency, Interior and Insular Affairs, and Judiciary Committees would remain unchanged at 15 members. The Rules Committee would remain unchanged at 9 members.

Mr. President, I believe this is a rule which would provide for the most efficient and effective operation of the Senate. It would also afford us the best opportunity of assuring every Member major committee assignments.

We cannot—under any set of circumstances—assure every Senator of all the assignments he desires. But we can assure him that this rule will give us the opportunity to distribute the assignments fairly and equitably.

I consider this to be a rule for a working Senate. I hope it will be adopted.

I am not prepared to say how either side will select the members of the committees, because I have talked to only two or three Senators in the past 2 days concerning committee assignments, but I am prepared to say that when the majority makes its recommendations I hope the Senate will approve them. Likewise, whatever recommendations the minority may make, I shall support them and I shall ask my colleagues to support them, just as I did when Senator Taft was the leader and we had differences on that point.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, the subject of the committee structure has always been a rather fluid and dynamic one. I am advised that back in 1884 there were as many as 77 committees. I have not examined the record, and therefore cannot testify authoritatively on the subject, but I believe that in 1921 there were 33 Senate committees.

In 1946 there were still 33 committees. It was at that time that my distinguished friend the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] and I, among others, served on a joint committee of the House and Senate to reorganize the legislative branch. One of the important items which was before us was the streamlining of the committee structure of both the Senate and the House. Certainly it was not an easy task, as he will certify. For 2 years we labored on that job in the hope that we could bring to both the House and the Senate an acceptable bill dealing not only with committees but also with rules and other matters.

Following that labor the committee structure was reduced finally to 15 in the Senate and to 19 in the House. I see on the floor my distinguished friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and I recall his interest in the subject at that time.

Therefore, there is considerable precedent for a modification in the committee structure from time to time. We are mindful of the fact that new circumstances bring about new requirements and new responsibilities. As Lincoln said, "When the occasion is new, you have to think anew and act anew."

I am aware of the accretion in the number of Members on the other side of the aisle, which I view with sincere regret, but that has been brought about by circumstances in our public affairs, by reason of the fact that a sovereign people has spoken, and we must take appropriate account of it. Besides, Mr. President, I have always gone on the theory that when we cannot get a whole loaf we must take what bread we can.

I believe I can say for the majority leader that he has been decently generous in the matter. There have been a great many discussions of the subject over a long period of time. I believe that at least a half dozen changes were made in the language of the resolution in the submission of which I have joined the distinguished majority leader. I am sure that some Senators will not be entirely satisfied with the terms of the resolution. Under the circumstances, however, aware as I am of the problem which reposes with the other side of the aisle, as well as our own, I believe the resolution represents a fairly good undertaking, and for that reason I concur in it.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. It is my understanding that the total number of committee seats in the standing committee structure under the resolution would be increased over the number last year by only eight seats. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. MONRONEY. We now have two additional Senators. Therefore, if we increase the number of committee assignments we now have two Senators to fill them. I believe we are realistic enough to know that before the end of this year two additional Senators may join us. That will give us four new Senators. Therefore, on the basis of two seats for every Senator, we would be out of balance in terms of the present number of committee seats.

The guiding light must always be, not the number of Senators on any one of the standing committees, because the numbers will vary, but the total number of committee seats. As times change—for example, as demands on the budget grow greater and greater and demands for tax legislation and a revision of our Internal Revenue Code become greater and greater—the available manpower must be shifted. It would be foolhardy to think that anyone years ago could tailor our committees with varying jurisdictions to meet the exacting needs of a growing country.

I compliment the majority leader and the minority leader for shifting manpower to provide for the changing workload, at the same time reducing the manpower on committees which are less comprehensive in jurisdiction in order to keep within the limits of the number of committee assignments which a Senator can ably handle. I believe that is the test. Therefore, I congratulate the majority leader on the care with which he has worked out this new arrangement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am delighted to have the wise counsel of the Senator from Oklahoma who perhaps has contributed more to our stable committee structure than any other Senator.

I am not prepared to go along with him and agree that it is an assured fact that we will have any additional Senators this year. Time will have to tell about that. Nor am I prepared to say that we will not have to increase the membership of committees in order to take care of any additional Senators who may come to the Senate. However, I am prepared to work with the Senator from Oklahoma in an attempt to resolve the situation which may confront us just as we have satisfactorily resolved this matter. I deeply appreciate the Senator's earnest and generous contribution to the solution of this question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If I were to add one additional word, and if I were to fuss with the majority leader on this matter it would be only with respect to the Committee on Appropriations. I know, of course, that the budget will bulk large in our discussions during this session of the Senate. At the present time the minority have a little more power within the Appropriations Committee. The proposed increase, percentagewise, will diminish our effectiveness. Therefore, we will have to make up that diminution of power with greater vigor and greater devotion and greater zeal. I hope we can demonstrate that to our distinguished majority leader before the session is over.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank my friend from Illinois.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. DWORSHAK. I wish to discuss that same point. The majority leader proposes that the Committee on Appropriations be increased from 23 to 27 members. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. DWORSHAK. What will be the ratio then?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. 18 to 9. That is 66⅔ percent. The majority ratio in the Senate is 65.3 percent. Since we do not have 66⅔ percent of the Senate membership some committees will be divided 11 to 6, which will be less than two to one. I have felt for a long time that we should try to maintain the same ratio on committees as we have in the Senate at large, because that is fair to the minority. There was an occasion, when I was in the minority, when it was proposed not to maintain that percentage. It took us several weeks to resolve the question. The minority was very reasonable, I thought, and we finally resolved it equitably. I want to do unto others as I would have them do unto me.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Of course if the membership were held at 23, with a ratio of 12 to 11, as it has been in past Congresses, the ratio would be 15 to 8. That would be a loss of three for the Republicans and a gain of three for the majority party. Under the new proposal there will be a loss of two for the minority and a gain of six for the majority. Although the majority leader has pointed out that this ratio would accurately reflect the two-thirds majority which his party has, it would seem to me that the influx at this time of six would be an unreasonably large number, particularly because the total membership of the committees is being increased by four.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. We have tried to reflect the intentions of the voters in the last election.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I wish to join in the commendation of the proposal of the leadership on both sides of the aisle, but, as I understand, on the initiative of the majority leader. The Senator from Illinois has referred to the development in the size of committees in the Senate. In view of the fact that he saw fit to do so, I believe the record should show that in 1953, on the initiative of the late Senator Taft, a modification in the committee structure was made, and the Reorganization Act was modified to provide a certain number of committees with 13 members assigned to each committee.

That had been worked out, as I recall, in order to make certain that there would be two places for each Senator; and on the initial assignment it was possible to say, I suppose, that each Senator had a major committee. But when there was a shift in the control of the Senate, the tyranny of numbers was such that it would be impossible for the Republicans in the 83d Congress, in 1953, to respect that end and, at the same time, to have a majority of one on each committee.

As a result, Senator Taft created a special committee within the Senate Republican conference to work on this problem. I had the honor to serve on that committee, and I presented a resolution which proposed at that time that we adopt the very principle which is now incorporated, namely, to change the size of the committees to reflect the difference in the workload.

The membership of each committee at that time was 13, with the exception of the Committee on Appropriations. There were 13 members of the Committee on the District of Columbia, 13 on the Committee on Foreign Relations, 13 on the Commitee on Post Office and Civil Service, 13 on the Committee on Finance.

It seemed to us at that time that the size of the committees should reflect the workload of the committees in the modern age. I am glad the distinguished majority leader stressed that point in his remarks today. The adjustment suggested reflects the changing workload of the Senate. I think it is an excellent solution. I am glad to support it.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from New Hampshire, so that he may ask a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator from South Dakota has stated the situation extremely well and ably. I think the way in which he has stated the matter indicates that within the framework suggested the membership of the committees and the size of the committees shall bear a ratio relative to the importance of the work they do. That is the objective which I sought in 1953, and which I think will be even more reflected in what is proposed today.

I hope, I may say to the distinguished majority leader, that we may have a vote on the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I appreciate the Senator's statement.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, I believe that in the redistribution of assignments to committees it will be possible for every Senator to be assured of at least one major assignment. The reduction in the number of assignments to so-called minor committees will reduce the number of places to which assignments can be made. A byproduct of the whole arrangement should be to insure every Senator's receiving at least one major assignment, and in many cases two major assignments.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I ask that the resolution be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution, as modified, will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read, as follows:

That paragraph (1) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate (relating to standing committees) is amended—

(1) by striking out "fifteen" in subparagraph (a) (relating to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry) and inserting in lieu thereof "seventeen";

(2) by striking out "twenty-three" in subparagraph (b) (relating to the Committee on Appropriations) and inserting in lieu thereof "twenty-seven";

(3) by striking out "fifteen" in subparagraph (c) (relating to the Committee on Armed Services) and inserting in lieu thereof "seventeen";

(4) by striking out "eleven" in subparagraph (e) (relating to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service) and inserting in lieu thereof "nine";

(5) by striking out "nine" in subparagraph (f) (relating to the Committee on the District of Columbia) and inserting in lieu thereof "seven";

(6) by striking out "thirteen" in subparagraph (g) (relating to the Committee on Government Operations) and inserting in lieu thereof "nine";

(7) by striking out "fifteen" in subparagraph (h) (relating to the Committee on Finance) and inserting in lieu thereof "seventeen";

(8) by striking out "fifteen" in subparagraph (i) (relating to the Committee on Foreign Relations) and inserting in lieu thereof "seventeen";

(9) by striking out "fifteen" in subparagraph (j) (relating to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce) and insert in lieu thereof "seventeen";

(10) by striking out "thirteen" in subparagraph (l) (relating to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare) and inserting in lieu thereof "fifteen"; and

(11) by striking out "eleven" in subparagraph (n) (relating to the Committee on Public Works) and inserting in lieu thereof "fifteen".

SEC. 2. Paragraph (4) of Rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended to read as follows:

"(4). Each Senator shall serve on two and no more of the following standing committees: Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; Committee on Appropriations; Committee on Armed Services; Committee on Banking and Currency; Committee on Finance; Committee on Foreign Relations; Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; Committee on the Judiciary; Committee on Labor and Public Welfare; Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs; Committee on Public Works; and Committee on Rules and Administration. No Senator shall serve on more than one of the following standing committees: Committee on the District of Columbia; Committee on Government Operations; Committee on Post Office and Civil Service; and Committee on Aeronautical and Space Sciences. The foregoing provisions of this paragraph shall not be effective during any period when there are more than forty-six Senators of the minority party."

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask that the last sentence of the resolution be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the last sentence of the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The foregoing provisions of this paragraph shall not be effective during any period when there are more than 46 Senators of the minority party.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I shall not delay the Senate or prevent the Senate from voting on the resolution; however, in my judgment, this proposal is a mistake. It is a mistake to enlarge further the committees which are already the largest committees of the Senate. Some years ago this sort of thing was done in order to make it possible to assign more Senators to committees which were regarded as the more important committees. I have served on some of the larger committees. I say, as a junior member on some of them, that if an important witness comes before the committee it takes the witness all day before he can get back to his office downtown to do his work. If a junior Senator wishes to ask a question, he must often wait until the Senate has been in session 2 hours before he can ask the question. Simply as a matter of seniority, the usual result is that a junior Senator on the major committees, is foreclosed from asking a question, as a practical matter, if an important executive department witness is before the committee.

For example, today the Committee on Foreign Relations had the Secretary of State before it as a witness. Of course, I am happy to yield to my seniors on committees; but if I want to ask a question or two, it is impractical; and there is a Senator farther down the line than I am. Now it is proposed to make the committees even larger.

If we continue to enlarge committees to the point where they are unwieldy, it will be hardly worth while to be a member of a committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. There is merit in what the Senator from Louisiana says. We have spent many hours in considering the viewpoint which he has so ably expressed. We have tried to reach a reasonable solution.

If no additions were made, some Senators would lose their places on committees. Junior Senators would never have the opportunity to be assigned to important committees, much less to ask questions. As it is, they can sit in the committees and hear witnesses, even if they do not question them, if the witnesses are so rushed that they cannot wait until each Senator has had the opportunity to ask questions.

Unless the numerical strength of the committees is adjusted to the workloads of the committees, many of the more able and more vigorous Senators will not have an opportunity even to respond to a rollcall of many of the committees which carry the heaviest responsibilities.

There was a time when the Senate had 34, 35, or 38 committees. However, the number of Senate committees has been drastically reduced. There was a time when the membership on the committees was much in excess of what it is now.

The House of Representatives—although I do not advocate that the Senate follow its example at all—is confronted with the same problem the Senator from Louisiana has mentioned. I served in the House of Representatives six terms. On its Foreign Affairs Committee the House of Representatives probably has, I would say, 40 or more members.

The Secretary of State manages, somehow, in some way, to give each Senator on the committee an opportunity to ask questions, if the Senators are sufficiently patient, and are able to indulge him that long. I do not know how much the Members learn from the testimony; but if a Senator is willing to learn, he can do so.

The Appropriations Committee of the other body, the House of Representatives, now has 49 members. Certainly the House is a larger body.

However, the problem the Senate faces is that it has large memberships on committees whose workload is relatively small, and no adjustment is made for a committee whose workload is very large.

No Senator has adjusted himself more to the convenience of the leadership and the responsibilities of the leadership than has the Senator from Louisiana, so far as committees are concerned. Time and time again he has yielded to his colleagues. He has been extremely considerate. He was a senior Member here a long time before he was assigned to the committee of his choice, the committee on which he wished to serve.

Under this resolution, two additional Members—one from the majority and one from the minority—will be assigned to both of the committees on which the Senator from Louisiana serves. Some of those assignments will go to new Members, who have only begun their service in this body. I think many times they will help provide a quorum when otherwise there would be difficulty in obtaining one. They will furnish a fresh, vigorous approach to the problems the committees face.

On the other hand, if we are merely to say that the committee assignments will remain static, that the status quo will be maintained; and if, in that connection, some Senators are told, "You did not get here first"—as has happened in years past; and I know the Senator from Louisiana has suffered as a result, because he had to wait a long time before he was assigned to the committee to which he wished to be assigned—we can say to certain Members, "You are to serve on a minor committee; and after you have served on it for 6 years, you can be assigned to the committee on which you prefer to serve."

Finally, Mr. President, I wish to say that unless these two Members are added, at least 15 Members on this side and several Members on the other side will not have an opportunity to ask any questions of anyone, in the case of a substantial number of committees which carry a heavy workload.

I thank the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it seems to me that there should be better ways than this one to work out this matter.

I was willing to waive my seniority long enough to permit two Members junior to me to be assigned to the Foreign Relations Committee before I was assigned to it; and I am sure the Senator from Texas well recalls that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I do.

Mr. LONG. Instead of what is now proposed, it seems to me that a simple change in our seniority procedure would solve the entire matter; and then the committees could be wieldy ones.

If we agree that each Senator will have his first choice regarding committee assignments before any Senator receives his second choice, without displacing any Member from any of his present committee assignments, I believe this problem can be solved.

The Senator from Texas has spoken of the size of the committees. The Foreign Relations Committee and the Finance Committee have a time-honored procedure whereby no subcommittees are appointed; any measure which comes before either of them must be considered by the entire committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Is that true in the case of the Foreign Relations Committee? I thought the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] was chairman of a Latin-American subcommittee of that committee.

Mr. LONG. To the best of my knowledge, those are simply consultative subcommittees, without any legislative responsibility.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. If I may be heard at this point, let me say that the Subcommittee on Latin America was a standing subcommittee for consultative purposes; but under special authority given last summer, as a result of the trip made by the Vice President to South America, the subcommittee was allowed $150,000, with specific authority to investigate conditions in Latin America.

The other exception is the Disarmament Subcommittee, which also is new. Only recently it was created in the first instance; it was not previously a consultative committee. As the Senator will recall, it was a special committee of the Senate, created by special act of the Senate, and involved some Members outside the Foreign Relations Committee. But as of the present time, it is a subcommittee which recently has been formed for the first time.

Mr. LONG. The point I have in mind is that with committees so large, and with the time-honored principle that subcommittees are not to be appointed by certain of our committees, but that the questions coming before the committees mentioned are of such great importance that all matters brought before those committees for consideration, or even for hearings, must be dealt with only by the full committees themselves, to enlarge the committee in the way now proposed would, I believe, be a mistake.

Mr. President, I am confident I am correct. I have stated my protest about this matter, which I assume has been worked up by the leadership on both sides of the aisle. I merely wish to say that in my judgment we shall be making a mistake when the proposed change is made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TALMADGE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Texas as modified. Is there objection? Without objection——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, there is objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana objects.

The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified. [Putting the question.]

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the resolution was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

INFLATION: RUSSIA'S COLD WAR WEAPON

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, the Soviet Union's potentially most dangerous weapon in the cold war is inflation in America.

Our enemies rely increasingly upon economic warfare as a means of conquest. They hope that their actions in this field of combat will so accelerate the pace of inflation in the United States that it can no longer be controlled.

The Russian reliance upon inflation as a silent weapon of the cold war was brilliantly outlined, in an article so entitled, by Demaree Bess which was published in the Saturday Evening Post of October 18, 1958.

Mr. Bess undertook to show how inflation has become a major factor in the Soviet-American cold war, and how it can break the human spirit as completely as famines, earthquakes, wars, or revolutions.

Indeed, Mr. Bess' statement about inflation as a destroyer of the human spirit is no exaggeration. In country after country, inflation has undermined the peoples' faith in themselves and in democratic government, paving the way for revolutionary turmoil and dictatorship.

From his long experience as a foreign correspondent, Mr. Bess drew many examples of deliberate use of inflation by the Communists as a means of sabotaging free governments and preparing the way for Red dictatorship.

If the Russians can force the pace of American spending to the point where inflation gets out of control—

Mr. Bess concluded—

they can forget about such weapons as intercontinental missiles. For the ability of Americans to wage economic warfare on even terms will depend upon whether the American Government and people can guard against further serious inflation in our own economy. The entire non-Communist world depends, as never before, upon the solidity of the American economic and financial structure.

What can we do to defeat the Soviet Union's hopes that America will succumb to fiscal irresponsibility and permit runaway inflation to sap the morale of our people and to destroy their faith, and the faith of the peoples of the free world, in the stability of the dollar and in our system of government?

Obviously, firm action to control the Federal budget is an essential first step.

President Eisenhower has announced that he will submit to this Congress a budget for fiscal year 1960 which will be balanced at approximately $77 billion. Heavy pressures will be exerted upon Members of Congress to increase spending far above the levels to be recommended by the President. Undoubtedly, many of these pressures will be exerted on behalf of very worthy causes, causes which will arouse our sympathies and which we would like to support.

But I am convinced that this is a year in which we must exercise a high degree of selectivity in our approach to Federal spending. We must establish a realistic system of priorities, putting first things first.

Present world tensions require the spending of enormous sums for our own defense. We must spend large amounts for mutual security, and smaller, though substantial, amounts for economic aid to the underdeveloped nations which are the prime targets of the Soviet Union's economic offensive.

We must provide for essential Federal services in a growing America, but we must at the same time retrench in expenditures on nonessential domestic spending programs and hold the line against Federal participation in the costs of new domestic programs, however desirable and appealing they may be.

We may even face the unpleasant necessity of raising taxes.

But, certainly, we should set our fiscal house in order for the longer range future to be in readiness for the tests which the Soviet Union's economic warfare will impose on us in the next decade.

During the 85th Congress, and since its adjournment, I have advocated a six-point program of anti-inflationary fiscal reform: It includes:

First. An impartial and objective review of the entire Federal tax structure and the long-range fiscal problems of the United States, with special reference to (a) the capacity of the economy to provide the resources necessary for the national security and essential governmental services; and (b) methods of raising required governmental revenues which will distribute the burdens of taxation most effectively and equitably, contribute to the maintenance of a currency with stable purchasing power, and foster the growth of the economy.

Second. Amendment of the Employment Act of 1946 to make price stability an explicit goal of Federal economic policy.

Third. Provision of the item veto of appropriation bills and of bills calling for expenditures by a borrowing "pipeline" to the Treasury.

Fourth. Substitution of a single appropriation bill for the individual bills which make it almost impossible for the average Member of Congress to determine, before the closing days of a session, what the total spending level will be.

Fifth. Consideration of the advisability of consumer credit controls, particularly for installment credit, at least on a standby basis.

Sixth. Examination of the cause of wage increases in excess of productivity, and review of existing laws to determine whether they permit too great concentrations of power, contrary to the public interest, in labor unions as well as in industry.

With respect to the first item of my program, I have had the belief that the best approach to an impartial and objective tax and fiscal policy study was to have it made by a nonpartisan Commission, Presidentially appointed under authority of legislation enacted by the Congress. I had prepared a bill with that end in view, but have now concluded that its enactment at an early date in the present session would be impossible. Since early action is essential, I was extremely pleased when President Eisenhower, in his state of the Union message, announced he was planning to appoint a committee on national goals and methods of achieving them, and had requested the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare revisions of our tax structure. These actions will accomplish the objectives of the bill I had drafted. I was also pleased by the recent announcement by Chairman WILBUR D. MILLS, of the House Ways and Means Committee, that his committee, with the assistance of advisory committees drawn from the public, will initiate a similar study, though perhaps somewhat more limited in scope, during the present Congress.

I have already introduced bills for a "price stability" amendment to the Employment Act, for an item veto, and to give the Federal Reserve Board standby powers to control consumer installment credit. In connection with the former bill, I have urged the Committee on Banking and Currency to conduct early hearings, and hope that the issues raised by the sixth point in my program will be given consideration at that time.

The distinguished senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] has advised me he will introduce a bill proposing the single appropriation bill, as he has in former years, and has kindly extended an invitation to join him in sponsorship which, of course, I have gladly accepted.

At the opening session of the 14th American Assembly, on U.S. Monetary Policy, held at Arden House, Harriman, N.Y., last October, I outlined this program to a distinguished audience of American businessmen and economists.

I am pleased to inform the Senate that in its final report, the American Assembly concluded unanimously that "reasonable stability in the average level of prices" must be a primary goal of economic policy, having equal status with two other objectives, "vigorous growth in the real output of the economy" and "avoidance of wide cyclical fluctuations in employment."

At the outset of my remarks, I referred to the increasing reliance of Soviet leaders upon economic warfare and inflation as means of conquest.

There is distressing evidence that they have gained some successes. Peoples of the free world are beginning to have serious doubts about the future of the American dollar.

This unpleasant fact was recently reported in a blunt and sober speech by the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. William McC. Martin, Jr., speaking in Chicago on December 12, said that in a recent trip to several countries in the Far East he had had the distressing experience of finding "among intelligent and perceptive men in those countries a growing distrust over the future of the American dollar."

Whether or not it is justified—and I certainly think it is not—it is important to recognize that this feeling exists.

To the foreigner, much more than to Americans, the dollar is a symbol of this country's strength. A decline in the value of the dollar would suggest to him a decline in the faith and credit of the United States, signaling in his mind a decline not only in American economic strength but also in moral force.

Mr. Martin said he found two major reasons for this distrust:

First. A conviction in the minds of foreigners that "American goods are going to find themselves priced out of the market."

Second. The $12 billion deficit that has developed in the U.S. budget, plus possibilities that further deficits may follow.

America is a rich country, as Chairman Martin pointed out. We should not be ashamed of it, nor should we apologize for having created a society with the highest standards of living for the average family that the world has ever seen.

We recognize that poverty, regrettably, afflicts a minority of our population, and we recognize an obligation to help improve the living standards of those less fortunate, as evidenced, for example, by slum clearance and social welfare programs.

For the preservation of our way of life, we must spend whatever is required for national defense, including mutual security. But we cannot afford to spend it if we lack the courage to find ways of paying the bills other than by printing money.

We must either raise taxes; or

We must revise our Federal-tax structure to produce more funds; or

We must have a breathing spell in which the priorities of other programs are reduced so that we can live within our income.

I hope Mr. Martin's address will receive serious attention by my colleagues in the Senate on both sides of the aisle because he speaks not as a partisan but as the head of an independent Federal agency, responsible to the Congress, and not to the Executive, for the regulation of the supply of money in order to foster high levels of employment and stable prices.

In the article by Demaree Bess from which I quoted at the outset of my remarks, he reprinted a significant statement from a book written in 1919 by the English economist, John Maynard Keynes. Mr. Keynes wrote:

Lenin is said to have declared that the best way to destroy the capitalist system was to debauch the currency. By a continuing process of inflation governments can confiscate, secretly and unobserved, an important part of the wealth of their citizens. By this method they not only confiscate, but they confiscate arbitrarily * * *. Lenin certainly was right. There is no subtler, no surer means of overturning the existing basis of society than to debauch the currency. The process engages all the hidden forces of economic law on the side of destruction, and does it in a manner which not one man in a million can diagnose.

There is ample evidence that the rulers of the Soviet Union have learned Lenin's lesson well, and are seeking to use inflation in the United States as their silent, secret weapon in the economic warfare they have declared against us.

I hope the 86th Congress will join President Eisenhower in responding effectively and vigorously to this challenge and, by putting the fiscal affairs of the United States in order, will deny this dangerous weapon to our enemies.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my address before the 14th American Assembly, the final report of that assembly, and the speech by Mr. Martin may be printed in the RECORD following these remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MONETARY POLITICS

(By PRESCOTT BUSH, U.S. Senator)

In dealing with monetary policy, I propose to discuss largely the practical problems involved rather than pure theory. In short, I shall speak about monetary politics.

We should, of course, agree that ideally in a matter of this great importance, partisan politics should be prohibited. But, unfortunately, the practice of partisan politics is so constant in Congress, and the striving for partisan advantage is so great, that one cannot ignore their effects upon monetary policy and the objectives it seeks to attain.

You will note that I have laid stress upon the qualifying adjective, "partisan," for it is obvious that monetary policy in the broad sense that I use the term involves great political questions which should be debated in the public arena.

But, if the American people are to form wise judgments on the issues which are presented, debate should be responsible and free of demagogery and should be confined, so far as possible, to the presentation of facts upon which intelligent decisions may be made.

Unfortunately, debate about monetary policy is rarely so conducted, partly because the subject is difficult of comprehension in its more technical aspects, and partly because it is easy to discuss it in terms which appeal to emotion and immediate selfish interest rather than to the intellect and objective judgment.

Some businessmen who feel the pinch of higher interest rates, for example, are far more readily moved by a demagogic speech on the Senate floor—and I have heard many of them—a speech denouncing the Federal Reserve Board, the administration, and the bankers, all pictured as linked together in a sinister conspiracy—than by a sober presentation of the need for monetary restraints as a curb upon inflation.

I have said that I will discuss monetary policy in the broad sense of the term, rather than in the narrow technical sense, and I am borrowing my definition from that given by Dr. Jacoby in his introduction to the symposium of papers prepared as background for consideration of the subject by this national session of the American Assembly.

Dr. Jacoby says that the term embraces "all measures undertaken by government to affect the expenditure or use of money by the public," including governmental actions "with respect to public expenditures, tax receipts, and the management of the public debt." These are the actions with which I am primarily concerned in this discussion, and they are the actions of the Federal Government of which I speak, although I am fully aware that actions of local and State governments, or their failures to act in some fields, are also of some importance. These are the actions which can have great effect upon our national economy, and which are the responsibilities of the Executive and the Congress, as distinguished from the responsibility of the Federal Reserve Board which implements monetary policy in the more technical sense.

Monetary policy, in the broad as well as the narrow sense, has been chosen as the subject of this session of the American Assembly because it is a major weapon with which government can combat inflation, which we all recognize as the most dangerous economic problem facing the people of the United States at the present time. Failure to solve it could mean the decline of America as a world power, and the destruction of our freedoms.

As background to my discussion, let us look some unpleasant facts in the face:

Fact No. 1: The Sino-Soviet bloc is at war with the United States and her allied free nations. It is an undeclared war, in which our enemies fight with propaganda, subversion, and the promise of generous economic assistance to the uncommitted, neutral nations, and threaten with hydrogen bombs, ballistic missiles, and other terrible weapons of modern arsenals.

Fact No. 2: There is danger that this so-called cold war may erupt into hot war, limited or global, as a consequence of the conduct by our enemies of military probings at the peripheries of our defenses.

Fact No. 3: The U.S. ability to retaliate, swiftly and terribly, in the event of attack has been and remains the major deterrent to total war.

Fact No. 4: The maintenance of our retaliatory capacity, and the uneasy peace it secures, is enormously expensive and becomes increasingly costly as the armaments race continues, accelerated by the development of ballistic missiles and other fantastic new weapons of destruction.

Fact No. 5: The mortal struggle between Communist imperialism and the free nations probably will continue for many years to come, almost certainly for another decade, possibly for another half century.

Fact No. 6: The enormous costs of defense have imposed severe strains upon the Federal budget, and these pressures are more likely to increase rather than to diminish.

Fact No. 7: There are great pressures in the Congress for increased Federal spending on domestic programs, pressures which show no present signs of abating in the years ahead and which, if not successfully resisted, would force the Federal expense budget well above the current $80 billion level. For example, the business recession from which the economy is now emerging stimulated demands for large-scale Federal spending programs, as well as massive tax cuts, although these would have had little immediate effect in creating employment. When Congress adjourned $5 billion had been added to the President's budget, much of it unrelated to effective antirecession measures or to defense, and an additional $5½ billion was involved in proposals which the President vetoed or which were blocked only with great difficulty after they had passed either the Senate or the House.

These are some of the major realities of life which we must face up to as we consider what should be the role of responsible political leadership in combating the inflationary trend which, since the beginning of World War II, has cut the value of the dollar by more than half.

We may take it for granted that the Federal Government will spend whatever is necessary for our defense against aggression. No administration would propose, nor would the American people tolerate, a weakening of our military forces to the point where surrender to communism would become probable.

What is the probable future magnitude of defense expenditures?

At the present time, the costs of present national security (military, atomic energy, and mutual security programs), plus past wars (interest and veterans' benefits), amount to $61 billion—77 percent of the current budget.

The budget for equipping and maintaining the Armed Forces of the United States represents aproximately two-thirds of that total, $40 billion. The present Secretary of Defense, Neil McElroy, has indicated that the military budget may increase by $30 billion in the next 10 years, an increase which by itself would raise the total Federal expense budget to $110 billion.

We dare not presume that such an increase is improbable, for many experts on military costs have testified before the Senate Committee on Armed Services concerning the necessity of increased defense expenditures to meet the threat of the Soviet Union's increasing capability in modern weapons, and to produce the weapons of the future.

Barring the unlikely event of a drastic change in the policies of the rulers of the Soviet Union and Communist China which would rule out aggression as their national policies, we may face a total Federal budget, defense and civilian, of the order of $110 million to $150 billion by 1968 if present trends continue.

How can we pay the bills?

Two permissible alternatives or more accurately a combination of them, appear. Both are politically unpalatable in the present climate of opinion. Most politicians would advocate them only with great reluctance. They are:

1. Retrench in expenditures on nonessential domestic spending programs, and hold the line against Federal participation in the costs of new domestic programs, no matter how desirable and appealing they may appear to be.

2. Raise by taxation increased revenues for defense and essential Federal services. This may mean maintenance of the present high Federal tax rates which can provide rising revenues as and if the economy expands. It may mean increases in present taxes, or the tapping of new sources of tax income, such as a broadly based production tax. Or it may mean all of these things unpleasant to contemplate.

A third alternative is to pay a part of our national bills by the unjust, hidden taxation imposed by inflation. This alternative is unacceptable, for inflation crucifies the weaker groups in our society. It is a cruel, deceptive, and dishonest form of taxation which bears most heavily on those least able to afford it. If allowed to continue, it will undermine our economy and the social fabric of our country.

Moreover, financing by inflation is self-defeating. A 5 percent increase in prices would add $4 billion to the current $80 billion Federal budget. We have already reached a point, in the military budget, at which a 5 percent annual increase in the cost of procurement of major items has taken place. In other words, according to expert testimony before the Senate Appropriations Committee, it costs 5 percent more in dollars each year just to maintain the status quo.

The difficulties encountered by the Treasury in managing the national debt, as investors shy away from U.S. bonds in anticipation of continued inflation, further emphasize the self-defeating nature of deficit financing.

Yet, before and since World War II, with exceptions in a very few years, we have paid our bills in part by the hidden tax of inflation.

Why do we find ourselves in such a predicament?

Bernard M. Baruch, in an excellent statement before the Senate Finance Committee last April, gave the answer in a nutshell:

"The inflation of our time," he said, "flows from the selfish struggle for special advantage among pressure groups. Each seeks tax cuts or price increases, or wage increases for itself while urging the others to make the sacrifices, and with little regard for the national interest."

As a people, we have been too much concerned with "business as usual" and "politics as usual" to permit monetary and fiscal policy to be effective in fighting inflation.

It is time to halt this trend, and a part of the job of halting it must be done in the political arena, and primarily in the Congress where the pressures from the selfish groups of which Mr. Baruch spoke focus most intently. So, I am convinced that it is essential that the administration and the next Congress come to grips with the problems of regaining control of the financial affairs of the United States, and of putting our fiscal house in order so as to be in readiness for the tests we face in the years ahead.

At a minimum, I believe the following steps should be taken promptly in the next Congress:

1. Establish a commission to review the entire Federal tax structure and the long-range fiscal problems of the United States. Its responsibilities would be to examine, study and report on:

(a) The capacity of the economy to provide the resources necessary for national security and essential governmental services; and

(b) Methods of raising required governmental revenues which will distribute the burdens of taxation most effectively and equitably, contribute to the maintenance of a currency with stable purchasing power, and foster the growth of the economy.

2. Amend the Employment Act of 1946 to make price stability an explicit goal of Federal economic policy.

3. Provide for the item veto of appropriation bills and of bills calling for expenditures by a borrowing pipeline to the Treasury.

4. Substitute a single appropriation bill for the individual bills which made it almost impossible for the average Member of Congress to determine, before the closing days of a session, what the total spending level will be.

5. Consider the advisability of consumer credit controls, particularly for installment credit, at least on a standby basis.

6. Examine the cause of wage increases in excess of productivity, and review existing laws to determine whether they permit too great concentrations of power, contrary to the public interest, in labor unions as well as in industry.

Toward the close of the last session of Congress, I introduced bills to accomplish all of the above objectives so that they might be carefully studied by the appropriate committee staffs and Federal agencies this fall and winter. I intend to reintroduce them promptly when the 86th Congress convenes.

Time will not permit me to submit my reasoning on all these proposals. However, I will elaborate, for a moment, on the first two points of this program, namely: The creation of a nonpartisan commission to review the long-range fiscal problems of the United States, including the Federal-tax structure, and amendment of the Employment Act to make reasonably stable prices an explicit goal of Federal economic policy.

A commission on the fiscal aspects of monetary policy appears necessary because in modern times the actions of the Federal Government in taxing and spending, and in deficit financing have such major effects upon the national economy.

A Federal spending program of $80 billion a year cannot fail to affect profoundly an economy with a gross national product of $440 billion. What the Executive and Congress do, or fail to do, in the fields of taxation and debt management may have more potent and deep-felt effects upon the national economy than the Federal Reserve Board's actions affecting the supply of money and credit. Indeed, the actions of these two branches of Government may often be in conflict with the actions of the Federal Reserve Board, as, for example, when resort is taken to deficit financing when the Board is seeking to impose monetary and credit restraints.

In the current fiscal year, a Federal deficit of $12 billion, which apparently must be financed largely through the commercial banking system and thus increase the potential supply of bank credit, makes infinitely more difficult the task of the Federal Reserve Board in seeking to control the dangerous inflation it foresees in the near future.

We have never had an objective, nonpartisan, thorough, and painstaking expert study to define the aims of Federal fiscal policy, and to recommend legislation to make possible the attainment of those goals.

The Aldrich Commission's inquiry into national monetary and credit conditions more than 50 years ago was the nearest approach to such a study, but it was largely confined to the banking system. And its recommendations, highly important as they were in that they led to the creation of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve System in 1913, did not deal with such questions as tax policy and the future revenue needs of the United States.

President Eisenhower recommended in January 1957, that a new study, similar to that of the Aldrich Commission, be undertaken by a National Monetary and Financial Commission, to be established by congressional action. I was a sponsor of the bill to implement the President's recommendations, but here again the proposed commission's inquiry would have been restricted to an examination of the adequacy of existing financial institutions and of monetary policy, in the narrow technical sense. The establishment of the President's Commission was blocked, as you know, by determined congressional opposition, much of it flowing, I fear, from partisan motives. I believe that such a study should be made, and I am pleased that the Committee on Economic Development has appointed a commission similar to that proposed by the President, although I regret it will not have the official status of a congressionally approved and Presidentially appointed body.

However, I believe further that an examination of Federal fiscal policy also is long overdue and perhaps is even more needed than an inquiry focusing primarily on the nature, purpose, and adequacy of lending institutions, private and public, and the functions of the Federal Reserve Board in regulating the supply of money and credit.

Consider the vast differences between our America before World War I and the America we know today after two World Wars have thrust upon us a position of world leadership and world responsibilities never before imposed upon a free nation.

From 1911 to 1915, the annual expenditures of the Government of the United States were $720 million, less than 1 percent of what they are today.

In that more peaceful and fortunate era, the cost of equipping and maintaining the Army and Navy was about $300 million, a sum which would be insufficient to buy a single modern aircraft carrier which, at today's prices, costs about $400 million.

There has been an enormous expansion of our population, from 99 million in 1914 to 170 million today, and in our productive capacity to meet the needs of our people. An $80 billion a year economy has grown to a $440 billion a year economy.

And while the population has not yet doubled and the economy has experienced a growth of a little more than five-fold, the Federal budget has been multiplied by more than 100.

Such vast changes surely emphasize the need of a study designed to lead to recommendations for the overhaul of a Federal tax system which has grown haphazardly, and for a new tax structure which will be adequate to provide the enormous revenues now needed for national defense and to provide essential Federal services for a modern, heavily industrialized America.

Such a study must be kept objective, and removed from the pressures of the partisan political arena. This is impossible of achievement in the Congress, much as one regrets to admit it. One need only recall the hearings conducted in 1957 by the Senate Committee on Finance during which the then Secretary of the Treasury, George Humphrey, underwent an unmerciful grilling aimed more at producing headlines and partisan political ammunition than at eliciting facts.

So, I believe that a nonpartisan commission, served by a staff of the ablest experts which can be assembled, should make a full-scale inquiry into this most important subject, and should submit its recommendations to the next Congress as promptly as possible.

The second item of my proposals which I will discuss in a little more detail is an amendment to the Employment Act of 1946 to include price stability among the goals of Federal economic policy, along with maximum employment and production.

At the time the Employment Act was drafted, uppermost in congressional minds, and in the minds of economists and others who testified before committees, was the fear of widespread unemployment following World War II. Memories of the great depression of the 1940's were fresh; politicians lived in terror that there would be a recurrence when millions of veterans were demobilized. As a consequence, the problem of maintaining relative stability in prices was scarcely mentioned in the hearings on the bill, and price stability is not once mentioned in the act. The entire emphasis is placed upon the maintenance of maximum employment.

Now, maximum employment is a highly desirable goal, and no one can fail to be conscious of the human tragedy which accompanies a lack of jobs in our industrial society. But I do not believe that there is an irreconcilable conflict between the maintenance of a high level of employment and a dollar of stable purchasing power. Indeed, the contrary is true. Stability of the currency, and of the level of prices, can help us avoid the "boom and bust" cycles we have experienced in the past and thus make possible the steady growth of America's productive capacity which must take place if jobs are to be created for an expanding population.

Thus, I am convinced that the goal of stable currency, price stability, is of such great importance to all Americans, and to the future of our society, that it should be made an explicit part of the act.

I hope that my bill raising this issue will be given a high place on the agenda of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, and that hearings will be conducted early in the 1st session of the 86th Congress.

Even more important than legislation, in my judgment, is a change in public attitudes about Federal fiscal policy, and greater understanding of the issues it involves.

The American people now appear reluctant to make the sacrifices required in a pay-as-you-go policy in providing for the national defense and for the essential Federal services required in a growing America. I believe this is due to a lack of understanding, and that they need to be told frankly about the choices they face between honest, open taxation and the dishonest, hidden taxation of inflation. And I believe that when the people know the facts they will reject inflation as a way of paying our national bills because it is so cruelly unfair to the people who can least afford to lose anything—those trapped by fixed incomes in times of rapidly rising prices, such as retired people dependent upon social security and other pension systems, widows, teachers, preachers, and civil servants.

The greatest task of responsible political leadership in the United States today is to arouse in the American people a sense of urgency—of the urgent need of sound fiscal policy in their National Government, and a comprehension of the tragic consequences of continued inflation to the future of the United States.

It is a difficult task. Here in the United States, the erosion of the value of our dollar in the past 20-odd years has occurred with a minimum of protest. One fighting the evils of bad fiscal practices and inflationary policies has felt like a voice crying in the wilderness.

Why is this?

It is because inflation, particularly of the creeping variety which we are now experiencing, is insidious in its effects, and bears most heavily upon the unorganized groups in our society, the poor and the defenseless. And inflation is actually welcomed by speculators and others, including some union leaders, who feel that they gain advantages from a constantly rising price level.

I was interested in reading recently in a New York newspaper a series of interviews reflecting typical attitudes toward inflation. Here are some of the comments:

A Cleveland industrialist: "We're going to have more inflation in this country because Americans like to feel more money in their pockets regardless of whether they can buy any more with it."

An insurance salesman: "It's really just conversation. In the long run, everybody's standard of living is rising. Purchasing power is going up, while the value of the dollar is going down."

An appliance store owner: "I think we can stand quite a bit more inflation. People in debt need inflation to help them get back to normal."

A Boston investor: "It (inflation) gives you more opportunity to make money."

In the face of public attitudes like this, Members of Congress, for the most part, are reluctant to come to grips with the problem. Sound policies to curb inflation involve political risks; they are unpalatable to large and powerful pressure groups; they conflict with pet spending projects.

So, we proceed in typical American fashion, waiting for the crisis, the depression, the panic or the war to create public awareness of the problems we have ourselves created. It usually takes suffering and tragedy on a rather broad scale to bring us to our senses.

Now, unless we bring ourselves up sharply and soon, we will again face the boom and bust, the depression, and the panic on a scale unprecedented in our history.

And because of our position of world leadership, not sought by us but thrust upon us by world events, the failure of the United States to come to its fiscal senses and avoid the awful consequences of the inflation which looms ahead would have repercussions of enormous significance.

To state it more plainly, the collapse of the credit of the United States could easily, and indeed almost surely, lead to the collapse of the free world, if the economy of the Communist nations does not collapse first, and one now sees only a few signs to encourage belief in the latter eventuality.

I do not think that students of history will feel that I exaggerate. History affords many lessons about the fate of governments and nations which have failed to maintain control of their fiscal affairs and have debased their currencies as a means of paying their bills.

The instability of governments in France, since World War I, is attributable in large part to an inflation which cut the value of the franc from 20 cents, in 1914, to about one-quarter of a cent at the present time.

The rise to power of Hitler in Germany, may be attributed in part to the terrible hardships inflicted upon the German people and the deep social upheavals created by the collapse of the mark resulting from floods of printing press money.

A more recent frightening example is the fall from power of the Chinese Nationalist Government and the Communist conquest of the Chinese mainland.

In a speech on the Senate floor this year, I quoted a striking passage from a book by Chang Kia-Ngau, former governor of the Bank of China, in which he traces the successive steps by which the government debased the currency until the value of the Chinese dollar, in relation to the United States dollar, fell to $8,683,000, Chinese, to $1, United States.

I would like to repeat that passage for you now. Mr. Chang wrote:

"Not possessing the wisdom and courage to undertake unpopular measures, the government could of course have reduced the scale of its spending. But it persisted in its refusal to take any effective step to trim expenditures, and, overemphasizing the importance of prestige and outward military power, it underwrote political and military expenditures regardless of their economic consequences. It was curiously blind to the fact that in the long run economic health is a prerequisite of political power. It sought an easy way out of its financial difficulties, only to court eventual disaster."

Are we in the United States courting eventual disaster by taking the easy way out of our own financial difficulties? I fear it may be so, unless we mend our ways in the very near future.

So, the stakes are very high. The importance of the issue cannot be exaggerated. And, to repeat, our first problem is to create greater understanding in the public generally, and especially in our thought leaders and opinion makers.

We must first help our people to realize that the world crisis, the so-called cold war, is not just a transitory thing, but that we must prepare for it to last at least another decade, and possibly for decades to come.

We must stop assuming that without reducing expenses our present high Federal taxes are subject to early reductions, that tinkering with tax "gimmicks" can relieve various special groups of taxpayers without imposing burdens on others; that we can reduce tax income anywhere without replacing it elsewhere. And ordinary prudence suggests that a continuation of present spending trends may well require new sources of tax income.

In this task, the American assembly can help enormously; indeed, has already helped by making monetary policy the subject of this current national session. I congratulate you for bringing monetary policy and inflation to public attention, and am confident that your efforts will be of enormous help in coming to grips with the dangerous problems we face in the coming years.

FINAL REPORT, 14TH AMERICAN ASSEMBLY—U.S. MONETARY POLICY

At the close of their discussions participants in the 14th American assembly, on U.S. monetary policy, reviewed as a group the following statement. Although there was general agreement on the final report it is not the practice of the American assembly for participants to affix their signatures and it should not be assumed that every participant subscribes to every recommendation included in this statement.

PREAMBLE

The outstanding conclusion of the 14th American assembly is that reasonable stability of the price level must be a primary goal of monetary policy. War and postwar inflation and the threat of future inflation put U.S. monetary policy in the spotlight of public attention.

Americans now judge the performance of their economy by more exacting standards than ever before. They know that monetary policies have become a main reliance in the effort to maintain a prosperous economy without inflation. Moreover, there is widespread appreciation that half a century has passed since a full-scale inquiry was made into the Nation's monetary and credit system. The time has come to consider whether current principles and concepts of monetary management are fully adequate to meet the need of our growing economy; and whether the machinery of money and credit needs redesign, or our methods of operating it need to be changed. We have examined four major aspects of monetary policies; objectives, tools and processes, performance, and proposals for reform.

I. BROAD ECONOMIC OBJECTIVES

There was general agreement that the United States seeks simultaneously three major economic objectives within an environment of maximum political and economic freedom for the individual: vigorous growth in the real output of the economy; avoidance of wide cyclical fluctuations in employment; reasonable stability in the average level of prices. Achievement of these goals will result in that maximum employment production and purchasing power called for by the Employment Act of 1946. It will enable the United States to maintain its national security and to fulfill the responsibilities of its position in the world. It will strengthen the economic basis of the human values which are the ultimate aims of our society—freedom, health, education, and opportunity for every person.

The degree of compatibility of our major economic goals was recognized as a vital issue in the consideration of monetary policy. Does a rising price level stimulate production more than would stable prices? Does emphasis on full employment and rapid economic growth require acceptance of creeping inflation? Do increasing governmental expenditures and public debt necessarily produce inflation? Does upward push on prices by powerful labor unions, big business, and subsidized agriculture cause the price level to rise even in the face of unemployment? We agreed that, under some conditions and in the short run, there may be a conflict between a stable price level and maximum employment and production. In the long run, a stable dollar fosters economic progress by encouraging saving and efficient investment.

All things considered, reasonable stability of the price level must be a primary economic goal. We are impressed with the necessity that business and union leaders attain greater understanding of their basic interest in a stable level of prices.

II. THE ROLE OF MONETARY POLICY

For the purposes of this discussion, monetary policy was defined as action by the Federal Reserve to regulate, through its operations in the credit market, the supply of currency and bank deposits available for expenditure by the public. Fiscal and debt management policies have an important and sometimes dominant influence on monetary policies. The actions of financial institutions other than commercial banks also have a bearing. None of these subjects was excluded.

Monetary policy can and should play an important role in attaining our economic goals, and particularly in maintaining the integrity of the dollar. It cannot carry this burden alone. The attainment of price stability as well as other objectives demands the combined efforts of monetary policy, fiscal policy, debt management, agricultural, trade, wage, and other appropriate economic action. While the power of monetary policy to influence the economy is limited and varies with time and circumstance, it has the advantages of being quickly available and having widespread effects.

Our economy needs an expanding money supply to facilitate its growth. For economic growth at a stable price level the average rate of expansion in the money supply (currency plus deposits) must be fairly close to the rate of growth in capacity to produce real output. Expansion in the money supply much slower than in productive capacity ultimately results in a brake on output. Expansion in the money supply much faster than the growth of capacity ultimately results in inflation. In recent decades the supply of money has grown more rapidly than the Nation's production, and prices have risen.

The short-run relationship between the supply of money and the level of output and prices is complicated by changes in the rate of use of money by the public through booms and recessions. In regulating the supply of money during business cycles, the monetary authorities should take such changes in velocity into account.

There was vigorous discussion whether better economic results would be achieved by a simple statutory rule to increase the money supply by a fixed percentage every year rather than by discretionary monetary control by the Federal Reserve. A discretionary approach to monetary management was regarded as essential. The preponderance of opinion was opposed to any mechanical rule.

III. TOOLS AND PROCESSES OF MONETARY POLICY

The primary tools available to the Federal Reserve System for regulation of the supply of money are three: Open market purchases and sales of Government securities, discount rates and operations, and changes in reserve requirements of member banks. It was agreed that these general credit controls, which affect mainly the aggregate amount of money and economic expectations and decisions, are desirable instruments of monetary policy, which should be complementary in their operation and mutually reinforcing.

There was no consensus as to whether the open market operations of the Federal Reserve should continue to be limited to short-term Government securities. Some favored transactions in all maturities in order to influence more promptly longer term rates of interest. Others expressed a fear that the Federal Reserve would again become involved in "pegging" the prices or distorting the market for Government securities. Most were inclined to agree that the Federal Reserve should avoid accepting any dogma on this subject and maintain a flexible attitude.

In addition to employing general credit instruments, the Federal Reserve System now regulates the loan margins on stock purchases and formerly also had the power to regulate consumer installment credit and home mortgage loans. Other Federal agencies make or insure loans to farmers, homeowners, small businesses, and other selected groups. Whether stimulative or restrictive, such selective controls have a differential impact on various sectors of the economy.

National financial policies involve the President, the Federal Reserve System, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the executives of other Federal agencies, as well as the Congress. Experience indicates the necessity for close coordination of monetary policy made by the Federal Reserve System, debt management by the Treasury, and Federal tax and expenditure policies jointly formulated by the Executive and Congress. There is also need for better coordination of policies of the Federal Reserve System and the Federal lending agencies, which operate under separate and sometimes contradictory congressional directives. Under the circumstances the monetary authorities may be faced with tasks of economic stabilization beyond their powers, and be unable to counteract the destabilizing influence of other policies in the formulation of which they have no voice.

Sentiment at the assembly favored the establishment of a National Economic Policy Council, under the chairmanship of the President, analogous to the National Security Council in the area of defense without abridging the independence of the Federal Reserve. Those who did not favor the establishment of such a body agreed on the necessity of better coordination of monetary and other economic policies through other means.

IV. MONETARY PERFORMANCE

Taking into account inherent limitations of monetary policy, the consensus was that since the Federal Reserve gained freedom in March 1951 to pursue a flexible course, its monetary policies have generally been satisfactory. Nevertheless, the upward creep of the price level since 1955 shows weakness in our economic policies. There was not full agreement on the extent to which these consequences were the result of deficient monetary action. There was consensus that the shared responsibility of the Federal Reserve and the Treasury would have been better fulfilled by major flotations of long-term Government securities in prosperous times. Some argued that the Federal Reserve eased credit too drastically in 1953; and that it intensified restraints too late during the boom terminating in 1957. There was consensus that a "cost-push" greatly increased the difficulties of maintaining prosperity without inflation.

V. MONETARY REFORM

The participants in the 14th assembly doubted that the monetary system of the United States requires radical revision. Yet some alterations in the structure and functioning of the system appeared desirable. Many proposals for change require further inquiry before their wisdom can be determined.

In addition to the various changes already recommended, several specific proposals were discussed:

1. There was some sentiment in favor of bringing all American commercial banks under the legal reserve requirements of the Federal Reserve Act. Most participants felt, however, that the additional leverage this change would give our monetary authorities was not compelling under current circumstances.

2. The issue was raised of extending Federal Reserve controls, such as minimum reserve requirements, to financial institutions other than commercial banks. Our decision was that no conclusion should be reached without more detailed consideration of this problem.

3. Under the present legal reserve system the location of a bank is the primary determinant of the percentage of its demand deposits that a member bank must keep in the Federal Reserve. We concluded that the present system, whose elements are a century old, is arbitrary and that the development of a satisfactory alternative requires further exploration.

4. We considered whether more extensive powers of selective credit control—particularly of consumer installment credit—should be placed in the hands of the Federal Reserve authorities, either on a continuous or emergency basis. A majority of the participants felt that the Federal Reserve should have such regulatory power in order to moderate destabilizing swings in the demand for durable goods. A considerable minority held that no stronger case could be made for such regulation than for regulation of other types of credit, such as business inventory loans, and that in any case the administrative problems of selective regulation are formidable.

5. There was agreement on the need for more accurate and current economic intelligence upon which to base monetary and other economic policy decisions.

IN CONCLUSION

The assembly discussed many issues of United States monetary policy and of the monetary and credit structure. In a field so complex and important, conclusions about structural reform can be reached only after searching inquiry. The specific proposals on this subject which emerged from the assembly are modest in number and scope. This does not reflect a spirit of complacency about our monetary system. To the contrary, it was the belief of the participants that more adequate achievement of our economic goals will require constant study and improvement of our monetary machinery. But it was recognized that success rests heavily on the policies pursued, whatever the monetary and credit structure may be.

Our American Economy

(Remarks by William McC. Martin, Jr., Chairman, Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, at luncheon meeting of the Executives' Club of Chicago, Grand Ballroom, Hotel Sherman, Chicago, Ill., December 12, 1958)

During the past year, we have had both recession and recovery and now, once again, fear of inflation. Despite the best efforts of the Federal Reserve System to explain its objectives and point of view to the general public, questions are again arising as to the basic purposes of monetary authorities. These queries are legitimate, but the answers have been given repeatedly. The Federal Reserve System is designed to regulate the supply of money in order to foster high levels of employment and stable prices. Stability is not an end in itself but a means by which this higher standard of living can be attained and without which a lower standard of living becomes inevitable.

From time to time the charge is made that the Federal Reserve is seeking a recession and would like to see a little unemployment. Certainly nothing could be further from the truth. The Federal Reserve's paramount purpose is to contribute, so far as it can, to sustained economic progress without the painful setbacks that mean waste of human and material resources.

There are many types of unemployment and many causes of unemployment. All of the factors that go into unemployment must be carefully considered and sympathetically studied. For residual unemployment, or temporary unemployment, we have unemployment compensation benefits. The major problem, however, is how to get people to work and give them jobs which will be permanent and profitable. How easy this would be if we could only achieve it by just spending more money. Unfortunately, experience has demonstrated you cannot spend yourself rich. Lasting prosperity only comes from hard work, producing goods and services which people need and want at prices they are willing and able to pay. At the moment we have unused capacities in industry and larger levels of unemployment than we would like to have. Why has this come about? Because of tight money? Not a bit. It has come about because inflation got ahead of us, as evidenced by the fact that at one time in 1957 we were losing more than $1 billion a month in prices in our gross national product without additional goods and services being produced for the consumer. The seeds of inflation were sprouting into the temporary overcapacity which we now have, and a decline was inevitable.

Let us not be misled by comments to the effect that the consumer price level is now stable. The process of inflation in this country started over 10 years ago during our wartime period, and with minor interruptions from time to time has persisted ever since.

The Federal Reserve System has leaned against the wind whenever it has been clear which way the wind was blowing. In 1957–58, when a decline was under way, we pursued an easy money policy, in order to give whatever assistance an enlarged availability of money could give to alleviating distress and laying the groundwork for recovery. This was largely achieved by the end of April of this year. Accordingly, Federal Reserve policy was modified, as it always should be, in adaptation to the change in economic conditions. At the present time, with increased demands for funds, with improved productivity, we are witnessing a strong economic comeback, and we are now beginning to see a gratifying decline in unemployment figures, although the total is still higher than any of us would like it to be.

Let us not succumb to the belief that these unemployed people will be assisted by flooding our economy with a stream of easy money. The better way to get these people back to work is to concentrate on fundamentals that permit the forces of the market to operate. Rising interest rates, when they reflect a response to improving business conditions, have never been a sign of weakness. When artificial forces prevent their rise it may well lead to knots which would complicate rather than assist our progress. If business conditions continue to improve it is normal to expect interest rates to rise; if business stays where it is interest rates will probably stay about where they are, and if business begins to decline interest rates will decline. But let us not be carried away into thinking that interest rates are such a dominant force in the economy that they possess some magic so that they alone can determine the level of employment, unemployment, and use of capacity at high or low levels. To me it is vital that we understand this crucial point.

A recent trip to several countries of the Far East gave me a welcomed opportunity to see ourselves as others see us. One distressing experience was to find among intelligent and perceptive men in those countries a growing distrust over the future of the American dollar. Whether or not it is justified—and certainly I think it is not—it is important to recognize that this feeling exists.

To the foreigner, much more than to Americans, the dollar is a symbol of this country's strength. A decline in the value of the dollar would suggest to one foreigner a decline in the faith and credit of the United States, signaling in his mind a decline not only in American economic strength but also in moral force.

Naturally I was interested in the basis of distrust. Two matters appeared uppermost. One was a conviction that, not necessarily at the moment but in a fairly short time and more markedly in the extending future, American goods are going to find themselves priced out of the market. Indeed, I was told that some countries to which we have made loans conditioned upon the purchase of American goods would, except for that restriction, already be turning elsewhere for their purchases.

You will recall that this same sort of talk was directed at Britain for about a year before the British got into trouble and had to devalue the pound sterling. I don't think it is going to happen here. I wouldn't talk about it if I did. But it is something for us to be concerned about.

The other thing cited to me as a reason for foreign distrust of America's ability or will to preserve the buying power of the dollar was the $12 billion deficit that has developed in the United States budget, plus possibilities that further deficits may follow.

It was amazing to me how closely our budgetary developments were being followed in such remote areas as Thailand and Hong Kong, and how many people there knew our precise budget figures better than most Americans.

Of course a simple fact of human nature has added intensity to their interest. They all know, many through personal experience of the stern lectures America has given foreign countries about their need to have the moral fiber to put their finances in order. And, as a widely traveled American businessman recently suggested to me, it is only natural that foreign countries should be wondering if we have the capacity to take the medicine we have so freely prescribed for others.

Now I don't think anyone abroad or at home questions the ability of the richest country in the world to "afford" whatever amounts are needed for the national defense of the United States and for social benefits the American public demands as well. Certainly I do not question it myself.

The question that I ran into was something else: since Americans clearly can afford these expenditures, why don't they pay for them? That is, why don't they pay in taxes or reduce other programs instead of giving I.o.u.'s or simply printing more paper dollars? That also is something to think about.

Now let's discuss this matter of the budget. No reasonable man believes that budgets can always be balanced. Likewise, no sensible person believes that an unbalanced budget is a desirable way of life. This, of course, has moral connotations as well as economic.

We are a rich country. There is no reason to be ashamed of it and we do not need to apologize about it. We must recognize that some people in our society are not as rich or well off as we would like them to be. As a Nation, however, we can afford to expend whatever is required for national defense and foreign aid. Naturally we don't want waste in these projects. Whatever is required we can afford to spend, but we cannot afford to spend it if we are unable to find the means of paying for these expenditures in any other way than by printing money. Regardless of what facile justification or technical obscurantism is used to persuade us that we can have our cake and eat it too, we can have no hesitation in stating flatly, "It just isn't true."

We must face up to the reality of either raising taxes or revising our tax structure to produce more revenue or reducing the priorities of some other programs until we can get things in better balance.

Whatever the justifications for deficit financing in time of recession—and at best I sometimes think there is a good bit of wishful thinking involved—there can be no question that when business is improving and moving actively toward higher levels, a budget deficit becomes fuel on the fire of inflation. In effect, it pumps air into the business structure as if it were a balloon and eventually leads to more serious recession when the balloon pops than would have occurred if it had not been indulged in. Again let me say, this is not pleasant, but with due respect to these people who talk about modern times and outmoded classical theories what I am saying is based on time-honored and time-tested principles that are as valid and inescapable today as they have been down through the ages.

Likewise, it is time we stopped shilly-shallying around about this matter of interest rates and faced up to realities. We have had far too much talk about so-called "tight" money and "soft" money without adequate understanding of the role of interest rates in our economy. We already have too many preferential interest rates established by statute as though it were possible to ignore completely the workings of the marketplace. Interest rates are the prices charged for credit. They are a wage to the saver as well as a cost to the borrower. In a private enterprise economy they are established by the interplay of market forces. They perform the important function of influencing the volume of credit that flows into specific channels of enterprise. They are essential to pricing the assets on which holders expect to receive income over a succession of years. It is through flexible rate movements that the incentives and disincentives are provided for balancing out supply and demand factors in our economy.

The most striking illustration of their usefulness and effectiveness in recent years occurred nearly 8 years ago when the decision was made to unpeg our Government securities market. This restored to that important market some of the influence which had been denied it by Government policy for a period of years during which regulation of the money supply gradually became almost ineffective.

Once this decision was taken, the credit mechanism began to function as a governor on the flywheel of our economy and the process of stabilization became a useful part of the adjustments necessary in a healthy economy. We are compelled to recognize, whether we like it or not, that you can alter the nature of demand, and change the composition of supply, but you can no more ignore the law of supply and demand than you can ignore the law of gravity.

Some time ago a top industrialist who had complained bitterly about rising interest rates told me how he now recognized that some adjustments were probably desirable, but he said, "Don't let interest rates go above 3 percent." Although there are technical differences between the commodity he is manufacturing and this manmade device of money, I asked him how he would like it if the Government laid down a decree that the product he was manufacturing, regardless of cost and price factors, could not be sold to the public above a fixed price. The only answer I received to this suggestion was, "That's different."

Now I want to go one step further and talk about the most difficult aspect of all of our problems. This is the subject of confidence. It is the subject we frequently avoid because we are afraid of upsetting confidence by discussing it. All of us know of cases of irresponsible and hysterical individuals who contribute to tearing down confidence. We are more likely to recognize them than we are the equally irresponsible individuals who overpaint, oversell, overemphasize the optimistic side of things in the name of inspiring confidence. In any event, confidence is perhaps the fundamental factor in money and currency. Those of us who are charged with responsibility for our monetary affairs recognize this clearly. Money must not only be a medium of exchange and a standard of value, but it must be something in which people have basic confidence.

Because of the interrelationships of interest rates and budgets and the present position of the United States in international trade, it is a serious matter when an important segment of world opinion has begun to question the fiscal and monetary integrity exemplified by our American dollar. It is not something we can lightly pass over in hope it will go away. The battle against inflation is at a crucial point, and a setback in the United States would be a serious setback for the entire free world. I would like to be able to stand here and say flatly, "There will be no inflation." I cannot do so. For any one man, that would only be idle talk. What we need now is not talk nor long debate nor lengthy analysis, but resolute actions—continuing overtime—which will demonstrate to doubters the good sense and character of the American people.

A pressing need for such action confronts us as we approach 1959. The fear of inflation is earnest, and it is having a damaging impact already. Today, when the level of savings in our country has been steadily rising, we could, in my opinion, be selling long-term Government bonds at interest rates substantially lower than current levels if the holders of these savings were convinced that there will be no inflation, convinced that we will conduct our affairs on a basis which will make inflation improbable.

I am well aware of the fact that some of these remarks may be interpreted pessimistically. They are not so intended. We have already made a good start on the road to improving this situation. However, the progress we have already made gives no ground for complacency. Improvements in business efficiency effected during the sharp but short recession are helping in the current recovery movement that is continuing on a rather broad basis. And it is not news to any of you that the Federal budget is getting determined attention in more than one quarter. Let us press forward on these sound lines and no one can doubt our success.

The recent trip to which I referred impressed on me as never before that the eyes of the world are on us. Responsible officials in many countries are watching us closely to see whether we intend to practice what for many years we have preached to them. The future is not entirely within our control but we do have it within our power to maintain the integrity of the American dollar if we have the will to do it. Until or unless the people, through the Congress, change the Federal Reserve Act I can pledge to all of you that the Federal Reserve System will do everything in its power to safeguard our currency.

THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET—THE INSIDE-OUT STRAITJACKET

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article, entitled "The Inside-Out Straitjacket," published in the Wall Street Journal of January 22, 1959, dealing with the President's new budget.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE INSIDE-OUT STRAITJACKET

The President's new budget, in one view, rests on "the assumption that there is some magic figure into which the budget should be forced, like putting a man in a straitjacket."

The words are LYNDON JOHNSON'S, the so-called moderate Senate majority leader, but they reflect the attitude of many liberals in and out of Congress. For instance, the Democratic Advisory Council, which includes former President Truman and Adlai Stevenson and other important Democrats, declares that the budget puts "pocketbook before people" and proceeds to contend that "what is bad for people is also bad for pocketbooks, both private and public."

Now what all these people are really saying is that a budget should not be a budget at all. For a budget is meaningless if it is not in fact a straitjacket of sorts. A real budget, whether it is yours or ours or the Government's, is a financial discipline based on the ancient and certain knowledge that people and governments that consistently live beyond their means are headed for real trouble.

Rejecting this accumulated knowledge, the statists of today who unjustifiably call themselves liberals propound a reverse theory. In one version it goes like this: Closing the "deficit of needs" is far more important than closing any fiscal deficit; indeed, they speak of balanced budgets with ill-concealed contempt. Their idea is to decree the things they think Government should do and ignore the problem of paying for those things.

And they have been applying their theory with a vengeance—abetted, unhappily, at times by the Republican administration. During the fiscal years 1932 through 1959—28 years—the Federal budget has been in the red 23 years. To be sure, there was World War II, in which the deficits were extremely heavy, but that war comprised only 5 of those 23 years of red ink.

As a result of these almost uninterrupted deficits the public debt has risen from less than $20 billion in 1932 to an estimated $285 billion at the end of the current 1959 fiscal period. And the debt is rapidly soaring out of control. President Eisenhower felt impelled to request, in his budget message, still another increase in the permanent debt ceiling—that most impermanent of ceilings.

Since the deficits have been largely financed, in effect, by the printing presses, in them lies the chief explanation of the inflation which has destroyed more than half the value of the dollar in that same generation. And in their continuation lies the menace of the future inflation which could destroy all value. This menace the inflationists even now blandly propose to study; they intend to search assiduously for its causes almost everywhere except in the Federal Government.

But inflation, monstrous though its mien can be, is not the only outcome of the theory that a budget should not be a budget. The rejection of financial discipline must also mean Government by chaos.

This can be seen even in expenditures for defense, which hardly anyone dares say might be cut. If the military were permitted to have all they want, the existing waste and duplication would be multiplied a hundredfold. Not only that; without discipline, innovation and development would be retarded, for a certain amount of stringency is a goad to invention. Without financial discipline the defense effort would be impaired and finally wrecked.

For the Government as a whole, one result of the denial of discipline is to destroy selectivity. The question becomes not whether this program is better than that; instead, any program anybody thinks of is embraced. Thus, Government becomes a leviathan, speeding the inflation and in the whole process suppressing the individual.

So what kind of nonsense is this about putting the pocketbook before people? The inflationists, the spoiled children who resent discipline, are the ones who are antipeople. For what they propose would ruin the people.

Fortunately there are still some who reject the inside-out budgeting theory and realize that a budget must be a firm control. It would also be well if reason could put a straitjacket on folly.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL TOMORROW

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr CANNON in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

FAILURE OF THE PRESENT NATIONAL FARM PROGRAM

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, the failure of the present national farm program is apparent on every hand.

It is reflected in every compilation of agricultural statistics.

It is reflected in the accelerated shift of population from farm to city.

It is reflected in last year's election results.

Let us look at the facts:

Between 1952 and 1957, realized net farm income in this country declined from $14.4 to $10.8 billion despite substantially increased Government payments. Even if the increases reported last year boost the 1958 figure to as high as $13 billion, the total still will be $1.4 billion under the rate which prevailed at the beginning of the present administration.

And, when the degree of inflation which has occurred since 1952 is taken into account, it is obvious that realized net income would have to be increased considerably above the $14.4 billion sum merely to put farmers back where they were in terms of purchasing power 6 years ago. Such an eventuality is hardly likely under the present program, however, inasmuch as the Agricultural Marketing Service itself predicts a reduction of from 5 to 10 percent in realized net income this year.

During the same 1952–57 period, farm production expenses increased from $22.6 to $23.5 billion yearly and it is estimated that the final total for 1958 will reach an all-time high of $24.5 billion or more. The spread between farm and retail prices has widened by $75 for each thousand dollars spent for farm produce and the farmer's share of the market-basket dollar has dropped from 47 to 39 cents.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics Index for last November showed prices received by farmers at that time were 7 percent below those realized in 1947–49, while prices paid by farmers were up 23 percent for the corresponding period.

In view of the situation evidenced by those figures, Mr. President, it is not surprising the Department of Commerce reports that between 1950 and 1957, 2,349,000 persons migrated from the farms of the Nation to compete for increasingly scarce jobs in urban areas. According to latest reports, that trend is continuing.

Neither is it difficult to understand, Mr. President, why our agricultural economy is gripped by a worsening depression which is threatening extinction for the small, family type farmer who does not have a supplemental income; why unmanageable surpluses of farm commodities are being generated; why artificially high consumer prices are being stimulated; and why the United States is steadily losing the last of its world markets.

An openminded appraisal of all the facts affords no other conclusion, Mr. President, but that we have reached the point where it is essential to the future welfare not only of the farmer but also of the taxpaying consumer that an entirely new approach to the solution of the Nation's farm problems be found.

That that conclusion is shared by the farmer is evidenced by the results of the recent corn referendum.

That that conclusion is shared by the rank and file of the Nation's electorate is evidenced by the outcome of last November's election.

The farmers and the consumers of the United States both have repudiated the abortive policies of Secretary of Agriculture Ezra T. Benson at the polls, and they have given this 86th Congress a mandate to write a bold, new law which will give the farmers the protection they have been denied for the past 6 years without placing an intolerable burden on the taxpayers of the country.

The farmer wants to be returned to a free enterprise economy with protection equivalent to that enjoyed by labor through the minimum wage and collective bargaining and by industry through the tariff.

The taxpayer wants a stabilized farm program which will give his pocketbook a break both in the marketplace and at tax time.

Our experience with the programs of the past stands as conclusive proof that those ends cannot be achieved through existing concepts.

We have learned that a program which seeks to solve farm problems by reducing acreage and prices results only in creating a vicious cycle of surpluses and depression.

Therefore, Mr. President, it is time that we profited by our mistakes and took advantage of the lessons we have learned to effect a realistic and permanent solution to our agricultural problems.

The only way we can do that is to discard completely the present patchwork of discredited farm laws and to start all over again and write an entirely new program which will get away from the compounded failures and stereotyped concepts of the past.

My long and serious study of this subject has convinced me, Mr. President, that such a program must have three fundamental objectives: First to let the farmer farm; second, to guarantee the farmer his proportionate share of the national purchasing power; and, third, to place American agricultural commodities back on the world markets at competitive prices.

I am further convinced that those objectives can never be achieved until the Federal Government is removed from the business of buying, storing, and selling agricultural commodities; until the responsibility for marketing the produce of our farms is returned to the farmer and private enterprise, where it belongs; until the farmer is freed to plant and sell as he pleases; and until the role of the Federal Government in agriculture is limited to paying the farmer the difference between the prices he receives for commodities sold for domestic consumption and 100 percent of parity.

This program is based upon the assumption that the standard of living of the United States is greater than that of any other country on the face of the earth. It is based upon the assumption that the people of the United States do not want the farmers of America who produce farm commodities for export to other markets to compete on the basis of the standard of living in countries like India, Brazil, Pakistan, Turkey, and others, where living standards are infinitely lower than ours.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TALMADGE. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It is the opinion of the junior Senator from South Dakota that the distinguished Senator from Georgia is making one of the most forthright statements we have heard on the floor of the Senate, certainly in this session, and for many, many days back into the last session.

Personally I happen to believe that the Senator is correct in saying that the producer of food in this country is entitled to a fair price, full parity, for what he produces and sells for domestic consumption, because we maintain a high standard of living.

I also feel that the Senator from Georgia has said something that the country needs to hear, when he says that the farmer should be given control again over what he plants, and the management of his own farm, and that he should be permitted to produce what he desires, provided that that which is sold over and above the requirements for domestic consumption should go to the world market, and there he should recognize that it will be sold competitively with the prices in the world market. A practical plan to carry these goals into operation is one to which our efforts should be addressed. I commend the Senator from Georgia for his forthright and intelligent statement.

Mr. TALMADGE. I am deeply grateful to my warm friend from South Dakota, who in part represents one of the great agricultural States of the Union. No Member of the Senate is more zealous than is the distinguished Senator from South Dakota in seeking to protect the interests of his constituents and the farmers generally throughout the United States.

I am deeply grateful for the interest which the able Senator has shown in this subject, and I hope that before this Congress adjourns both sides of the aisle will join hands in passing some effective program which will restore the purchasing power of the farmers of this Nation to the level of the past.

I do not believe that the people of America want the farmers of the country to live in a substandard manner. I feel that the people of America want the farmers of this great Nation to own automobiles. I feel that the people of our country want the farmers to be able to send their children to college. I feel that the people of America, fairminded as they are, want the farmers of our Nation to enjoy the same standard of living that is enjoyed by nonfarmers.

As the distinguished Senator from South Dakota knows so well, at the present time the farmers of our country have a standard of living less than half that enjoyed by the nonfarmers. Yet they are engaged in the most important activity in our entire economic system. If every nonfarmer in the United States were to go on strike today, somehow, though with great difficulty, the rest of our citizens could continue to survive. But if the farmers of America were to go on strike it would be only a few days before there would be starvation in the District of Columbia, the cities of New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco, and all the other great urban centers of the country.

The farmers of America produce all the food we eat. They produce the fiber from which our clothing is made. They grow the timber which we use to build our homes, churches, and other public buildings. Yet they have been the least rewarded segment in our entire country. It is time for us, Democrats and Republicans alike, to stand up in this, the 86th Congress, and correct this gross inequity.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TALMADGE. I am delighted to yield to my distinguished friend from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. I compliment the distinguished Senator from Georgia upon the excellent address he is making in the Senate today. It does my heart good to see someone stand up and speak on behalf of our farmers.

I believe the record shows that the income per capita among our farming population is less than one-half what it is among the nonfarming population. It is my opinion that our farmers work as hard, and contribute as much to our civilization as does any other segment of our population.

I wonder if the Senator can ascribe any reason for anyone feeling that our farmers should not receive their proportionate share of the income of the Nation.

Mr. TALMADGE. I certainly cannot. On the contrary, as the Senator so well knows, the farmers have no 40-hour week. They have no minimum wage law. They receive no overtime. They receive no time-and-a-half or double-time pay. Instead of a 40-hour week, the farmers of our Nation work, on the average, from 80 to 100 hours a week. Yet, as the Senator has so ably pointed out, they earn less than half what nonfarmers earn.

Mr. THURMOND. Those who really built this Nation, who carved it out of the forest, and were the first to establish a civilization on this continent, were farmers. Have not farmers really been the backbone of the economy of the Nation throughout the years, and should they not be given every consideration possible when we consider the entire economy of the Nation?

Mr. TALMADGE. The Senator is entirely correct. Not only have they been the backbone of our own great Nation, but also, as the Senator well knows from the study of history, those who till the soil have been the backbone of every great nation, from the Roman Empire up to the present time. When we destroy our farm economy and drive our farmers and their families to the cities, where there is a shortage of jobs, to live on a Government dole, we are destroying our country.

Mr. THURMOND. Is it not true that the great leaders of our Government and our Nation in the past were either born on farms, worked on farms, or were familiar with farm problems; and because of their out of doors living, their free and independent thought, they have been able to contribute more to the civilization of our country than they would otherwise have been able to contribute?

Mr. TALMADGE. I certainly agree with the Senator.

I thank my friend, the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, who is always diligent in his efforts to aid the farmers, not only of his own State but also of the entire Nation, for his valuable contribution and his great interest in solving the farm problem.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TALMADGE. I am delighted to yield to my friend, the distinguished senior Senator from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I did not hear all the Senator's speech, but I heard the part wherein he was discussing the relative values and costs of farm labor.

Three of four years ago I participated in a study of the average number of hours worked by the farmer and his net return. The average net return was approximately 67 cents an hour, which caused me to remark at one time that if the farmer were not working for himself, he would have to go to jail for violating the minimum wage law.

Mr. TALMADGE. The Senator could not be more correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The figure may be even lower today.

Mr. TALMADGE. I should not be surprised. I know that the average farm income today throughout the Nation is less than half that earned by nonfarmers. As I earlier have pointed out, the farmers have no wage-and-hour law. They have no 40-hour week. They usually work from daylight to dark. As the Senator well knows, in many instances, such as dairy farming, the work goes on 7 days a week with no holidays whatever.

The Senator comes from a great dairying State and I myself have been engaged in the dairy business for a number of years. When I was a boy I once heard a remark made by a citizen of Telfair County, where I was born and raised, which, in a few words, described the situation of the dairymen about as aptly as I have ever heard it expressed.

He said that a dairyman needs no Sunday clothes and mighty few old ones. [Laughter.] I believe that describes the dairy farmers in our country today.

Those factors, Mr. President, were the bases of the Talmadge farm plan which I introduced during the 2d session of the 85th Congress. And the overwhelming favorable response which I have received from throughout the Nation leads me to believe that such an approach has widespread appeal not only among the farmers but also among the general public.

It is in that belief, Mr. President, that I am today reintroducing my bill and am urging its early and favorable consideration by Congress.

My plan is exceedingly simple. It proposes to free the Nation's economy of the expensive and ineffectual farm laws which have caused the present disastrous agricultural depression and to restore American agriculture to a free-enterprise basis, bolstered by a system of compensatory payments limited to domestically consumed basic commodities.

My bill entitled "Agricultural Income Equalization Act of 1959" would achieve those ends through inaugurating an easily understood, five-point program. Its provisions are as follows:

First. Eliminate all acreage controls and Government loans.

Second. Assign each farmer growing basic commodities a domestic production quota to be expressed in terms of unit measurements—pounds, bushels, bales, and so forth—which would be the same percentage of the national consumption of basic commodities that the farmer's average annual production for the preceding 5 years bears to the total national average production for the same period.

Third. Guarantee and pay to each farmer a sales price support of the difference between the price he receives for his domestic production quota and 100 percent of parity;

Fourth. Require each farmer to submit a bill of sale with his application for sales price-support payments; and Fifth. Impose a maximum of $25,000 on the amount of sales price support which any individual farmer could receive.

Mr. President, this part of the bill, limiting price supports the Government could pay any one farmer to $25,000, is intended to eliminate the tremendous raids by large corporation-type farmers on the Federal Treasury which have been experienced under existing laws. One such farmer in Mississippi, received over a million dollars in Government price supports in one year. Another one, I believe in Kansas, received in excess of $600,000 of the taxpayers' money in one 12-month period.

Price supports for farm commodities are not needed by the wealthy corporation-type farmers who deal in hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars. Price supports for farm operations are needed by the small family-type farmer who lives on his land and tills it with his own hands and who raises his children to become useful and outstanding citizens. That is the kind of farming we ought to talk about and attempt to further when we are providing price supports for the farmers of our land.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TALMADGE. I am delighted to yield to my good friend from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I wish to congratulate the Senator from Georgia on working out one of the most constructive programs I have heard advanced. It seems to me that he has evolved the basis of a workable program to save the American farmer. Unless something along the line suggested by the Senator from Georgia is done, millions of small farmers, who, as the Senator has said, are the backbone of America, will be forced out of farming.

Mr. TALMADGE. I thank my friend from Louisiana, who is always interested in the plight of those who work, both farmers and nonfarmers. The bill proposes to give to those who work on the farms the same protection that is given to organized labor under minimum wage laws, and to those who work on jobs in interstate commerce. It proposes to give to those who farm the same type of protection that our industries enjoy by way of subsidies and protective tariffs.

I may say to the Senator from Louisiana that I am enough of an old-fashioned Jeffersonian Democrat to believe that all of us ought to be free, and that Government should leave us alone. That would suit me fine. If the Government would do that, farmers could adequately take care of themselves. However, the farmers must not be the one group which is left without any protection whatever. The farmers cannot be the only group placed in the position of having to "root, hog, or die," while other segments of the population are supported by wage and hour laws, collective bargaining, subsidies, and protective tariffs.

I am enough of a realist to understand—and I know the Senator from Louisiana also understands—that Congress will not repeal the wage and hour laws, that Congress will not withdraw from labor the benefits of collective bargaining, that Congress will not repeal the various subsidies granted to industry, and that Congress will not repeal protective tariffs which protect certain segments of our industry. And I know of no one who would advocate that Congress do so. Therefore, the only course by which we can place our farm population on a coequal status with our nonfarm population, is to enact a law to protect those who till the soil and provide the food and fiber which we utilize in our country.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TALMADGE. I am delighted to yield further to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. The Senator well knows that there are a great many other laws, which he has not mentioned, which assist labor and subsidize industry. One of the laws which benefit labor is the Bacon-Davis Act.

Mr. TALMADGE. Yes.

Mr. LONG. The average laboring man would rather come under the provisions of the Bacon-Davis Act than under any minimum wage act, because under the Bacon-Davis Act the minimum wage is frequently about three times higher than under the minimum wage act.

Mr. TALMADGE. The Senator is entirely correct. There are a great many such laws. I merely mentioned one or two. The Senator from Louisiana is entirely correct about it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TALMADGE. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator no doubt has considered the enormous subsidies given to American industry in connection with the $4 or $5 billion of foreign aid which we appropriate every year.

We send to other countries the manufactured articles and call it military aid. If we simply purchased the weapons and shipped them, they would serve the same purpose. As a matter of fact, it might be more satisfactory if we merely sent the money to the other countries and let them decide how they wanted to spend it for weapons, because they could then purchase satisfactorily weapons at half the price, although it is true that American industry would lose the benefit of the sales.

Mr. TALMADGE. The Senator is most certainly correct. Each year we are shipping to countries overseas, for soft currencies which we are lending back to the nations involved, with little or no hope of any repayment, about a billion and a half dollars in agricultural surpluses. That is being charged to the farmers of America, but the Senator well knows it is a foreign aid program.

Many other things of that kind are saddled on the backs of the American farmers, wholly without reason. Certainly if it had been left to the farmers of the country to decide, we would not have given Tito a billion and a half dollars worth of goods, commodities, and arms at the expense of the taxpayers, and especially the farmers, of the Nation. I do not believe we would be shipping goods to Communist Poland. But that is being done and the cost is being charged to the farm program.

Mr. LONG. As I understand, the Senator from Georgia is urging that we treat the American farmer as fairly as we treat the average American workingman or average American businessman, and on the same basis.

Mr. TALMADGE. The Senator's observation is correct. He has put his finger on what I am trying to accomplish through my bill.

The cost of the proposed legislation would depend upon the resulting free market price levels of the basic commodities, but in any event would be considerably less than that of the present program. It likely would vary between $1.5 and $2.5 billion, and the agricultural experts of the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress estimate its savings to the taxpayers at between $2 and $3 billion a year.

Furthermore, whatever the cost, it would assure that every farm program dollar went into the pockets of the American farmers which decidedly is not the case at the present time.

If my memory serves me correctly, we are at present spending more than a million dollars a day of the taxpayer's money to store surplus farm commodities.

For the benefit of the new Members of the Senate, Mr. President, I wish to reiterate the advantages of the Talmadge farm plan, which I outlined before the Senate last year.

It would let the farmer plant what he wants and sell it as he pleases.

It would take the Federal Government out of the business of buying, storing, and selling farm commodities, and would place the responsibility for marketing with the farmer and private enterprise where it belongs.

It would guarantee the farmer his proportionate share of the national purchasing power and restore agriculture to a free enterprise, competitive base.

It would end the accumulation of the national farm surplus which has glutted the Nation's markets and stagnated its economy.

It would make the national farm program an estimable budget item which would remain relatively stable over the years.

It would mean lower prices to both the consumer and industry and would put American agricultural products, both raw and processed, back on the world markets at competitive prices.

One of the most ironic features of the present farm program is that the great textile industry, which employs hundreds of thousands of persons throughout the length and breadth of the United States, is now on the point of being forced out of business, not only because of competition from foreign countries, where the wage level is roughly one-tenth of what it is in the United States, but also because the cotton produced in Georgia, Texas, California, and any of the other great cotton-producing States, is sold for from $35 or $40 a bale cheaper in India, Burma, Pakistan, and Japan than the price which the textile manufacturer in this country will pay for it.

When we penalize our own American industry to the extent of $35 or $40 a bale in purchasing raw cotton, something is fundamentally wrong with such a system, a system which permits cotton to be sold for less overseas to foreign competitors than it costs American citizens who pay taxes in the United States to produce it.

Mr. President, the bill would give the farmer protection equivalent to labor's minimum wage and industry's tariff.

It would mark a new and fresh start which would get away from the stereotyped concepts and failures of the past.

Mr. President, I do not present my plan as any complete solution to the Nation's farm problems. But I do feel quite strongly that the expressions of approval and support which it has attracted since first offered indicates that it affords a basis upon which agreement on a new national farm program can be reached.

I believe with all my heart that Congress owes it to the farmers of the United States to give them a workable and productive farm program. I pledge my wholehearted effort and unstinted cooperation to all those who feel as I do in seeking to write and enact such a program.

Mr. President, the bill is introduced in behalf of myself and the distinguished senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON]. I ask that it be read twice and appropriately referred; and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 306) to provide a new farm program for basic agricultural commodities under which excessive and burdensome Federal controls on agriculture will be eliminated, and under which American agriculture will be restored to a free enterprise basis, introduced by Mr. TALMADGE (for himself and Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina), was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Agricultural Income Equalization Act of 1959".

DECLARATION OF POLICY AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to afford to the farmers of the United States legislative protection and assistance equivalent to that received by other segments of the national economy. It is recognized that previous farm legislation has failed to achieve that end, and that a policy of reduced acreage and reduced prices leads only to reducing farm income to a disastrous level. Therefore, it is the purpose of Congress, in enacting the program provided for in this Act, to free the Nation's economy of the burdens of abortive farm laws and to restore American agriculture to a free enterprise basis bolstered by a system of compensatory payments. The objectives of Congress in so doing are (1) to let the farmer farm, (2) guarantee the farmer his proportionate share of the national income, and (3) place American agricultural commodities back on the world market at competitive prices.

DOMESTIC CONSUMPTION QUOTA

SEC. 3. The Secretary shall proclaim each year a domestic consumption quota for each basic agricultural commodity. Such quota shall be proclaimed in terms of pounds, in the case of tobacco, rice, and peanuts; bushels, in the case of corn and wheat; and bales, in the case of cotton. The domestic consumption quota for any year for any such commodity shall be the amount of such commodity consumed domestically during the immediate preceding year. Proclamations made by the Secretary pursuant to this section shall be made at such times as he deems appropriate.

ASSIGNMENT AND DETERMINATION OF FARM DOMESTIC PRODUCTION QUOTAS

SEC. 4. (a) The Secretary shall assign each year, after the effective date of this Act, to every eligible farm on which is produced a basic agricultural commodity a domestic production quota for such commodity. The domestic production quota for any such farm with respect to any such commodity shall be determined by the Secretary in terms of pounds, in the case of tobacco, rice, and peanuts; bushels, in the case of corn and wheat; and bales, in the case of cotton.

(b) Any farm in order to be eligible to receive a domestic production quota for any basic agricultural commodity pursuant to this section must have received an acreage allotment under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, for such commodity during the twelve calendar months prior to the enactment of this Act.

(c) The domestic production quota for any farm in any year for any basic agricultural commodity shall be an amount of such commodity which bears the same ratio to the domestic consumption quota (less any portion withheld pursuant to subsection (d)) for such commodity for such year (as proclaimed by the Secretary) as the average production from the acreage allotment for such farm for the five-year period 1954 to 1959, inclusive, bears to the average annual production from the national acreage allotment (in the case of tobacco, from the total of all State acreage allotments) for such commodity for such period.

(d) The Secretary shall withhold from the domestic consumption quota, proclaimed pursuant to section 3, in any year for any basic agricultural commodity an amount of such quota not to exceed 2 per centum for use in making domestic consumption quotas available to new farms. From any such amount withheld, the Secretary shall make available farm domestic production quotas to farms ineligible for quotas under subsection (b) of this section. The Secretary shall prescribe requirements of eligibility for new farms and shall assign farm domestic production quotas on as equitable a basis as possible.

COMPENSATORY PAYMENTS

SEC. 5. (a) Any producer whose farm has been assigned a domestic production quota pursuant to section 4 for any basic agricultural commodity shall receive compensatory payments for such quota as provided in this section.

(b) The Secretary shall pay to any such producer, with respect to any such commodity produced on his farm within such quota, the amount, if any, by which the parity price for such commodity (at the time such commodity is sold by him) exceeds the market price for such commodity (at the time such commodity is sold by him).

(c) No producer shall be paid a compensatory payment except upon presentation by him of a receipt of sale of the commodity produced by him. He may receive compensatory payment upon any portion of his quota for which a receipt of sale is submitted. In no event shall any producer be paid an amount in excess of $25,000 in compensatory payments for any one year.

(d) Compensatory payments shall be made in such manner and at such time as the Secretary shall prescribe, and receipts of sale required under this section shall be in such form and contain such information as he shall prescribe.

(e) No compensatory payment shall be made to any producer for any basic agricultural commodity sold by him more than six months after the end of the marketing year (as defined by the Secretary) for such commodity.

APPLICABILITY

SEC. 6. The provisions of this Act shall apply to farms in the several States and Territories, and in the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico.

PUBLICATION AND NOTICE OF FARM DOMESTIC PRODUCTION QUOTAS

SEC. 7. All domestic production quotas assigned to farms in a county or other local administrative area shall, in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, be made and kept freely available for public inspection in such county or other local administrative area. Notice of the farm domestic production quota assigned to a farm shall be mailed to the owner or operator of such farm.

REVIEW OF ASSIGNED QUOTAS

SEC. 8. (a) Any farmer who is dissatisfied with the farm production quota established for his farm may, within fifteen days after mailing to him of notice as provided in section 7, have such quota reviewed by a local review committee of three farmers from the same or nearby counties appointed by the Secretary. Unless application for review is made within such period, the original determination of the farm domestic production quota shall be final.

(b) The members of the review committee shall receive as compensation for their services the same per diem as that received by the members of the committee utilized for the purposes of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended. The members of the review committee shall not be entitled to receive compensation for more than thirty days in any one year.

INSTITUTION OF PROCEEDINGS

SEC. 9. If the producer is dissatisfied with the determination of the review committee, he may, within fifteen days after a notice of such determination is mailed to him by registered mail, file suit against the review board as defendant in the United States district court, or institute proceedings for review in any court of record of the State having general jurisdiction, sitting in the county or the district in which his farm is located, for the purpose of obtaining a review of such determination. Bond shall be given in an amount and with surety satisfaction to the court to secure the United States for the cost of the proceeding. The bill of complaint in such proceeding may be served by delivering a copy thereof to any one of the members of the review committee. Thereupon the review committee shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the determination complained of was made, together with its findings of fact.

COURT REVIEW

SEC. 10. The review by the court shall be limited to questions of law, and the findings of fact by the review committee, if supported by the evidence, shall be conclusive. If application is made to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the review committee, the court may direct such additional evidence to be taken before the review committee in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The review committee may modify its findings of fact or its determination by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file with the court such modified findings or determination, which findings of fact shall be conclusive. At the earliest convenient time, the court, in term time or vacation, shall hear and determine the case upon the original record of the hearing before the review committee, and upon such record as supplemented, if supplemented, by further hearing before the review committee pursuant to direction of the court. The court shall affirm the review committee's determination, or modified determination, if the court determines that the same is in accordance with the law. If the court determines that such determination or modified determination is not in accordance with law, the court shall remand the proceeding to the review committee with direction either to make such determination as the court shall determine to be in accordance with law or to take such further proceedings as, in the court's opinion, the law requires.

STAY OF PROCEEDINGS AND EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION

SEC. 11. The commencement of judicial proceedings under this Act shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the review committee's determination. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the jurisdiction conferred by this Act to review the legal validity of a determination made by a review committee pursuant to this Act shall be exclusive. No court of the United States or of any State shall have jurisdiction to pass upon the legal validity of any such determination except in a proceeding under this Act.

NO EFFECT ON OTHER QUOTAS

SEC. 12. Notwithstanding any increase of any farm as a result of review of the determination thereof under this Act, the domestic production quota for other farms shall not be affected.

REPEALS; EFFECT ON SOIL BANK ACT

SEC. 13. (a) The Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and title I of the Agricultural Act of 1949, as amended, are repealed as of the effective date of this Act.

(b) The Secretary shall not after the date of the enactment of this Act enter into any contract under the provisions of subtitle A of the Soil Bank Act. The provisions of section 114 of such Act, relating to compliance with acreage allotments, shall be ineffective after the effective date of this Act. Except with respect to compliance with acreage allotment requirements, nothing in this Act shall be construed as altering the terms of any contract entered into under the provisions of the Soil Bank Act.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 14. The Secretary is authorized and directed to issue such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

UTILIZATION OF LOCAL AND COUNTY COMMITTEES

SEC. 15. In carrying out the provisions of this Act, the Secretary may utilize the local and county committees established pursuant to section 8 (b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended.

AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 16. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 17. The provisions of this Act shall become effective on December 31, 1959, except that the Secretary may by proclamation make such provisions effective with respect to any basic agricultural commodity prior to December 31, 1959, if he finds that such action will effectuate the policy and purpose of this Act as declared in section 2. In the event the provisions of this Act are made effective with respect to any basic agricultural commodity prior to December 31, 1959, the repeal of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and the repeal of title I of the Agricultural Act of 1949, as amended, under section 13 (a), shall become effective with respect to any such commodity as of the date the Secretary proclaims the provisions of this Act effective with respect to such commodity.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 18. As used in this Act—

(1) The term "Secretary" shall mean the Secretary of Agriculture;

(2) The term "basic agricultural commodity" shall mean tobacco, corn, cotton, wheat, rice, and peanuts, respectively;

(3) The term "parity price" shall mean parity price as such term was defined in section 301(a)(1) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, prior to the effective date of this Act; and

(4) The term "producer" shall mean an individual, partnership, firm, joint-stock company, corporation, association, trust, or estate.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. TALMADGE. I am happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CARLSON. Senators have just had the opportunity to hear a most learned and studied discussion and analysis of the farm problem by the distinguished Senator from Georgia. Personally, I have appreciated very much his statement. I concur in the suggestions he has made, as they reflect what I believe the farmer has in mind and what he desires.

For instance, I believe I quote the Senator correctly as saying that he thought the farmer was entitled to conduct his farm operations as he desired. I think the history of farm legislation proves that the allotment acreage and marketing quotas have not solved the farm problem.

I have said on the floor of the Senate on previous occasions that the farm problem will not be solved by flexible or inflexible parity prices. I think the Senator from Georgia has made an excellent suggestion.

The second point, as I noted it, was that the American farmer desires but one thing, namely, his fair share of the national income. I in part represent an agricultural State, and I find that is generally true. All farmers ask is their fair share of the national income.

The third point made by the Senator from Georgia, as I understood him, was that we must market our farm commodities at such prices in the world market as will enable us to dispose of our surpluses. It is to that point that I wish to speak for a few minutes.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the No. 1 farm problem this year is our wheat surplus. Present indications are that the stock of Government surplus wheat will exceed 1,300,000,000 bushels on next June 30. The Government will have in excess of $3 billion invested in that surplus stock, plus an additional cost of more than half a million dollars a day for storage of the wheat.

The distingushed Senator from Georgia mentioned storage charges of a million dollars a day, I believe; I think that is for all commodities. For wheat alone, the Government is paying storage charges of half a million dollars a day.

All of us must agree that the acreage allotments and the marketing quotas have not solved the wheat problem.

I represent, together with my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL], who is on the floor at this time, the largest winter wheat producing State in the Nation. Normally, Kansas grows approximately one-fourth of the Nation's winter wheat. This year, Kansas will grow more than one-fourth of the Nation's winter wheat.

We who live in Kansas have followed the allotment program. In 1951, Kansas planted approximately 18 million acres of wheat. Following the allotment program, and at the present time, Kansas is now planting 10,300,000 acres of wheat—which shows that we have greatly reduced our wheat acreage. But in 1958, the second largest crop of winter wheat in the Nation's history was produced.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield to me?

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield, in order that the Senator from South Dakota may address some questions to the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, to the able Senator from Kansas, I should like to say that I think his remarks on wheat are most appropriate at this time.

In connection with the increased production of winter wheat, I desire to observe that in the past year in South Dakota the production of winter wheat increased both in acreage and in bushels per acre. The production of both winter wheat and spring wheat in South Dakota this year was more than double the 10-year average. The acreage of winter wheat was much larger, in proportion to the total amount planted to wheat, than it has been in previous years. So the South Dakota wheat growers contributed substantially to the total increase this year.

In the past year we had some yields of winter wheat as large as 70 bushels, which is exceptional for South Dakota. The yield was outstanding this year. But we had many fields of winter wheat which yielded from 45 to 60 bushels an acre, which is far above the average, and resulted in a total average production of winter wheat in excess of 31 bushels, I believe, if my memory is correct; and in the case of spring wheat, the average was 21 bushels, which is about twice the 10-year average.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield further to me?

Mr. TALMADGE. I am delighted to yield again to my friend, the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CARLSON. I mentioned the fact that Kansas was the largest grower of winter wheat in the Nation; and then my distinguished friend, the Senator from South Dakota, began to speak of averages. I was going to discuss the averages for Kansas, this year. The average in South Dakota exceeded the Kansas average by approximately 4 bushels an acre, if the South Dakota average was 31 bushels an acre.

This year in Kansas we had a record average of 27 bushels an acre. Normally our average is from 13 to 19 bushels an acre, depending on varying crop conditions. But this year was a good crop year in the case of winter wheat, and also in the case of spring wheat; and it was for that reason that the Nation has had a crop of 1,449,000,000 bushels.

When we realize that the Nation uses, for domestic consumption, including seed and feed, approximately 750,000,000 bushels, the crop this year will mean that the carryover next June 30 will be approximately 2 years' crops.

I believe that every wheat grower knows this situation cannot continue; and every taxpayer also knows that it must not continue.

I believe it is up to the Congress to take action at this session on a program which will begin to solve the problem.

I realize the problem is a difficult one. But I call attention to the fact that the National Association of Wheat Growers, at its annual convention in Denver, Colo., December 10–13, 1958, received a report from a committee which made a thorough study of the wheat situation. The study was made under the direction of Herbert J. Hughes, of Nebraska, chairman; Glen Bayne, of Washington, vice chairman; and Leslie F. Sheffield, of Nebraska, secretary. They submitted to the convention—and it was approved by the convention—a report which contains recommendations which, in my opinion, are very sound, and should receive consideration by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. TALMADGE] is a member, and of which my colleague from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] is also a member. The problem is one which I think must be solved.

I was very much pleased to hear the distinguished Senator's discussion this afternoon of the farm problem as a whole.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the farm program committee of the National Association of Wheat Growers be printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection——

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, although I do not intend to object, let me ask whether the Senator from Kansas can advise us whether those resolutions deal with the subject of bushel quotas, rather than acreage allotments. Do the resolutions deal with that point?

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me to continue——

Mr. TALMADGE. I am glad to yield further to the distinguished Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CARLSON. Then, Mr. President, let me say that at the Denver meeting, and as the resolutions were adopted, the National Association of Wheat Growers went on record as favoring elimination of the acreage allotments, and as favoring allotments on the basis of a certain number of bushels per farm. In my opinion that would be a great improvement, particularly in the case of the wheat-producing sections of what I would call the more arid areas of the Nation, for the reason that in many years the farmers in such sections do not have bountiful harvests; in fact, sometimes there are crop failures. If such a farmer were permitted to grow wheat in years of good production, and were required to keep the wheat stored under bond, then he would have some wheat to sell in years when he did not raise any. That would not make more wheat available for the market in such years; but it would give the farmer, the State, and the Nation a more continuous income; and in the wheat-growing areas that is important from an economic standpoint.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, further under the reservation of objection, let me say that I am glad to learn that the wheat growers so express themselves, for—as the able Senator from Kansas will recall—the change from an acreage allotment basis to a bushel quota basis was one of the features of the proposal which I had the privilege of joining the Senator from Kansas in making to the agricultural bill, as passed by the Senate in 1956. Later, that proposal was lost in conference; but I think it was one of the features of the proposal the Senator from Kansas made at that time, and in which I was happy to join.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, in order that it may be made a part of the RECORD, I should like to read the statement on that point which was adopted by means of the first resolution. It reads as follows:

We propose that acreage allotments and checking of compliance along with current marketing quotas for wheat be eliminated and that a marketing allotment expressed in bushels be assigned to each farm. The marketing allotments would be based on wheat base acreage for the farm multiplied by the normal yield per acre and factored to the county allotment. Local committees would make adjustments in individual cases from the base acreage.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Kansas, and I also thank the Senator from Georgia.

I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, I wish to express my thanks to the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. TALMADGE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF THE FARM PROGRAM COMMITTEE, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF WHEATGROWERS ANNUAL MEETING

This committee believes that the most important problem of the wheatgrower today is that of maintaining sufficient income to purchase the products of industry and labor and retain a satisfactory standard of living in the face of reduced acreage and rising costs of production.

It is the opinion of this committee, that lower prices for wheat will not aid in solving the problem of excess supplies, either by reducing production or noticably increasing consumption, but will only serve to increase the margins of marketing cost between the producer and consumer.

We recommend that the National Association of Wheat Growers vigorously oppose any attempt to abandon the parity concept. This has been the foundation upon which farm programs and determination of purchasing power for farmers has been based, in comparison with other segments of our economy; however, we recommend that the base period for computing parity be shifted from the 1910–14 period now used to the 1947–49 period which is used for various computations by both labor and industry.

In any evaluation of the present program which resulted in the 1958 wheat crop of 1,449,000,000 bushels and a prospective carryover next July 1 in excess of 1,300,000,000 bushels, it is evident that the present production control laws are inadequate. A new approach is needed to stabilize production at a level which will result in a progressive reduction of Commodity Credit Corporation wheat stocks while stabilizing wheatgrowers' income.

In drafting this committee report, the committee kept in mind the following four basic concepts:

1. Wheatgrowers' net income must be maintained if they are to reduce production below the current level.

2. The buildup of Commodity Credit Corporation wheat stocks must be stopped and gradually reduced to a normal level.

3. Further reduction in acreage of wheat must not be shifted to other crops.

4. Increased yields per acre must not be reflected in increased Government holdings of wheat.

A. To accomplish the above four objectives, we recommend the following production and income stabilization plan which will give wheatgrowers more freedom in the management of their farming operations and at the same time improve their economic welfare:

1. We propose that acreage allotments and checking of compliance along with current marketing quotas for wheat be eliminated and that a marketing allotment expressed in bushels be assigned to each farm. The marketing allotments would be based on wheat base acreage for the farm multiplied by the normal yield per acre and factored to the county allotment. Local committees would make adjustments in individual cases from the base acreage.

2. We propose that base acreages for counties and States should be the average of the 1952–53 planted acreage. In computing the marketing allotments for States and counties, the formula should be based on the average of the 1952–53 planted acreage and the normal yields should be based on the period which provides the most equitable relationship between counties and States.

3. We recommend that the national marketing allotment be determined annually on the following bases:

(a) Estimated amount used for food in United States, 485 million bushels, 1958.

(b) Estimated U.S. wheat exports, 430 million bushels, 1958.

(c) Minus amount to be moved out of CCC wheat stocks each year, —75 million bushels.

(d) National marketing allotment, 840 million bushels, 1958.

4. We recommend that price support on this marketing allotment be available to every wheatgrower at not less than $1.60 per bushel national average. In addition, a certificate for each farm's percentage share of the domestic food market (approximately 485 million bushels or 60 percent of each farm's bushel allotment) would be available, redeemable in an amount which would return full parity to the producer on this amount of his production; provided, an acreage equal to 20 percent, but not more than 30 percent of the wheat base for the farm, were put in the conservation reserve. Neither the $5,000 limitation on payments nor the depletion of the soil bank base requirements would apply in this case; however, a suitable cover must be maintained on the acreage placed in the conservation reserve.

5. We recommend that funds for the redemption of the certificates be provided by purchases of the certificates by processors. Taxpayers thus would be relieved of a major part of the present export subsidy costs plus a reduction in the CCC storage costs for wheat each year.

6. We recommend that there be no restrictions on the utilization of wheat on farms where produced or when sold to other farmers or a bonded feed processor.

7. We recommend that at least 500 million bushels of current CCC wheat stocks be set aside in a defense stockpile, since it is generally recognized that a supply of wheat reduced to a level not depressing to the market would be unsafe under current world tensions. The costs of storing such a wheat stockpile would be greatly reduced if bids were asked on a 5-year storage contract with a schedule of premiums and discounts for quality that would permit turning of stocks by warehousemen. Contracts for storage of these strategic reserves of wheat should be awarded on a basis which would provide adequate dispersal among the producing States as a defense precaution.

8. We recommend that this program be offered to farmers in a national referendum and that a simple majority of those voting in favor be sufficient to make it effective. Eligibility for voting should be based on those eligible to vote in the last wheat marketing quota referendum.

9. We wish to emphasize that we are unalterably opposed to any reduction in the current support rate unless it is done in adopting the entire program previously outlined.

B. Until such time as the program above outlined is enacted into law and becomes effective, we recommend the following changes or corrections be made in the current farm program:

1. We recommend that the National Association of Wheat Growers support the provisions contained in Senate bill 1436 of the 85th Congress, 1958, having to do with administration of farm programs by democratically elected farmer committeemen.

2. We recommend that the National Association of Wheat Growers support corrective legislation to provide that no wheatgrower who overplants his allotment will be penalized by loss of wheat history in computing future allotments when no excess wheat is produced to be stored because of loss of crop in accordance with the Secretary's regulations.

3. We recommend that wheat-growers not be penalized by loss of wheat history in computing future allotments when the grower underplants his allotment to deplete excess wheat on his farm.

4. We recommend that marketing cards instead of marketing certificates be issued in the case of a downward adjustment of excess wheat because of underproducing the normal yield.

5. We recommend that the 1952–53 average wheat planting as adjusted by committees be the base in computing individual farm allotments.

6. We recommend that in computing excess wheat subject to penalty the actual yield be used instead of the normal yield.

7. We believe that the present system of measuring wheat acreages with tape or chain is unduly expensive, less accurate, and less efficient than prior methods used; therefore, we recommend that the prior system be used.

8. We recommend that the regulation on conservation reserve contracts which provides a date for starting cropping operations on the diverted acre portion in the final year of the contract be in accord with normal summer fallow procedures in the affected areas.

9. We recommend to feed-grain producers that they give serious consideration toward an accelerated program of cropland retirement into the conservation reserve in order to assume their share of the responsibility for reducing total agricultural output.

10. We recommend that the National Association of Wheat Growers urge the Secretary of Agriculture to place a qualified wheatgrower in a position at the policymaking level in the Department of Agriculture in order to give guidance and a better understanding of wheatgrower problems.

C. The committee report as herein outlined was adopted by unanimous vote, and we recommend its approval by the voting delegates of the National Association of Wheat Growers.

Mr. TALMADGE. I thank the distinguished Senator from Kansas for his great contribution to a solution of this grave problem with which our country is faced. I particularly thank him for his generous remarks about me.

I yield next to my warm friend and my distinguished colleague on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL].

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I wish to express my appreciation to the distinguished junior Senator from Georgia, to whose remarks with reference to his farm program I have just listened. I wish to say I have been very deeply interested, as has the distinguished Senator from Georgia who has just spoken, with reference to the farm problem and an effective farm program. I am appreciative of the fact that the distinguished Senator from Georgia has outlined today some very important matters for the consideration of the Senate.

I do not know how the questions he has raised are to be decided, but in my association with the junior Senator from Georgia on the Agriculture and Forestry Committee I have found that he has been thorough, aggressive, and alerted to the problem. I am more appreciative of his efforts than I can indicate at this time, because, coming from the South, and one of the great States in the Southland, he has shown a disposition to be considerate of the farm problems of many of us, such as the one with which we in the State of Kansas, in the case of wheat, now find ourselves confronted, about which it will be necessary to take some action.

I am especially anxious to make sure that when these matters come before our committee we shall have the opportunity, after hearings and discussions, to devise a practical and fair solution of this problem, which, if something is not done about it, will certainly continue to plague us, as it has plagued us in the past.

Mr. President, while I am on my feet——

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a response, before he goes to another subject?

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Yes.

Mr. TALMADGE. I desire to thank my warm friend, the distinguished senior Senator from Kansas, for his remarks and for the contribution he has made to this discussion. I have had the privilege and pleasure of sitting beside the able senior Senator from Kansas on the Agriculture and Forestry Committee for the past 2 years. I know of no Member of the Senate or of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry who is more concerned with the problems of farmers, not only of the wheat farmers of his own State, but also of farmers generally throughout the length and breadth of America.

I am sure the distinguished senior Senator from Kansas will continue that effort, along with all of us who want to see this problem solved in such a way as will provide a workable farm program which will permit farmers to farm, which will guarantee them their fair share of the national income, and which will take the Government out of the buying business, out of the storing business, out of the warehousing business, out of the selling business, and let those activities go back into the channels of private trade, where they properly belong.

If I may have the attention of the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON], I believe in his remarks he stated the cost of storing wheat alone at the present time is $500 million a day.

Mr. CARLSON. If the Senator will yield for a correction, the accurate figure is $500,000 a day.

Mr. TALMADGE. The Senator is correct—$500,000 a day. The other day I read somewhere, in one of the farm magazines or press releases, that the figure has now gone up to $700,000 a day.

There is no justification whatever for the Government being in the business of buying, warehousing, selling, and marketing of farm products. The Government's price support program is designed only to enable farmers to get their fair share of the national income. It would be far more economical, for the Government to pay a farmer the difference between a fair price and his actual price, limited to a fair sum that would permit the family-type farmer to continue his operations, than to dish out hundreds of thousands and sometimes millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money to gigantic corporation farms.

I yield now to the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, first, I wish to extend my appreciation and thanks to the distinguished and able Senator from Georgia, who is a member of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and who has done so much work in the interest of getting a real agricultural program enacted into law. I am sure he feels, as I do, that we simply must enact a permanent, long-range agricultural program. So far, we have been working from year to year, with expediency programs, to carry on for a little while. We shall never solve vexing agricultural problems until we provide a long-range program.

I compliment the Senator from Georgia for the start he has made in that direction. He introduced a similar comprehensive bill in the last Congress, rather late in the session, as I understand—in fact, I believe he said so on the floor of the Senate—for the purpose not of getting the bill enacted into law last year, but in order to give people something to think about and talk about. I know there has been a great deal of thinking and a great deal of discussion about the measure.

I hope the Senator from Georgia, with his associates on the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, will be able to push through this year an adequate long-range farm program. I certainly hope that a part of that program will involve something which I have felt for a long time we must have if we are to reach a solution, and that is a program of research, particularly if we are to find a way to handle the surpluses which plague us from time to time.

As compared to other industries agriculture probably has had the least number of adequate research programs, so far as concern uses and techniques for handling farm products, the matter of better distribution, better marketing, and better trade in the world, and all aspects of the problem which could be helped materially by a good research program.

We certainly ought to be able to dispose of our surpluses, when we consider the fact that perhaps three-quarters of the world is in short supply of the commodities we have in surplus supply.

One of the things I have often thought about is that, considering the tremendous increase in the population occurring here, the time will come when we are going to be even more appreciative than we are today of the fact that we are able to produce in abundance. I believe an adequate research program will help toward solution of many of the present problems, and I earnestly hope the Senator will include provision for such a program in the farm proposal he advocates before the committee this year.

Mr. TALMADGE. I thank my warm friend from Alabama for the kindness of his remarks. No Member of the Senate has had a more zealous interest in the welfare of the farmers of his State and of the Nation than has the distinguished Senator from Alabama.

I agree wholeheartedly with the remarks of the distinguished Senator with reference to research. We have spent a great deal of money for farm research. Most of it has been spent to increase production, rather than to utilize the commodities once they are produced. We need more research into ways of utilizing what we produce. Increased research will help in that regard. Unfortunately, research is lagging greatly at the present time.

At the last session the Senate, by a unanimous vote, as I recall, passed a bill in line with the suggestion of the able Senator, but the bill did not pass the other body, and did not become law.

I join enthusiastically with the Senator in expressing the hope that we can pass a bill for more research to utilize the agricultural commodities we now have in such superabundant supply.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TALMADGE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should like to mention to the Senator another matter, which really is not a part of the comprehensive program, but is more or less a temporary measure with respect to what is felt to be a great need in my State of Alabama. I presume the same thing is true in the State of Georgia and in most of the cotton-producing States, particularly those where the small farm is the typical farm which produces the cotton.

I refer to a proposal I have introduced during this session of Congress, designed to make it possible for the farmer with an allotment of cotton acreage to sell or lease the allotment, or to dispose of it for a consideration to some other farmer within the same county. The Senator knows that during the past several years the small farmer—particularly the small farmer in the old cotton States of the South—has been suffering a loss by reason of unused acreage which was allotted, and which later, because of not being used, was charged to the allotment of the State, of the county, or of the individual farmer.

If the proposed legislation is to be helpful during this year—and perhaps this is the most important year of all, because the farmers are just recovering from the effects of the soil bank program, which did not work too well, particularly for the small farmers—action must be taken fairly soon. I take this occasion to invite the Senator's attention to the proposal, and to urge him to support it in order that we may enact it into law early in the present session of Congress.

Mr. TALMADGE. I was aware of the fact that the Senator had introduced such a bill. The bill represents a strong step in the right direction and I shall give my unstinting support to it.

I observe the distinguished junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JORDAN] is present in the Chamber. He also has introduced a similar bill, of which I am a cosponsor. As one member of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I pledge to the distinguished Senator from Alabama and to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina my unstinting efforts to have the bill reported to the Senate for action. I hope we can pass the bill and that it can become a law this year.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I thank the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. JORDAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TALMADGE. I am happy to yield to my distinguished friend, the junior Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. JORDAN. I thank the junior Senator from Georgia very much. I join in the remarks of the distinguished junior Senator from Alabama, in endorsing what the Senator from Georgia has said about the farm program and especially about the grouping of the acreage.

As the Senator will remember, last year I introduced a bill to the same general effect. The bill was defeated, but I think it was a good bill. I think such a proposal ought to be enacted into law. I believe that is more true today than it was last year, because I have had a chance to go home to talk to many small farmers. I have observed what has been happening to them.

The things which have been said about the soil bank are only further proof of the compelling reason why action should be taken in the present session. Time is running out. Extra acres on the farms are not being used.

I also wish to join in expressing my firm belief that more time, money, and energy will have to be spent on research for farm products. We all know that the jet planes and the advances in aeronautics did not come about by accident, but were the result of research. We have to find some way, as the Senator from Georgia has said, to handle the crops we have been producing. We have been able to produce more than we could sell economically. There are ways which can be found, through research, to utilize the surpluses we have, and to put them to good use.

I shall actively support any program this year—and early this year—which will develop and finance a research program for farm commodities and for the use of farm acreage. There is no question that the rural element of the United States is the element which is being hurt in the economy of today. Something must be worked out which will be equitable and satisfactory to our farm population.

I thank the junior Senator from Georgia for yielding to me.

Mr. TALMADGE. I thank my friend the Senator from North Carolina for his excellent contribution to the debate.

Mr. President, unless the Senator from Alabama desires to have me yield to him again, I shall be delighted to yield the floor.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I simply suggest to the Senator from Georgia that I desire to make an insertion in the RECORD, and the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] has a speech to make.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

ATTITUDES IN MANILA

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, in the New York Times of Sunday, January 11, 1959, there was published an editorial entitled "Attitudes in Manila." According to the editorial, there is a growing feeling in Manila that the United States is taking the Philippines and its problems too much for granted.

In support of this statement, the editorial points out that 4 years ago the Filipinos urged upon the United States some sort of "omnibus" settlement of a variety of claims, but so far as is known in the Philippines, not even preliminary studies have been made in an effort to reach a reasonable settlement.

In addition, when President Garcia visited the United States last June, the Development Loan Fund and the Export-Import Bank announced that they had agreed to provide the Philippine Government with a loan in the amount of $125 million. The editorial reports that of the Development Loan Fund credit of $50 million nothing has been disbursed thus far, and of the Export-Import Bank credit of $75 million there is still some $35 million which remains to be allocated.

If the implications or unjustifiable "foot dragging" on the part of the United States contained in this editorial are correct, then I suggest that there is a serious laxity in connection with the administration of these programs. It behooves the administration to take a fresh look at its techniques for coordinating promises with actions.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the New York Times editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ATTITUDES IN MANILA

There have been several recent reports of a growing anti-American attitude in the Philippines. The closer attention that Manila is paying to Asian neighbors is cited as a shift in emphasis. This, however, is a misconstruction, since there is certainly nothing anti-American in the praiseworthy aim of better regional relationships.

What is much more likely is that there is a growing feeling in Manila that the United States, vitally concerned with other areas, is taking the Philippines and its problems too much for granted. There may be some exaggeration in the expressions of this attitude but there is more than a little ground for it.

It is now 4 years since the Filipinos urged upon the United States some sort of omnibus settlement of a variety of claims. Any sort of reasonable settlement would be accepted in Manila, but so far as is known in the Philippines not even preliminary studies have been made.

An even more sensitive area is that of the implementation of the agreements that were made in the course of President Garcia's visit here last June. A line of credit of $125 million was announced at that time. Of the development loan fund credit of $50 million nothing has been disbursed thus far. Of the Export-Import Bank credit of $75 million there is still some $35 million that remains to be allocated. The loan for the steel mill project is still under study.

Under those conditions it is small wonder that there is some misgiving and much impatience in the Philippines. The mills of the gods and of foreign aid may grind slowly, but there are times when it would be advantageous to us and to our friends to speed their processes. This is one of them. We cannot afford to sacrifice because of simple inertia or even the suspicion of indifference any part of the massive reservoir of good will that we have been able to build up.

PRIVATE ENFORCEMENT OF THE ANTITRUST LAWS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am today reintroducing in the 86th Congress two bills which I introduced in the last session of the 85th Congress. These bills are designed to make it easier for small businessmen to avail themselves of the protection of the antitrust laws. Each bill is intended to cure one specific shortcoming in the antitrust laws as they now stand.

The first of these bills is identical to S. 4224 of the 85th Congress. It is entitled "A bill to require the filing of evidentiary briefs by the United States in connection with the entry of consent decrees, judgments, and orders in civil antitrust actions."

The second bill is identical to S. 4225 of the 85th Congress. It is entitled "A bill to authorize the recovery of actual costs reasonably incurred by plaintiffs in private actions for injunctive relief from antitrust violations."

The need for this legislation, Mr. President, was clearly established in my mind during 2 days of most illuminating hearings, held by the Senate Small Business Committee on March 3 and 4, 1958. At those hearings, the Subcommittee on Monopoly, which it is my privilege to chair, and the Subcommittee on Retailing, Distribution, and Fair Trade Practices, chaired by my friend, the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], jointly explored the reasons for the very limited number of complaints filed, and the far more limited number of plaintiff's judgments rendered, under the private enforcement provisions of the antitrust laws.

The findings of our two subcommittees, and of the full Small Business Committee, and the conclusions that we reached after those hearings, are set forth in Senate Report No. 1855 of the 85th Congress. In barest summary, our conclusions were that most small businessmen cannot and do not attempt to obtain money damages or injunctive relief under the Sherman, Clayton, and other antitrust acts because the costs of such actions are prohibitive and many other obstacles stand between the potential plaintiff and effective enforcement of the private relief provisions of the laws.

The Sherman Act of 1890, Mr. President, has been described as a "charter of economic freedom." Its purpose is to guard trade and commerce against restraints and monopolies. It is supplemented by the Clayton Act, which outlaws specific business practices deemed promotive of monopoly, and the Robinson-Patman Act, which amends the Clayton Act to strike at certain pricing practices injurious to competition.

The right to sue for treble damages for redress of business injuries resulting from trade restraints and other monopolistic practices is rooted in the common law. This right found statutory expression in section 7 of the Sherman Act. Section 7 permits any person who is injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by acts forbidden or declared to be unlawful by the Sherman Act to sue the offender in any district court of the United States, without respect to the amount in controversy, and to recover threefold the damages sustained, and the costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

The language of the Senate Small Business Committee's report, Senate Report No. 1855 of the last Congress, aptly states the reasoning behind this section:

In thus wedding Federal antitrust policy with private compensatory law, the Members of the 51st Congress believed that they had created an effective device for keeping competition hard but clean. By allowing injured parties to recover costs of suit, plus three times the amount of the damage done, Congress hoped to give businessmen a strong incentive to become, in effect, a legion of antitrust-enforcement vigilantes. The procedures established reflected a logical uniting of self-interest with public policy.

In addition, the Congress that passed the Sherman Act felt, with perhaps more optimism than was warranted, that the threat of having to compensate a victimized business rival on a treble-damage basis would inspire the business community, generally, to new ethical heights. In fact, so complete was the faith of Congress in the compensatory provisions of the Sherman Act that it neglected to establish a special policing agency for public enforcement of the act.

These high expectations of Congress proved illusory. In the half century following the signing of the act on July 2, 1890, only 175 private suits were filed by aggrieved businessmen—an average of less than 4 actions a year. In only 13 of these did the plaintiffs obtain recovery.

In more recent years, a survey by the Department of Justice has shown that from 1947 to 1952, inclusive, private plaintiffs prevailed in but 134 of the 423 suits started and "in only 31 percent of private cases did * * * plaintiffs secure any redress at all."

Two of eight specific legislative recommendations made in Senate Report No. 1855 were these:

First. When the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice settles an action against an antitrust violator by consent judgment, decree or order, an important benefit is lost to potential private plaintiffs: the benefit of having the findings of a trial and the judgment of a court. My first bill would go part of the way toward remedying this loss to private plaintiffs. It would require, as a prerequisite to the entering of consent judgments, that the Justice Department file with the court a memorandum setting forth the evidence upon which it relied in bringing the case. This memorandum would be a part of the public record of the court.

Second. When an antitrust violation is settled by injunctive relief rather than by money damages, present law allows the successful plaintiff no recovery of court costs. My other bill would correct this shortcoming by allowing such costs, including reasonable attorney's fees.

The committee hearings and the Senate committee report to which I have made reference set forth what I believe would be a rather proud achievement of any session of Congress if no more were done for small business, because it would amount to a very substantial implementation of the antitrust laws.

Eight recommendations were made at that time. The bills to which I have made reference would carry out two of such recommendations.

I am in no sense critical of the 85th Congress because those measures were not enacted. The report to which I have made reference resulted in the bills which I introduced at that time. The Small Business Committee report was presented to the Senate on July 18, 1958, only a short period of time before the Congress adjourned, and certainly not in sufficient time to permit full hearings by the Judiciary Committee. Senators may recall that the Senate was very busy considering civil rights legislation, which stirred considerable controversy on the floor of the Senate during the closing days of the session.

Fortunately, we were enabled to enact one of the recommendations of the Committee on Small Business at that time. That was recommendation No. 4.

Recommendation No. 4 in that report reads as follows:

> Recoveries in form of treble damages, now taxed as ordinary income in the year of recovery, should be taxed over a reasonable period of years.

That recommendation was the subject of an amendment which I offered to a bill pending before the Senate Finance Committee. My amendment now appears as section 1306 of the Internal Revenue Code, and it reads as follows:

> "SEC. 1306. Damages for injuries under the antitrust laws.
> "If an amount representing damages is received or accrued during a taxable year as a result of an award in, or settlement of, a civil action brought under section 4 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes', approved October 15, 1914 (commonly known as the Clayton Act), for injuries sustained by the taxpayer in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws, then the tax attributable to the inclusion of such amount in gross income for the taxable year shall not be greater than the aggregate of the increases in taxes which would have resulted if such amount had been included in gross income in equal installments for each month during the period in which such injuries were sustained by the taxpayer."

The effect of that provision would be that, where a taxpayer has been injured by monopolistic practices, and has filed an antitrust suit and has sustained the usual delays, he could spread the income of the treble damage award over a long period of time, instead of, as under previous law, having it taxed entirely in 1 year, with the Federal Government taking practically all of the recovery. The bill would help substantially in promoting treble damage suits for violations of antitrust laws.

Other recommendations made by the committee, in addition to the two which the bills I have introduced today would seek to carry out, were, first, a recommendation that section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act should be made an integral part of the antitrust statutes, as contemplated in 3079 of the 85th Congress, 2d session. During the next few days the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] will introduce a bill to carry out the recommendation in that respect.

Another recommendation was that Clayton Act orders issued by the Federal Trade Commission should become final judgments by the lapse of time, unless appealed, as is proposed in S. 721, 85th Congress, 1st session.

It is my understanding that the Chairman of the Small Business Committee, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] will introduce a bill covering that recommendation.

It was further proposed by the subcommittee and by the full Committee on Small Business that by resolution Congress should declare private antitrust actions are impressed with substantial public interest. A bill to carry out that recommendation will be introduced, if it has not already been introduced, by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Another recommendation was that 30 days before becoming final, the terms of all antitrust consent judgments or orders should be published in the Federal Register in order to give the general public an opportunity to lodge objections to the proposed judgment or order with the Justice Department or the Federal Trade Commission.

Such a measure will be introduced, I understand, by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY].

A further recommendation was that agreements waiving private enforcement rights under the antitrust laws should be declared null and void, as contrary to public policy.

A bill on that subject will be introduced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Congress would do itself proud to enact these several bills which would assist private plaintiffs, particularly small businessmen in protecting themselves, at no expense to the Federal Government. All the bills represent an effective part of a small business program. Congress should enact these bills—and I hope it will enact them at this session of Congress—so that we may make progress toward achieving a program to preserve and protect small business.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I wish to compliment the Senator from Louisiana for his fine presentation today. He speaks not theoretically but on the basis of having himself presided at hearings dealing with the subject. The Senator from Louisiana has been one of the most energetic members of the Small Business Committee. He has held some of the most helpful hearings we have had on the subject. In making these recommendations he speaks from the experience he received in listening to the witnesses tell their stories. He is sponsoring a very fine program on this subject. I should like to say also to the Senator from Louisiana that I plan to introduce the bill to which he has referred. In fact, I have already addressed letters to the cosponsors of the bill introduced last year, asking them if they would be willing to cosponsor it again this year. The Senator from Louisiana was one of the cosponsors of the bill last year, and I trust that he will again cosponsor the bill this year.

A great many persons are under the impression that because we gave a fair amount of relief to small business in the 85th Congress, we are through, and that we have completed the program.

The Senator from Louisiana has well pointed out the fact that in some fields we did not do anything, and that in other fields we did not even scratch the surface. It is true that we did provide some tax relief, although the program we established was not a complete one by any means. The Senator from Louisiana joined us in cosponsoring such proposed legislation at that time. We put through a program to establish an adequate source of credit for small business, and that program is now being placed into effect. We have yet to find out how it will function.

In the field of antitrust legislation and in the field of protection against monopolies, we have not provided anything like an adequate small business program. I believe the Senator will agree.

Mr. LONG. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. SPARKMAN. What the Senator is aiming at primarily is the protection of small business. Is it not true that that is the one thing which small business throughout the country feels the greatest need of in the way of legislation?

Mr. LONG. The Senator is 1,000 percent correct. The measures to which I have made reference, some of which had been introduced by the Senator from Alabama even before the hearings to which I have referred were held, are measures which, in my judgment, if brought before the Senate on the appropriate day, and properly explained, would be passed overwhelmingly.

Frankly, it should be borne in mind that we are constantly confronted with the problem of the lack of legislative jurisdiction of the Small Business Committee of the Senate. Very often committees which are engaged in dealing with a vast number of other matters, simply do not get around to considering and reporting to the Senate, in time for the Senate to consider, measures which would assist small business.

It had been felt for many years that there should be a committee where a small businessman could tell his story. Congress finally did give the small businessmen a place where they could tell their story. Unfortunately, Congress did not give the committee any teeth. All too often executives from large corporations, whose practices were destroying small business, came before the Small Business Committee and, with tongue in cheek, looked as if they wanted to say "Don't 'kid' us, you do not have legislative jurisdiction, and we know it."

There is probably one thing we could do to help small business as much as anything else, and that is to assure the Senate that measures on this subject will be reported to the Senate and will come up for action on the floor of the Senate, because some of them are measures which no individual Senator would like to take the responsibility of opposing on the floor. Yet some Senators, after fighting for something in committee, have great difficulty in getting a bill reported, and find colleagues asking not to have a yea and nay vote on it because they do not want to make a record against it, even though those same colleagues had succeeded in holding the bill in committee for a year or two.

The bills to which I have referred are a part of a program on which Congress should have an opportunity to vote. I am satisfied that down through the years Senators will be rather proud that they voted for these measures, as well as the others to which I have referred, if the Committee on the Judiciary and the other committees who have responsibility over this subject will see fit to conduct hearings and report the bills to the Senate in sufficient time for the Senate to take them up.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quroum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, by direction of the majority steering committee, I submit an order designating assignments to committees from the majority. I ask that the assignments be read for the information of the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that the order be entered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee assignments will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Committee on Aeronautical and Space Sciences: Messrs. Johnson of Texas (chairman), Russell, Magnuson, Anderson, Kerr, Symington, Stennis, Young of Ohio, Dodd, Cannon.

Committee on Agriculture and Forestry: Messrs. Ellender (chairman), Johnston of South Carolina, Holland, Eastland, Humphrey, Symington, Talmadge, Proxmire, Jordan, Young of Ohio, Hart.

Committee on Appropriations: Messrs. Hayden (chairman), Russell, Chavez, Ellender, Hill, McClellan, Robertson, Magnuson, Holland, Stennis, Johnson of Texas, Pastore, Kefauver, Monroney, Bible, Byrd of West Virginia, Dodd, McGee.

Committee on Armed Services: Messrs. Russell (chairman), Byrd of Virginia, Johnson of Texas, Stennis, Symington, Jackson, Ervin, Thurmond, Engle, Bartlett, Cannon.

Committee on Banking and Currency: Messrs. Fulbright (chairman), Robertson, Sparkman, Frear, Douglas, Clark, Proxmire, Byrd of West Virginia, Williams of New Jersey, Muskie.

Committee on the District of Columbia: Messrs. Bible (chairman), Morse, Frear, Hartke.

Committee on Finance: Messrs. Byrd of Virginia (chairman), Kerr, Frear, Long, Smathers, Anderson, Douglas, Gore, Talmadge, McCarthy, Hartke.

Committee on Foreign Relations: Messrs. Green (chairman), Fulbright, Sparkman, Humphrey, Mansfield, Morse, Long, Kennedy, Gore, Lausche, Church.

Committee on Government Operations: Messrs. McClellan (chairman), Jackson, Ervin, Humphrey, Gruening, Muskie.

Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs: Messrs. Murray (chairman), Anderson, Jackson, O'Mahoney, Bible, Neuberger, Carroll, Church, Gruening, Moss.

Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce: Messrs. Magnuson (chairman), Pastore, Monroney, Smathers, Thurmond, Lausche, Yarborough, Engle, Bartlett, Hartke, McGee.

Committee on the Judiciary: Messrs. Eastland (chairman), Kefauver, Johnston of South Carolina, Hennings, McClellan, O'Mahoney, Ervin, Carroll, Dodd, Hart.

Committee on Labor and Public Welfare: Messrs. Hill (chairman), Murray, Kennedy, McNamara, Morse, Yarborough, Clark, Randolph, Williams of New Jersey.

Committee on Post Office and Civil Service: Messrs. Johnston of South Carolina (chairman), Monroney, Neuberger, Yarborough, Clark, Jordan.

Committee on Public Works: Messrs. Chavez (chairman), Kerr, McNamara, Neuberger, Randolph, McCarthy, Young of Ohio, Muskie, Gruening, Moss.

Committee on Rules and Administration: Messrs. Hennings (chairman), Hayden, Green, Mansfield, Jordan, Cannon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the order was entered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the order just entered was entered with the approval of all Senators who were present and who voted on the question, and who are members of the steering committee: The chairman, Mr. JOHNSON of Texas; the whip, Mr. MANSFIELD; the secretary of the conference, Mr. HENNINGS; Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. ROBERTSON, Mr. MCCLELLAN, Mr. FREAR, Mr. HOLLAND, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. PASTORE, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, Mr. RUSSELL, and Mr. BIBLE.

In addition, we asked to have sit with the committee in an advisory capacity Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. MCNAMARA.

RESCISSION OF ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL TOMORROW, AND ENTRY OF ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL SATURDAY

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the convening of the Senate tomorrow be rescinded, and that when the Senate concludes its business today, it adjourn to meet at noon on Saturday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am not aware of any business to be transacted on Saturday other than the order from the minority with regard to committee assignments. We are very desirous of having the Senate proceed as expeditiously as possible with the organization of committees. We believe it may be possible to enter an order on Saturday, so that committees may be organized on Monday.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, the minority conference was held this morning. At that time we appointed a Committee on Committees. Obviously, it takes a little while to assemble all the necessary data. I advised the majority leader I was confident that the work could not be consummated by Thursday or Friday. I hoped it could be done by Saturday, and that is the moving reason, of course, for the session on Saturday.

ADJOURNMENT TO SATURDAY

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I move that the Senate stand adjourned until Saturday, at noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 1 minute p.m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, under the order previously entered, until Saturday, January 17, 1959, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Jim Wright's Christmas Newsletter

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. LYNDON B. JOHNSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, January 14, 1959

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, in the 12th District of Texas, Representative JAMES C. WRIGHT, JR., has the reputation of speaking from the heart as well as from the head. This amazing and energetic young man grew up in a small town, subsequently becoming mayor of it, and still later serving as member of the Texas Legislature. He is now a Representative in the Congress from the fourth largest city in Texas.

JIM WRIGHT has a way of speaking his mind that is both refreshing and compelling, and he is a writer, moreover, of considerable power and warmth. In his newsletter for Christmas week, JIM WRIGHT sent out a rather remarkable document that is a lesson, I think, for all of us.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD JIM WRIGHT'S Christmas newsletter, along with an excellent editorial from the Dallas Morning News commenting on Congressman WRIGHT'S proposals.

There being no objection, the editorial and letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Dallas Morning News, Dec. 25, 1958]

IT'S A STRANGE CHRISTMAS

It is a strange Christmas in a strange world. We send four tons of potential destruction careening around the globe and install in it a mechanism to proclaim peace on earth and good will toward men everywhere. The strange part about it is that we really mean the destruction—and we really mean the benediction.

If Ivanovich and John Doe could only sit down together, as Representative JIM WRIGHT, of Fort Worth, suggests, they would have no trouble at all finding that they could understand each other and get along with each other. But the people at the summit stand in the way. That is why all our summit conferences fail.

Speaking for John Doe, JIM WRIGHT suggests that Russia and the United States forget a part of their program for destroying each other and invest the savings in health. Health isn't dangerous. It isn't subversive. Nobody wants to shoot health or exile it to Siberia. Everybody can use health.

Well, then, says John Doe, per JIM WRIGHT, speaking to Ivan Ivanovich, why not have a new 5-year plan for Russia and for the United States, too? In 5 years Russia will spend, under this plan, the one-half amount of rubles Russia now spends each year in getting ready to wipe out the United States. And in that 5 years, the United States spends one-half the amount of dollars that it spends getting ready to wipe out Russia.

At the end of the 5 years, every town of 10,000 population in the whole world would have a hospital. There would be money left over for schools and colleges. And typhoid, smallpox, malaria, leprosy, and yellow fever would be disappearing from the earth.

And somewhere, maybe, in all this, the world would learn the lessons of peace and brotherly love and of the divine providence which sent the Christ Child to us almost 2,000 years ago.

THE WRIGHT SLANT ON WASHINGTON

"There went out a decree from Caesar Augustus that all the world should be taxed."

As I look through the window today upon Washington—like Rome, a city from which decrees go out—I can see the severely beautiful Washington Monument. In the eye of imagination it looks like the finger of a wise man pointing to a new star in the heavens. On the Ellipse behind the White House towers the national Christmas tree, tall as a six-story building.

Aside from such landmarks, Washington is just about like any other big city at Christmastime; neither better nor worse. There is the same commercialism, the same emphasis on material things, the same congested traffic and frantic haste. And, as in every other city, the only time you can really see the light that shone over the shepherds on their hilltop in Judea is when you look closely into the eyes of a little child.

"And she brought forth her first-born son and wrapped him in swaddling clothes and laid him in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn."

Just as it was in Bethlehem, so it is in Washington in 1958. No room under the tree for another present. No room in the post office for another package. No room on our engagement pads for an additional plan. No room in the department store aisles for another shopper. And in too many hearts—no room for Him and His message of a better way.

At the conference tables in Geneva and elsewhere men discuss more and more and settle less and less because there is no room in their minds for a new idea of peace on earth—still new and still largely untried after 2,000 years. Our thoughts are on guided missiles with nuclear warheads, and not on the star.

"And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shown round about them: and they were sore afraid."

Afraid? Well, yes, the average person in today's world is afraid. And maybe that's one reason we stay so busy, so we won't have time to think about it.

"And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people."

To all people? Even to those we don't like and don't trust? Even to those who plot and plan against us? Good tidings to Democrats and Republicans alike? To the rude motorist who squeezed you out of your lane in the Christmas traffic today? Good tidings of great joy—even to the Russians? Well, that's what the angel said.

"And on earth, peace, good will toward men."

"Peace," the word the angels sang, must have seemed as impossible a dream in those days as it does now. There was then, as now, the temporary absence of major armed conflict, the uneasy, and repressed order of a Pax Romana. But real peace must be something more than just a nervous stalemate enforced by fear. It has something to do with good will.

Is there any real basis for good will? Did the angels speak the truth? Did he who lay in the sweet straw of the manger amid the barnyard noises bring into the world a flowering promise that lives and grows in the hearts of men amid even the bitter passions of this hour?

We say he did. We who celebrate his birth state that he did. And how strongly do we feel it?

Suppose that each of us could write a sincere and searching letter to someone—average as ourselves—in Russia, a letter to those who are the victims of a cruel history and an ugly system which has turned out the lights of Christmas. Who knows what good we might accomplish could we but establish intimate communications with these people? I'd like to write such a Christmas letter to all the plain, afraid, average men who live in Russia. And here is what I'd say:

"DEAR IVAN: I've been thinking about you. I've been wondering how you were. Guess it must be mighty cold over there. It's been downright chilly here, in fact. Hope you've got a nice, warm place for the wife and kids.

"We're feeling pretty warm inside right now. It's Christmastime. You see, Ivan, a lot of us have the belief that God himself came to earth in the person of a man and taught that all of us should love each other. That may sound a little silly to you, maybe a bit overly sentimental. Anyway, that's what we celebrate at Christmas.

"Let me be painfully frank about this thing, Ivan, and admit that I haven't been feeling very kindly toward you lately. Guess you haven't felt exactly good about me, either. Truthfully, I suppose we've both been a little bit afraid. For one thing, we believe in entirely different economic systems. Now, I'm convinced that our system of capitalism or free enterprise is the best. But if you don't like it, Ivan, I certainly don't want to force it on you. That comes under the heading of your own business.

"Why can't we just look at this thing straight and agree that we have a healthy competition going on between us to prove which system can do a better job for its people—and that neither one of us is going to change just to suit the other?

"If we could agree on that, then maybe we could agree to a moratorium on trying to force the rest of the world to copy either one of us. Oh, I don't mean we wouldn't keep on telling people how great we think our system is, nor expect you to stop saying how well you like yours if you really do. But there just isn't any sense in trying to cram it down their throats. With armies, I mean. Starting wars and getting a lot of people killed. Why can't we just let them look at both of us, and listen to both of us, and then make up their own minds?

"You know, this military business can get out of hand. That's why we're both a little nervous, isn't it? And here's the reason, the big thing we have in common—I've got kids, Ivan. And so have you. My kids mean more to me than anything else in all the world. Surely you feel the same way about yours. Now there just isn't an ounce of sense in our horsing around and acting like plain fools and arranging things so that our kids will have to be killing each other someday. My kids are thinking about Christmas, Ivan. Little starry-eyed things, they're not mad at you or at anybody.

"You know what, Ivan? We folks over here are spending right at $45 billion this year on armaments. That's because we're scared of what you'd do if we didn't. I don't know quite what your folks are spending on this sort of thing, and I don't expect you do, either, but I figure it's just about the same as we're spending.

"Tell you what I'd do, Ivan. I'd make a binding contract with you. We'll cut down ours if you'll cut down yours. Now, of course, it would all have to be open and aboveboard, right on the top of the table, or no go. But I'm willing, if you are. We could start out easy.

"Let's do it this way. We'll cut 10 percent from our military expenditures this year if you'll do the same thing. Right out on the top of the table, now. We'll take $4½ billion out of our military spending this year if you'll do the same thing, match it dollar for dollar. We'll both put our money into the same fund. That'll make $9 billion for the first year.

"If the deal holds, we'll double it next year. We'll both cut our current military budget by another 10 percent, and each of us will put up $9 billion next year. That'll make a total of $27 billion in the fund.

"Want to help mankind, Ivan? Well, here's your chance. Here's your chance to help mankind and get rid of your fears at the same time. You like 5-year plans, so I'll make you a 5-year plan. Let's keep this up at the second year's rate for 3 additional years, and we'll have put a total of $81 billion into this fund between us at the end of 5 years. Neither one of us will have missed it, because it will have come out of what we'd otherwise have been putting into weapons which would just have made both of us more nervous.

"We could make an $81 billion gift to humanity, Ivan.

"Do you know how much $81 billion is? Well, it would build and equip a brandnew $2 million hospital for every city of 10,000 or more in the world. Our medical experts say that with $4½ billion they could absolutely eradicate malaria, typhoid, smallpox, yellow fever, and leprosy from the face of the earth. It would build 120,000 high schools or 250,000 elementary schools. It would build and stock 250,000 first-class libraries and it would provide 20 million 4-year college scholarships. It would build 20 million modern homes to replace the world's infested slums. It would build almost a million miles of modern roads—enough to circle the earth several times. Take any combination of these benefits you like—it still adds up to a whole lot more sense than spending this money on the implements that kill and destroy rather than those that build and ennoble and improve.

"Then, after 5 years we could slack off. We could reduce our contributions to the Christmas fund and give some tax relief to the folks who have been carrying the burden for so many years—yours as well as ours. Think of it, Ivan. Imagine what the effect would be in Russia if just 20 percent of all the money now being spent on military hardware were being plowed back into the economy and spent on the merchandise of peace. Think what it would mean in terms of automobiles and homes and household appliances.

"It's a wonderful dream, isn't it, Ivan? It could be a reality if we would only play fair and square with each other and do away with needless secrecy. Of course, you'd have to know that we weren't cheating. You'd be entitled to know it, just as we'd be entitled to proof of your compliance. We could use the United Nations organization to inspect and police our operation to insure good faith on both our parts. We'd have to open up our borders and let one another come and look—but what would there be to fear if we both were playing straight?

"You know, Ivan, we could give the world the greatest Christmas present since the first Christmas, 1,959 years ago. We could really bring tidings of great joy and, for the first time in two milenniums the greatly troubled people of this old world of ours could obey the angels' injunction: 'Fear not.'

"That would be the best part, that everybody could gradually stop being afraid. If we ever got together on this we could make all the old hatreds and fears and misgivings vanish like hot breath on a looking glass.

"Think it over, Ivan. We've both been trying the other way long enough. Think it over carefully. And, meanwhile, have yourself a merry Christmas.

"Sincerely,

"JIM."

Whimsy? Perhaps. Perhaps there is no way effectively to get such a message through to Ivan, insulated as he is by curtains of iron. Maybe such a plan, offered by our President, could form the basis for a major breakthrough in the diplomatic stalemate. If such a sincere and honest message could be broadcast to Ivan through the Voice of America, it might do some good. At worst, it could certainly do no harm.

Citizenship Role in American Political Life

OF
HON. JOSEPH S. CLARK
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Wednesday, January 14, 1959

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an address delivered by the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] at a dinner meeting of the National Conference on Legislative Education, held in Schenley Hall of the University of Pittsburgh on November 14, 1958, on the subject "Citizenship Role in American Political Life."

Senator RANDOLPH'S remarks on this challenging topic were both thought-provoking and profound, and I know that his many friends who missed the opportunity to hear him speak at the University of Pittsburgh will welcome the opportunity to read the speech which he delivered there in November.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITIZENSHIP ROLE IN AMERICAN POLITICAL LIFE

(Address by JENNINGS RANDOLPH, U.S. Senator, West Virginia, at dinner meeting of the National Conference on Legislative Education, Schenley Hall, the University of Pittsburgh, Nov. 14, 1958)

I am deeply grateful for the opportunity to participate in this conference and to be a party to the development of what may well become a fresh and significant contribution to the political process.

It is particularly appropriate that this exercise in political groundbreaking, so to speak, is being initiated by the United Steelworkers, whose tradition for responsible unionism was so significantly expressed in the life and work of the late Phillip Murray. And if these sessions are successful in bringing forth a marriage between the academic and scholarly discipline of political theory and the practices of political action in organized labor, then it will have moved further toward the goals that Mr. Murray envisioned.

You have asked me to discuss tonight the question of the "Citizenship Role in American Political Life." This is a topic that one must face with some awe and humility—especially when addressing such a distinguished body of practitioners and students of the art of politics. But this is a topic on which I have had some occasion to reflect—particularly during the past few months when I have been meeting the citizens of my own State at a somewhat accelerated pace. I shall later bring to bear some of the experiences of these past few months on the questions that will arise in the examination of our problem.

But first, the problem must be defined. And since the role of the citizen in a dynamic society must change with the altering structure of society, we might best take a brief historical glance at certain of the assumptions that underlie our view of the matter. I propose to offer nothing new on the subject, but merely to establish a context within which to approach the problem.

For this purpose I believe we can agree that the role of the American citizen was first most clearly expressed in the writings of Thomas Jefferson. Here was developed the view of the American citizen as the independent freeholder, jealous of his own integrity and independence, informed on matters of public concern, and capable of exercising reasoned judgment in the light of this information. The underlying assumption of this view was that man acts of his own free will, guided by the light of innate reason, and that all men are potentially capable of exercising reason.

During the 18th century and for the first half of the 19th century, this typical American citizen found himself in a society which was predominantly rural and agrarian. And with the continual advancement of the frontier there existed in general a harmony between the public interest and the interests of the individual citizen. We need not cavil at the truth of this picture in every instance. This, I believe, is in general a fair sketch of the surrounding conditions and the basic assumptions of the historic image of the American citizen. This is still the image that governs much of the political thought and rhetoric of today. But what of the change from the conditions that gave birth to this image?

Beginning with the great immigration waves of the 1840's and continuing with the industrialization of the North after the Civil War, American civilization underwent a major reconstruction. The conditions of life changed from the rural and agrarian society to an increasingly urban and industrial one. I suggest that we have not yet accommodated ourselves to this change. We have not yet fashioned the new symbols and techniques with which to organize political life; we have not yet clarified the assumptions on which must be based the new citizenship role called for by this change.

Much of the confusion in political thinking today, even perhaps much of the so-called apathy of the voter, stems from this failure—from the failure to establish symbols and attitudes relevant to contemporary circumstances.

Let me illustrate with reference to my recent campaign experiences in West Virginia: after speaking to literally hundreds of audiences, the one characteristic that most impressed, and I might say, most troubled me as well, was the almost complete lack of people under 30. Wherever I went—whether in mining areas, in the farming areas, or in the industrial areas—I experienced the same situation—audiences composed largely of the middle aged and elderly. In part, of course, this was due to the fact that the predominant campaign issues in West Virginia were economic ones—unemployment, recession, and inflation. And these are, of course, felt more keenly by older people and those with families.

But I believe there is another and perhaps deeper reason. During the primary campaign I met an alert and lively gentleman by the name of Charles L. Watkins, in Shinnston, W. Va. Mr. Watkins, a semi-invalid, who is more than 97 years young, informed me that in 76 years he had never missed voting in an election, and that he would make this one as well even if he had to take an ambulance to the polling place. Mr. Watkins is only the most dramatic example I encountered—but there were others as well.

What I am suggesting is that these citizens formed their commitments to political participation at a time when the political process was meaningful to them. They have since maintained the habit and the identification.

Somehow we have failed with our young people. We have failed to communicate to them the significance of the vote—the meaning of the franchise of freedom. Now, I am not afraid of the misuse of the ballot; a poor or unwise vote can be corrected the next time at the polls. But I do fear the nonuse of the ballot—the increasing withdrawal and isolation of the individual from the political processes, and especially as it is exhibited among our younger folks.

The failure to which I refer is a failure for which many of us bear a measure of responsibility—the politicians and public officials who too often avoid the direct issue rather than address the challenging problems that confront us, the segment of the press and communications industry which often emphasizes the sensationalism of charges and countercharges rather than the meaningful interpretation of events, and the many teachers and intellectuals who hold to the notion that politics should be shunned.

All of these have been instruments in our default—the default to communicate to the individual citizen the drama of the most important political experiment in history and his role in it.

This failure is characteristically dealt with in terms of the lack of interest of the voter. And we all recall, I am sure, the closing days of the recent campaign, when the leaders of one of the parties took themselves out to bestir the people. The resulting rhetoric, I believe, generated considerably more heat than light and apparently had small effect on the turn of events.

I would suggest, therefore, that the problem is not primarily one of apathy, but of confusion. And to define the problem as one of confusion rather than apathy is to prescribe a radically different cure. On the one hand, we attempt to launch a crusade to the roll of drums and the blare of trumpets; on the other hand we attempt to dispell the confusion in the mind of the individual and thereby enable him to identify his own interests with the policies and principles set forth by the respective parties and candidates.

It is, therefore, essentially a problem in communication. I have indicated what is considered to be one of the chief sources of this problem—that we are continuing to try to communicate in terms of a world that no longer exists and on assumptions about human behavior that we know are no longer valid. The Saturday Evening Post cover picture is no longer an accurate portrayal of the conditions of American life—nor is the notion that the individual is necessarily guided by the light of innate reason.

I would go further and submit the opinion that another, though related, source of this confusion emerges from the increasing mechanization and specialization of modern life. Although the individual citizen today is caught up in a vast web of associations—legal, commercial, social and personal—he finds no general community of values which he can share. He finds no consensus with which he can achieve harmony and direction and purpose in his contact with public affairs.

Participation in political life first requires this identification with and sharing of some community of values. But it is this very relationship which is being eroded and chipped away by the growing complexity and specialization of modern life.

The once relatively simple functions of government to which the individual could easily relate have necessarily grown and expanded into a bewildering and complex variety of activities. In the process the individual, whose own integrity as a person is under constant assault, becomes increasingly detached and isolated from the political forces that govern his own affairs.

It would seem, therefore, that we must develop mediating institutions that can bridge the gap—restoring both a sense of wholeness to the individual and a means of enabling him once again to participate in political affairs. Such institutions must, however, embrace a certain consensus of values.

We have such organizations in embryonic form if we wish to consider the voluntary associations that devote themselves to promoting such worthy aims as forestry, conservation and preservation of natural resources. These, as well as the more specifically political action groups, throughout the range of the political spectrum, all function in some measure to fill the vacuum between the citizen and the formal political structure.

However, in a larger way, the labor unions can become such mediating institutions. With the growing concern for union welfare, recreation and educational programs, unions can become increasingly the kind of institutions which will enlist the individual's loyalties over a wide range of values. They can thus assume even more fully their legitimate function of promoting the valid interests of their members.

Let me remark, in passing, that I am not one to whom the term "special interests" necessarily has evil connotations. The American Federal system is based upon the constant reconciliation of conflicting interest groups. As Arthur Fisher Bentley pointed out 50 years ago in his "The Process of Government."

"Logrolling is * * * in fact, the most characteristic legislative process. When one condemns it in principle, it is only by contrasting it with some assumed pure public spirit which is supposed to guide legislators, or which ought to guide them, and which enables them to pass judgment in Jovian calm on that which is best for the whole people. Since there is nothing which is best literally for the whole people, group arrays being what they are, the test is useless, even if one could actually find legislative judgments which are not reducible to interest-group activities. And when we have reduced the legislative process to the play of group interests, then logrolling, or give and take, appears as the very nature of the process. It is compromise, not in the abstract moral form, which philosophers can sagely discuss, but in the practical form with which every legislator who gets results through government is acquainted. It is trading. It is the adjustment of interests."

I suggest that this is at the heart of the American political process, and it is precisely this element of compromise that gives our political institutions their flexibility and durability cast.

Acknowledging, then, that special interest groups are a characteristic and essential part of mediating between the individual and the formal political structure, liberals as well as others can view favorably the growing concern in business organizations and the chamber of commerce for increased political activity of their members. For the more concrete experience that members of the business community have in practical politics the less likely they are to be critical of those who devote useful careers to the public service.

However, I cannot emphasize too strongly that politically active interest groups—whether labor unions, the chambers of commerce, trade associations, or whatever—do a grave disservice to the democratic process when they engage in wild charges of conspiracy and call for a war of extermination between the two major parties.

We had something of this (if you will pardon me for a slight partisan comment) in the closing days of our campaign in West Virginia, as well, I understand, as in some of the other States. I refer, of course, to the opposition party's innuendo that the Democratic Party has become the captive of Walter Reuther and COPE. In reply to such irresponsible nonsense I stated then and repeat now that I am mindful of the money and the support that we have received from the voluntary contributions of organized labor. And when I say that the philosophy of the Democratic Party reflects Main Street while that of the Republican Party mirrors Wall Street, I do not therein imply that either party is a captive of certain interests.

It is simply that the Republican Party, and its antecedents, the Whig and the Federalist Parties, have customarily identified the chief function of government as the protection of property interests, while the Democratic Party has sought to distribute the fruits of our society to the widest possible number of interest groups—workers, farmers, small businessmen, etc.

In closing, let me summarize by saying that we may as well recognize the fact of bigness in American life—big government, big labor, and big business. But with this, we must find the means and the techniques to prevent the individual man and woman from being lost in the shuffle. I have suggested some tentative lines that we might explore. I am confident that the papers that will follow during the rest of this conference will lay out other fresh and creative avenues. But I believe that all persons professionally concerned with government, whether in public office, in teaching, or in the labor movement, must guard always against the danger of converting the means of government into their own ends; for the only proper end of a democratic form of government is always and ultimately the safeguard and enhancement of the values of the free citizens.

Statement by Secretary of State John Foster Dulles Before Senate Foreign Relations Committee

OF

HON. ALEXANDER WILEY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, January 14, 1959

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the statement made today by the Honorable John Foster Dulles, Secretary of State, before the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY THE HONORABLE JOHN FOSTER DULLES, SECRETARY OF STATE, BEFORE THE SENATE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 14, 1959

I. INTRODUCTION

The world is today changing more rapidly than ever before. But the fact that much is changing does not mean that everything has changed. There are certain values, certain principles, that are enduring. Among these are the concepts of individual human dignity and the supremacy of moral law.

In a changing world our task is to strive resolutely that change shall increasingly reflect the basic principles to which our Nation has, from its origin, been dedicated.

II. OUR BASIC PURPOSES

1. At a time when war involves unacceptable risks for all humanity, we work to build a stable world order.

2. We seek for general acceptance of the concept of individual dignity which will lead to the spread of responsible freedom and personal liberty.

3. We seek that the free nations shall attain a more rapid rate of economic growth, so that their independence will be more secure and vigorous and so that there will be greater opportunities for cultural and spiritual development.

III. THE PRIMARY THREAT

The Soviet Union and Communist China are expanding their economic and industrial power at a very rapid pace. They do so by a system which combines governmental rule of all labor with imposed austerity. This makes it possible greatly to accelerate capital developments.

There is emphasis, too, on quality. A spectacular product of Soviet material accomplishment was its recent space probe. In this field, the United States is still trying to catch up and make up for the head start of the Soviets. Our space accomplishments during the past year justify the belief that we are making good relative progress.

The Chinese Communists seem to be going into a dark night of massed regimentation and forced labor. What they call the great leap forward is in reality a tragic fall backward into the abyss of human slavery.

Asian nations are experiencing one aspect of Communist economic development: The Communist tactic of flooding their market places with goods at less than prevailing prices. This has widespread effects, some of which reach into our own country. As one example only, the dumping of cotton textiles in southeast Asia has reduced Japanese exports in that area and is already reducing exports of cotton from the United States to Japan. As Communist economic power grows, we must anticipate and plan for further shocks to the free world economic structure from the Communist trade offensive.

Communist economic methods involve costs in human privation and misery that, for us, are not only repugnant but completely unacceptable. We believe that over the long run such a process must inevitably be altered. Already there are indications that the Soviet leaders are beginning to realize this. There is some scaling down of their heavy industry ambitions. They are beginning to heed demands by workers and peasants for more leisure and for a greater share in the fruits of their labor. Peoples sufficiently educated to operate a modern industrial state may be expected also to acquire the desire for freedom and the capacity to get it. History gives us good reason to believe that the Soviet peoples will not indefinitely submit to dictatorial rule by the International Communist Party leadership. It would appear that the Communists will encounter difficulties increasing in the long run.

But for the short run—and this may be a period of years—the situation is full of danger.

That means that we may face a period even harder than we have become used to. To get advantage from time we shall have to stand on our course. We shall need the national will to stand firm in the face of aggressive threats and probings from the Sino-Soviet bloc. We shall need to make whatever unusual sacrifices may be necessary. People respond to this kind of demand when they understand that a temporary emergency requires it. But these burdens seem to grow heavier the longer they must be borne during a period of relative peace. Our people will need to show what freedom can mean in terms of self-sacrifice and self-discipline; and in terms of fortitude and perseverance.

IV. WORLD ORDER

Let me speak now about world order. This requires an elimination of the use or threat of force to accomplish international change. This was always a bad method. It has become an intolerable method because the force at man's disposal could now practically obliterate human life on this planet.

The United States and other free world nations have, by their conduct, done much to establish, for themselves, the principle of the renunciation of aggressive force; and they have shown their ability and will to deter such use of force by others.

At the time of the Suez affair and the Israeli-Egyptian hostilities, the United Kingdom and France, and then Israel, responding to the overwhelming opinion of the United Nations, withdrew their armed forces and accepted a United Nations solution. This may well prove to be a historical landmark.

During the past year the United States and its partners have further shown their opposition to change through force or the threat of force.

When Lebanon and Jordan seemed threatened from without and appealed to the United States and the United Kingdom for emergency aid, we responded with promptness and efficiency. When the emergency was relieved by United Nations action, we promptly withdrew our forces.

Throughout the world small nations felt a profound sense of reassurance.

In the Far East the Chinese Communists, with Soviet backing, initiated military action designed, as they put it, to expel the United States from the western Pacific. We stood beside the Republic of China as it resisted what seemed the preliminaries of that attack. Our free world associates generally supported our position that change in that area should not be effected by force of arms.

The Government of the Republic of China itself made a notable contribution when, last October, it declared that it relied primarily upon peaceful principles and not upon force to secure the freeing of the mainland. This courageous and statesmanlike act has strengthened the free world's cause in the western Pacific.

Now in Berlin we face an effort to expel the small western contingents in West Berlin. Their presence constitutes an indispensable safeguard to the freedom of that city. The NATO powers, at their December meeting, unanimously vowed that such expulsion should be resisted.

Step by step, discernible progress continues to be made in consolidating a system of collective security which will effectively operate to exclude the use of force to effect international changes.

The mutual security arrangements which we have with free world countries no longer assume the aspect of mere military alliances. They are the framework of consultative processes that, day by day, are steadily reforming the society of free nations.

In primitive and frontier societies, security is on an individual basis. Each householder defends himself by his own means. That primitive formula is now obsolete domestically. It is becoming obsolete internationally. Many free nations combine to help each other. The resulant power is not a power which can be or would be used for any aggressive or nationalistic purpose. It is a power dedicated to the common welfare as mutually agreed.

The United States has repeatedly made clear—and I said this again at the last December NATO meeting—that we regard our own military power as being a trust for the benefit of our free world partnerships; that we are ready to make known to all the defensive purposes and circumstances under which that force might be used; and that we shall heed in this respect the advice and counsel of our partners just as we would expect them to heed our advice and counsel with respect to the international use of their force.

Thus, out of what may originally have been conceived primarily as military alliances, there is developing an international structure which provides collective security on the basis of organized and continuous collective consultation. That is something new in history.

I might add that accomplishment is not always easy given the variety of national development and national viewpoints. Nevertheless the free world practice in this regard constantly grows in efficiency.

World order is not, however, assured merely by the elimination of violence. There must be processes of peaceful change. These, too, are rapidly developing within the free world. The General Assembly of the United Nations is a forum where these needs find effective expression. The General Assembly does not have the power to legislate change. But it has a capacity to induce change, at least in the case of governments which have respect for, and are responsive to, world opinion.

The peace of the free world is not a peace of political stagnation or a peace which sanctifies the status quo. It is a peace characterized by peaceful change reflecting new human aspirations and potentialities.

There is, of course, need not only for processes which permit of peaceful change, but there is equally a need for stability in adherence to basic values, including that of respecting international agreements and treaties. This requires that, unless international law and treaty engagements are changed by common agreement, they should be respected.

There has not been as great a development of international law and recourse to judicial processes as would be desirable. The United Nations General Assembly Committee on the codification of international law has made little progress. Some significant progress in law development was made at the recent Law of the Sea Conference, and that Conference will be resumed in 1960. Inadequate use has been made of the International Court of Justice. As the President said last week in his State of the Union address, we envisage further steps to encourage the greater use of that Court.

In such ways as I describe progress is being made toward establishing a world order where peace rests, not on mere expediency or on a balance of power, but on a basis of sound institutions.

This evolution is not spectacular and rarely considered "news." What attracts attention are the aggressive probings of the Communists and the free world reactions thereto. That gives the impression that our foreign policy consists primarily of reacting to Communist initiatives.

Nothing could be further from the truth. The fact is that day by day, month by month, and year by year, we are building, quietly but steadily, in the United Nations, in NATO, in the OAS, in SEATO, and other organs of consultation, the solid foundations of an international order based upon justice and law as substitutes for force.

The Communist rulers do not share in this effort to build a stable world order based upon justice and law. International communism avowedly seeks worldwide dictatorship. The concept of justice is alien to the Communist creed, and law, in our sense of that word, is unknown. The free world and Communist concepts are mutually antagonistic.

This, however, does not mean that there cannot be useful contacts and negotiations with the Communists. We have had many such. We are striving to make progress in the field of disarmament and in that connection deal with the Soviets, particularly in relation to the controlled discontinuance of nuclear weapons tests. We also seek agreement on possible measures which might be helpful in preventing surprise attack.

At Warsaw we negotiate with the Chinese Communists.

We have made clear our willingness to negotiate about the German question.

We have now an agreement with the Soviet Union on cultural and scientific exchanges which is operating satisfactorily. Also important are the visits to and from Russia of influential citizens.

President Eisenhower urged this in his letter of February 16, 1958, to the then Soviet Premier. Following this initiative, there have been useful visits on both sides, and we are glad that the First Deputy Premier of the Soviet Union, Mr. Mikoyan, is now here learning about our country. We would like to see a broader exchange of students. We believe that in such ways false premises and miscalculations can be reduced in the interest of peace.

V. THE INEVITABLE MOVEMENT TOWARD FREEDOM

I turn now to our second major purpose.

One of the strongest forces working in the world today is the movement toward independence and freedom.

This force is notably manifest in Africa. Here change is rapid, new states are arising almost overnight. This great continent presents a challenge to the United States to do its best to assist the peoples now emerging into independence and new opportunity.

Another such area is our hemisphere to the south. The peoples of Latin America are making clear their determination to control their own destinies. One by one dictatorships have made way for governments more responsive to the popular will.

The worldwide movement toward freedom is accompanied by a growing awareness of the deadly nature of Sino-Soviet imperialism. The leaders of the new freedom are coming more and more to see international communism as an immediate threat to their liberties, not, as some have thought, a mere bogeyman of so-called western imperialism.

The Communists are paying a price for the forced growth of their material power. There is a developing fear in the less powerful nations around the world of the dangerous combination of burgeoning economic and military power with the imperialist drive of the Communists for world domination. This menacing combination brings home with force the threat which, when the Communists were not so strong, was but a matter of vague and largely academic concern.

There has recently been a surprising clarification of understanding around the world of the real purpose of Communist leaders—to subject all the world to the dominant influence and control of international communism, with its primary power centers at Moscow and Peiping.

In the Middle East the deadly designs of communism are now far more clearly realized than a year ago.

In southeast Asia liberty-loving peoples are struggling—and with success—to remain masters in their newly built national homes.

In general, I believe the leaders and peoples of Asia now understand better the sincerity of American policy favoring their independence and our willingness to support unconditionally their efforts to stay free and do so in their own way, which may indeed be a non-Western way.

In France, we are witnessing an inspiring example of national renewal.

The tide of freedom is running strong in Western Europe as Communist strength there ebbs.

Even in Communist countries there is a powerful and persistent craving for greater national freedom. Yugoslavia has been steadfast against all threats and blandishments from Moscow and has courageously maintained its independence.

Hungary's great effort to throw off its shackles, even though crushed by force, has been an inspiration and a tribute to man's unquenchable thirst for liberty. And throughout the bloc, even in the U.S.S.R., revisionism is a living force and ferment. Moscow considers it a deadly enemy, and with reason.

The pull of freedom is daily manifested in the flow of refugees from the Communist bloc to the free world.

The free people of West Berlin have, during years of uncertainty and danger, been an inspiring beacon light for all those whose liberties have been lost to Communist tyranny. We are determined that this light shall not fail, and that Berlin shall not be engulfed in the Red undertow.

As we look ahead, we see freedom as a predominant force, shaping our 20th century world. As Americans, we have faith that the aspiration, deep within the soul of man, to live freely and with dignity in a just and peaceful world is stronger than all the material forces which the Communists invoke as the pledge and promise of their power.

VI. ECONOMIC PROGRESS

I turn now to our third basic purpose.

We believe that economic progress is a necessary condition of stable and free nations. There must also be acceptance of economic interdependence of nations. No nation can live completely to itself.

Unless and until the less developed areas reach the stage of self-sustaining economic growth, the world as a whole will suffer. For the inhabitants of those areas, an increasing rate of economic development has become an essential condition of free societies. The demand for economic and social betterment is now universal, and if progress cannot be achieved in freedom, it will be sought by methods that jeopardize freedom.

The Communists are fully aware of the universal demand for progress, and they point to the Soviet and Chinese Communist accomplishments in industrialization as proof that their way is better than the way of freedom.

Our aid and investment must continue to support the efforts of the leaders of the developing free nations to sustain their peoples' confidence that economic progress can be attained in freedom.

We have not been alone in providing such support. Other highly industrialized states have made significant contributions.

These industrialized nations have also shown a growing awareness of interdependence among themselves. This is particularly gratifying to us. A common market for Europe was one of the policy objectives stated in the preamble to the European Recovery Act of 1948. Now, after 10 years, the six-nation European common market is a fact. The Western European currencies have become more freely exchangeable and there is a strong movement for broader economic cooperation in Western Europe.

Free world economic progress does not permit complacency or relaxation. It calls instead for renewed effort to increase the forward momentum.

In the years ahead, we must through our trade and financial policies continue to promote recognition and positive use of the benefits of interdependence. These benefits, and the inevitability, of economic interdependence become more clear each year. What is being done in the European Community of Six provides an example and an inspiration for greater economic cooperation elsewhere in the world.

We must continue to apply our will, energy, treasure, and techniques to the problems of the less developed areas. The cause of freedom can be won—or could be lost—in these areas.

VII. CONCLUSION

Let me in conclusion recall the basic purposes underlying our policies:

1. The renunciation of aggressive force and the substitution of collective institutions of peace, justice, and law among nations;

2. Promotion of the concept of human dignity, worth, and freedom;

3. Stimulation of economic growth and interdependence to create enlarged opportunities for realization of cultural and spiritual values.

These goals are not attainable in a few years, but will require decades and, perhaps even generations. Why is this so? We are but one nation among nearly a hundred sovereignties, and but a scant 6 percent of the world's land surface and population. Our foreign policy is not something we can enact into world law or dictate to other peoples. It means rather constant adjustment to forces which, though beyond our control to direct, we can influence through wise statesmanship and adherence to sound principles. With our immense wealth and power, and even more because of our spiritual heritage of faith and freedom, we can exert a shaping influence on the world of the future.

The price of failure would be the destruction of all our other national objectives. While mustering all our resources, both material and spiritual, we must press on with courage to build surer foundations for the interdependent world community of which we are part. This will call for austerity and sacrifice on the part of all. We must put first things first.

Our purpose, ultimately and at all times, should be to use our great power, without abusing or presuming upon it, to move steadily toward lasting peace, orderly freedom, and growing opportunity. Thus do we achieve our constitutional purpose "to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

Science and Freedom: The Continuing Challenge

OF

HON. HENRY M. JACKSON

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, January 14, 1959

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, at the November 1958 Conference of NATO Parliamentarians in Paris, important recommendations were unanimously agreed upon to further improve the State of science in the NATO Community.

These recommendations are embodied in the report of the Scientific and Technical Committee entitled "Science and Freedom: The Continuing Challenge."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the address which I delivered as Chairman of the NATO Scientific and Technical Committee in presenting the report to the Conference on November 17, 1958, together with the text of the report itself.

There being no objection, the address and report were ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

ADDRESS BY SENATOR HENRY M. JACKSON, PRESENTING THE REPORT OF THE SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL COMMITTEE TO THE NATO PARLIAMENTARIANS' CONFERENCE ON NOVEMBER 17, 1958

Only one out of every seven people in the world is a member of our North Atlantic Community. We occupy only a small fraction of the lands of the earth. Our Community's soils are not uniquely fertile. Our mineral wealth is not uniquely great. Yet our Community, small in size and numbers, has created the civilization which has dominated world history for the past thousand years.

All other societies and cultures of the past have been parochial. Their imprint has fallen on only one race, one religious group, or one limited geographical area. But the influence of the Old World Community has spread to every continent. We in North America are actively aware of this influence in our progress.

All civilizations of the past have grown and flowered, and then withered. But our own Community has so far escaped dissolution and decay.

There is only one common denominator to societies which have perished—their failure to adapt to change. The root cause of dissolution is never found in material things; it is found in matters of the mind. Nations or communities which meet new problems with new solutions and new ideas endure. Those which do not go under.

Think back to 13th-century China. The China of Marco Polo was more prosperous than the Europe of Chaucer. It had a magnificent educational system, which produced superb scholars and civil servants. But that system was based on the notion of an unchanging and already perfectly ordered society. It found its perfect expression in the Great Wall of China.

Yet the Great Wall could not keep out the ideas of the scientific and industrial revolution. Unable to resist Western technology, unwilling to adapt to it, the China of old slowly disintegrated.

In the meanwhile, our Atlantic world was eagerly embracing the revolutionary ideas of the new science. It was translating the ideas into machines which let 1 man do the work of 10. It was exporting science and technology to every corner of the earth. Science and the Atlantic world became almost synonymous.

More than any other single factor, it is the scientific leadership of our community which has created our world political and economic leadership. Through science, we have attained the world's highest standard of life. Through it also, we have built armaments which have canceled out our weakness in numbers.

But today, the very science which has made our community prosperous and strong threatens us mortally.

Once, because of our head start, our Atlantic world possessed a near monopoly of science and technology. While we did, our world leadership was almost guaranteed. But our monopoly of scientific and technical knowledge is over.

The two overriding challenges of our time are the tremendous growth of science and technology in the Soviet Union and the determination of the economically underdeveloped areas to raise their standards of life. We must find new solutions for these new problems.

The Soviets are resolved to surpass us scientifically, because in so doing they could surpass us industrially and politically as well. The Soviet Union continues to graduate scientists and engineers at a rate twice our own. It continues to raise its industrial output twice as fast as ours. It continues to close the gap in advanced weapons systems. Make no mistake: we are locked in a stern competition.

The peoples of Asia and Africa are spectators to this contest. They are determined to secure, as quickly as possible, the fruits of science—industrial progress, lightened burdens, and richer lives. They are told by Moscow that their only chance to industrialize quickly lies in following the Soviet example. Moscow is consciously and deliberately wooing the uncommitted peoples with trade and aid—ready to snap the trap shut when the time comes.

Since long before sputnik, wise men have warned that science and technology in our Atlantic world are moving forward too slowly to keep pace with the challenges of our time. The danger is present and clear, and our problem is threefold. We are not graduating enough scientists and engineers. We are not producing enough uniquely gifted talents—the great scientific pathbreakers. And we are wasting precious talent by not employing it efficiently. As a result, it hangs in the balance whether we can continue our dynamic economic growth, meet the Soviet challenge, and convince Asia and Africa through help and example that economic progress is in harmony with freedom.

In 1956, almost a full year before the first sputnik, this conference acted. We established a special Committee on Scientific and Technical Personnel; it was my honor to be appointed chairman.

The committee was asked to report to the third annual conference on ways and means of improving the state of science within our community.

When our conference met in Paris last November, the committee made specific recommendations for positive action by the member governments and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization itself. The committee report was adopted by the third conference, and forwarded to the North Atlantic Council, the member governments, and other interested bodies including the OEEC.

A year has passed since we made our report. This has been a period of solid accomplishment. New drive has been given to our scientific effort. We are now on the right road and traveling in the right direction.

One year ago, the general public scarcely knew there was a scientific manpower problem. Today, our citizens, acting through the civic and community organizations, are helping solve it.

A year ago, the member states were just beginning to grapple with the problem. Today, for the most part, they have programs of remedial action well under way.

A year ago, consideration of the problem within NATO was still in the study stage. Today, NATO possesses new and unprecedented regional machinery in this field. A full-time science adviser and a Science Advisory Committee are now hard at work, helping the NATO Council.

Finally, these past 12 months have seen heartening progress in translating key recommendations of last year's Parliamentary Conference into effective action.

The report now before you gives the details of what has been done concerning these recommendations; permit me to summarize the highlights of the story.

Last year's conference recommended that NATO sponsor and finance a talent development program which would produce annually at least 500 researchers with advanced training in fields of maximum importance for the defense and welfare of our Community. The NATO Council has approved a NATO science fellowship program, based on the recommendation of our conference.

Last year's conference recommended an immediate increase in the number and the variety of advanced summer study institutes within the NATO Community. The NATO Council has just approved a program for partial financial suport of advanced study institutes.

Last year, we recommended that NATO sponsor and finance additional important cooperative training and research projects, which particularly lend themselves to international action. The NATO Science Committee is now actively considering new cooperative projects which might merit NATO support.

Last year we recommended that a NATO Defense Missile Training Center be established. Reinforced by this recommendation, AGARD, in cooperation with SHAPE, has conducted a study of available training range areas and initial steps have been taken to budget funds.

Last year's conference proposed an Atlantic Institute for Defense Studies to conduct operations research on a NATO-wide basis. Since then AGARD and SHAPE have sponsored operations research conferences. We hope these will help point the way to a permanent and broad defense studies institute.

Mr. President, every member of this conference should feel proud that so many of our recommendations have been favorably acted upon, by the NATO Council and by the member governments.

The task now is to build on the solid foundation already laid—to speed up and broaden corrective programs already started, and to find new areas for useful action.

Ever since last year, my colleagues on the Scientific and Technical Committee have continued to give close attention to this problem.

Our recommendations for further action are contained in the committee's report at your desk. This report reflects discussions and correspondence with officials of NATO, SHAPE, and the OEEC. It reflects the valuable counsel of the executive agencies of our countries and of distinguished private citizens, including many of the greatest scientists in the world.

Above all, it reflects a great deal of hard work on the part of my committee colleagues.

Let me summarize our new recommendations:

First, we recommend that the NATO Council look forward to increasing the Science Fellowship program. We believe this program is full of promise, and we are thankful it is under way. Considering the scope of the challenge, however, we think the present plan is too modest.

If the NATO fellowships discover one new giant in the scientific field, or if they give us one new revolutionary scientific idea, they will more than pay their way. We believe a reasonable annual budget would be $8 million, when the program is in full operation.

Second, we recommend that the NATO Science Committee place high on its agenda the formulation of a basic long-range policy to guide NATO research and development efforts.

As NATO gets further into the business of scientific cooperation, we must be sure our resources are not dissipated in too many directions. To achieve decisive results, we need to focus on a few urgent objectives.

The logical group to define these objectives is the NATO Science Committee.

Third, we recommend that, in launching projects for cooperative research, the NATO Council give particular attention to joint programs in three fields: materials research, oceanography, and upper atmosphere and space.

In the materials field, our knowledge has been strained to the limit by recent technological advances. Unless we can achieve early breakthroughs in basic and applied metallurgy, vital peacetime and military projects will be stalled. Much excellent work on materials problems is now underway in Europe and America, but we need a joint program to make the best use of available talent.

In oceanography, the research demands far exceed the skills now available in any one or two of the NATO nations. Despite the fact that the Atlantic Community is essentially a maritime confederation, our understanding of the ocean is still primitive. For example, we have roughly accurate maps for only about two percent of the deep-sea floor. The advent of nuclear-missile firing submarines and the prospect of nuclear commercial transport underline the need for a bold program of oceanographic research—capitalizing on the most expert talent our Community can provide.

Mr. President, almost five centuries ago, the great voyagers of discovery of the Old World found and explored the New World of the Americas. But the greatest voyages of discovery are yet to come. They lie in the upper atmosphere and outer space.

Your Old World, Mr. President, and my New World should now join forces for this greatest adventure of all. We should now explore the world of space together.

Specifically, my colleagues and I recommend that the members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization now undertake a program of peaceful scientific and technical cooperation in upper atmosphere and outer space research, development, and exploration.

The first goal: A satellite for peaceful outer space research, bearing the emblem of the Atlantic Community and circling the earth by 1960.

The scientific problems involved in space technology are enormously difficult and enormously expensive. Only a few members of our Community have been able to afford the great outlays of money and manpower needed to develop and build launching vehicles for satellites.

Yet this is only one part of the total space research problem. The total problem cuts across every scientific discipline. It involves theoretical and applied mathematics, physics, meteorology, chemistry, geology, geophysics, biology, and medicine.

Scientists from every one of our countries possess skills which are urgently needed in space research. Some of the smaller members of our Community, in fact, now lead the world in specialized research areas of crucial importance.

But our problem today is this: We have embarked upon independent and uncoordinated national programs for developing space technology. There is overlapping and duplication of effort. Precious scientific talent is thereby being wasted.

The obviously desirable solution is to establish a mechanism for pooling the talents of all our 15 nations. We already have a foundation for such a joint effort—Prof. Theodore von Karman's Advisory Group for Aeronautical Research and Development. We are already cooperating in aeronautics; a logical next step is to cooperate in astronautics.

The way to start may be by inviting scientists from our entire Community to meet at an early date for the purpose of drafting a cooperative research effort.

As its first goal, this cooperative program might aim at designing an advanced peaceful research satellite which combines the best ideas of our entire scientific Community. This satellite could be sent into space with a launching vehicle supplied by a nation possessing a major missile program. I am informed that it is technically possible to design and launch such a satellite by 1960.

We are now partners on land. We are partners on the sea. We are partners in the air. It is time that we now become partners in outer space.

Mr. President, I sincerely believe that these recommendations are constructive and timely. I trust they will provoke a lively discussion from the floor today.

I cannot close these remarks without sounding a note of warning.

It took sputnik to shock us into taking a fresh look at the state of science in our Community. But we cannot count on being alerted so well again. Our problem now is to stay on the job—day in and day out—even when we do not have providential warnings like sputnik to arouse us. We must not again commit the error of thinking that our Community can remain preeminent in the affairs of men without remaining preeminent in science and technology.

But in avoiding that mistake, we must not err in the opposite direction.

In every generation, there is a passionate minority which thinks it has found a magic solution for the great problems of its time. Think back to Hiram Maxim, the inventor of the machinegun, who said, "It will make war impossible." Think of our libraries, filled with thousands of dusty and now-forgotten treatises, each of which had marvelous formulas for permanent prosperity, and perfect and final harmony among all men.

Suppose our Community remains preeminent in science and technology, suppose we win all the races for discovery for advanced weapons? We can still fail in our quest for security. We may successfully bar the front door, yet if we leave the back door open our adversary can enter by that route.

As Khrushchev puts it: "We do not need war. Peaceful competition is enough * * * we will bury you."

Today the Soviets challenge us across the boards, not only in science and industry, and in military strength, but in culture, languages, standard of living, trade, politics, and diplomacy.

The Science and Technical Committee of this Conference has tackled the immediate and urgent work of improving the scientific skills in our North Atlantic world. But this is only part one of the task confronting our Community. Indeed, in may ways it is the easier part of our job. A second part, and a far more difficult one, is the improvement of our skills in dealing with the most unscientific thing in the world; namely, people.

Take the problem of the underdeveloped nations which are now moving toward self rule and trying to raise their standards of life to Western levels.

Our Community is well equipped to offer these regions the scientific tools they need to bring closer their dream of a decent standard of life. It is far less well equipped to convince these areas that their cause and our cause are in harmony, that their cause and our cause are both part of one larger common cause, dignity and justice for all men everywhere.

It is right and imperative to invigorate the study and pursuit of science and technology within our Atlantic Community. Yet all our cyclotrons, all our atomic reactors, all our wondrous space missiles, all our Nobel prize winners in science will avail us naught unless, at the same time, we invigorate also those skills and vocations which determine how the fruits of science will be used.

We cannot halt the onward sweep of science and technology. New and yet more momentous discoveries altering the face of our world continue to be made at an ever-accelerting rate. Any attempt to stop or slow the clock of science would be wrong, self-defeating, and hopeless.

There is only one solution which realistic men can entertain: To develop skills and wisdom in the social sciences and the humanities which equal the skills and wisdom of our scientists.

If our age is to become a blessing and not a curse we shall need prodigious talent in philosophy, in sociology, in political science, in law, in languages, and in economics. None of these disciplines can safely be left on the sidelines.

Let me cite an example:

Language—the words and phrases of everyday intercourse—has assumed immense symbolic significance in Asia and Africa. There is a great revival of native tongues, they are becoming the language of politics and of commerce.

Yet we are not assuring ourselves even the minimum language skills in working with the emerging nations. There are over 40 important languages of Asia alone for which even our teaching tools are sketchy or nonexistent.

By contrast, Russian universities have ambitious programs in the Asian languages, including Manchurian, Uigur, Telegu, and the Burmese, Vietnamese, Malayan, and Indonesian languages. Some of the Russian grade schools now even instruct 8- and 9-year-olds in Chinese, Hindi, Arabic, Parsi, and Urdu.

One can almost foretell what countries are next on the Soviet calendar of conquest—from their language curriculum.

Meanwhile, our Atlantic Community lumbers along emphasizing the colonial languages, English, French, German, and Dutch.

How unimaginative can we be to try to build a community of interest with the former colonial peoples while our peoples speak mainly the language of the former governing nations.

Or, take one other example; economics. Moscow has declared war on us on the economic front, and the opening battle has begun. Soviet production is sufficient to support a huge arms budget, to meet the minimum demands of the civilian economy and to start major maneuvers in the markets of the world.

The Soviets doubtless desire to defeat our Community without war, if they can. They would prefer to inherit the world, rather than destroy it.

In Khrushchev's own words: "We will make war on you through peaceful trade to see which system is the best."

The Soviets can sell at a loss and buy at a premium when it suits their political purposes—concentrating their fire on the vulnerable economies in the Middle East, southern Asia, and Latin America.

Moscow has already upset world markets for timber, tin, and aluminum—by cut-rate sales. It aims to set ally against ally, friend against friend—its motto: "Divide and disrupt."

Despite the clear danger signals, our Community has barely begun to drag itself into action. Yet there is every prospect that Moscow's capacity for economic warfare will grow steadily in the future.

Obviously, the Soviets have the easier task. They accept no responsibility for making the present world economic system function smoothly and fairly.

How unwise can we be to continue discounting Russia's economic offensive, when it could prove more dangerous than its armaments build-up?

It is true that Europe is making good progress toward a freer trading area. However, in the wider Atlantic framework, article 2 of our treaty is practically forgotten.

The Atlantic Community should (1) affirm that an economic assault upon one of us, is an economic assault upon all of us; (2) rally our creative talents in economics and political science and put them to work on a joint economic strategy; and (3) use NATO-wide arrangements for economic consultations and economic diplomacy.

In conclusion, let me say:

Our conference should continue its energetic efforts to improve the scientific skills of our Community. In addition, this conference should now launch part 2 of its talent program. We should single out high priority needs in the humanities and the social sciences, such as Asian and African languages, and we should come forward with suggestions to remedy the deficiencies.

The great philosopher Whitehead once said it is the business of the future to be dangerous.

It is the business of our Community to welcome that future and to meet its new challenges successfully.

Our rivals pose as champions of the future, but they are in fact defenders of the discredited past. They advocate an outmoded idea which our Atlantic Community rejected centuries ago—that man must choose between material progress and individual freedom.

We are the real champions of the future. We are the bearers of the truly revolutionary idea of our time—that the quest for material abundance and the quest for human freedom are one and the same quest.

Ours is a privileged time. We have been given a historic opportunity to prove the superiority and power of freedom.

SCIENCE AND FREEDOM: THE CONTINUING CHALLENGE

(Report of the Committee on the Provisions of Scientific and Technical Personnel, NATO Parliamentarians' Conference, prepared by Senator HENRY M. JACKSON, United States of America, chairman, and Mr. C. L. Patijn, Netherlands, rapporteur)

INTRODUCTION

The Second Parliamentarians' Conference held in November 1956 established a special Committee on Scientific and Technical Personnel. This committee was requested to submit to last years' conference their findings and recommendations concerning these three topics:

(a) The present situation with respect to the training of scientific and technological personnel in the NATO countries.

(b) The relationship between NATO utilization of the existing potential resources in this field and the utilization of similar resources by the Soviet bloc.

(c) The development of resources of scientific and technological personnel sufficient to enable the NATO countries to maintain their individual and collective capacities to resist armed attack and to continue their economic growth essential to their strength and well-being.

The committee report submitted to the third conference made these general findings:

(a) The scientific revolution has created an unprecedented demand for highly qualified scientists and engineers.

(b) The NATO community now faces a major problem in the form of serious shortages of skilled personnel, and in underemployment of available scientific and technical talent.

(c) There is a real danger that the Soviet bloc may surpass the NATO community in science and technology. This shift in the balance of scientific power could well upset the balance of military power.

(d) NATO would urgently need more trained manpower even if there were no Soviet Union and no defense effort. More and better skills will be needed if the Atlantic nations are to take full advantage of new opportunities for industrial progress and economic well-being, and if they are to continue to be the chief exporters of science and technology to the underdeveloped areas of the world.

The committee report recognized that corrective action was primarily the responsibility of the member states. It found, however, that cooperative measures could also play an indispensable role. The report thereupon made specific recommendations for positive action to be undertaken both by national governments and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The committee report was adopted by the Third Annual Conference and forwarded to the North Atlantic Council, the member governments of NATO, and other interested bodies, including OEEC.

During the past year, the members of the Scientific and Technical Committee have continued to give close attention to this problem, focusing particular interest on progress being made in translating the recommendations of the third conference into positive action. The committee members have profited greatly from discussions and correspondence with officials of NATO, the OEEC, and SHAPE. They have also received invaluable counsel from the executive agencies of their own countries and from many private citizens.

Those who have taken part in the discussions of the Scientific and Technical Committee are:

Senator HENRY M. JACKSON (United States of America), Chairman.
Mr. C. L. Patijn (Netherlands), Rapporteur.
Mr. A. de Meerleer for Mr. Smet (Belgium).
Mr. A. G. Normann (Denmark).
Senator G. Portmann (France).
Dr. G. Kliesing (Germany).
Mr. P. Yokas (Greece).
Mr. O. Watnebryn (Norway).
Viscount Goschen, O.B.E. (United Kingdom).
Brig. O. L. Prior-Palmer, D.S.O. (United Kingdom).
Congressman R. J. CORBETT (United States of America).
Adviser to committee: Mr. Kenneth Mansfield (United States of America).

The chairman wishes to thank his committee colleagues for their extremely valuable contributions to this report, and to acknowledge gratefully the assistance of the executive secretary and staff of the conference.

A YEAR OF ACCOMPLISHMENT

Last year's Parliamentarians' Conference met less than 5 weeks after the first sputnik. The Soviet bloc, not the Atlantic Community, had taken man's first step into outer space. A country barely one generation into the industrial age had surpassed us.

A bewildered North Atlantic Community undertook a great reexamination of its course and destiny.

Much good came of this great appraisal in the realm of science and technology.

Over the past 12 months, significant progress has been made in improving the state of science within the NATO Community. Less has been done than might have been done, but we have made a good beginning.

First, there is now far greater public awareness of the importance of invigorating the study and pursuit of science. Twelve months ago, far too many of our citizens were scarcely aware of the existence of this problem. Over the long run it is our ordinary citizens, not experts, who will determine the success or failure of corrective measures. It is our citizens as parents who must encourage gifted young children to follow careers in science and engineering. It is our citizens as taxpayers who must provide the moneys needed to support remedial programs. We should therefore be immensely heartened by the fact that the general public, acting through civic and community organizations, is now beginning to participate actively in helping attack this problem.

Second, the member states of NATO have broadened the scope and accelerated the pace of national remedial programs.

Of particular importance are programs initiated to increase the supply and training of teachers in technical fields, and to invigorate the study of mathematics and science at the high school and secondary school level.

It has been apparent that the international activities this year have in many cases stimulated useful action at national and regional levels.

Third, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization has set up new and unprecedented regional machinery in the science field. A science adviser and a representative Science Advisory Committee of 15 members are helping the NATO Council launch a scientific and technical program for the NATO area.

At the same time, the OEEC has strengthened its machinery in the scientific education and manpower field. A director of the new Office of Scientific and Technical Personnel and a new Governing Committee on Scientific and Technical Personnel are sponsoring practical activities to improve the quality and raise the number of able men and women in the sciences.

Fourth, solid progress has been made in implementing key recommendations of the Third Parliamentarians' Conference, relating to the provision and utilization of scientific manpower.

(a) NATO science fellowship program: Last year's Conference recommended establishment of a NATO-sponsored and NATO-financed talent development program designed to produce annually at least 500 doctoral degree holders with research experience in the fields of maximum importance for the defense and economic well-being of the NATO Community.

This proposal recognized certain disciplines to be of prime importance, among them, applied mathematics, aero and fluid dynamics, basic electronics, nuclear physics, solid state physics, physical chemistry and metallurgy. The conference believed that a relatively small number of additional trained people of outstanding talent in these key disciplines would have a catalytic effect, accelerating the entire scientific and technological effort of the NATO Community. The suggested program would afford top-level students an opportunity to study abroad at leading centers for their particular disciplines.

The NATO Council has given final approval to a NATO science fellowship program based on the recommendation of the Parliamentarians' Conference and drawing its principal inspiration from that recommendation. (For details see Annex 1—NATO Council's Agreement on NATO Science Fellowship Program.)

The program would cost $1 million for the first year. Tentative plans call for a budget of $4 million annually when the program is in full operation in 4 years. Financial arrangements for the first year have been completed in time to publicize for 1959 fellowships.

(b) Advanced study institutes: Last year's conference recommended that immediate steps be taken to increase the number and variety of advanced summer study institutes within the NATO Community, in order to extend the influence of outstanding scholarly talent in fields now hampered by a shortage of teachers.

The proposal called for a strong program of institutes in such fields as solid state physics, nuclear engineering, applied mathematics, high temperature metallurgy and medicine.

The proposal recognized that the summer study institute has been an important postwar educational development both in North America and in Europe.

These institutes serve various purposes: bring able students into contact with the latest and best thinking in their fields; bring together mature scholars for extended seminars in particular scientific problem areas, or offer refresher courses in science or mathematics to secondary school or college teachers.

Such institutes have distinct advantages: flexibility, inexpensiveness, administration by existing organizations, and an international character.

The OEEC has pioneered in holding summer institutes for high school teachers in the general sciences and mathematics. This year the OEEC sponsored three international institutes for secondary school science teachers; one in England; one in Germany; and one in France. These institutes brought together teachers and supervisors of science teacher courses to develop improved science teaching techniques.

The OEEC is now planning summer institutes during 1959 for science inspectors of high schools, for teachers of science in teacher training colleges, for representatives of high school science teacher organizations, and for science teachers from the small countries who confront special problems in shortages of equipment, etc.

Late last year, the Ford Foundation (United States of America), recognized the importance of the proposed advanced research institute program, and informed that no NATO financing would be available to support institutes as early as the summer of 1958, assisted in an experimental expansion of two already established and well known summer institutes—the French-sponsored summer school of physics at Les Houches, and the Italian-sponsored summer school of physics at Varenna.

In addition, assistance from the Ford Foundation made possible a new 1958 summer institute of solid state physics administered by the Ecole Normale Superieure in Paris. A group of French, Italian, and English physicists have agreed to operate this institute in turn, in successive years, if financing continues to be available.

The NATO Council has now fully approved a NATO program for partial financial support of advanced study institutes, such as the ones at Les Houches and Varenna. (For details see Annex 2—North Atlantic Council's Agreement on NATO Advanced Study Institute program.)

The program would cost $150,000 for the first year. Tentative plans call for an increased budget the following year. NATO financing of institutes will be available for the summer of 1959.

(c) Annual review of scientific and technical education and manpower: Last year the conference asked the NATO Council to initiate the practice of annual reports from member countries on the adequacy of science education facilities, hoping thereby to encourage a speedup in national corrective programs.

This stock taking was proposed especially in view of the growth of population and the demand for education on the part of increasing numbers of people.

The OEEC, with the full concurrence of the NATO Council, is now conducting the first annual review of the country policies in the training of scientific and technical manpower. The review is being carried on in collaboration with the appropriate educational authorities in member countries.

No uniform set of questions is being used, rather each country is asked questions relevant to its special condition and need. It is hoped that this first year the review will discover the more glaring gaps in individual country programs and will identify the more obvious possibilities for practical improvement.

(d) Cooperative project research under NATO sponsorship: Last year the conference recommended that NATO sponsor and finance additional important cooperative training and research projects which particularly lend themselves to international action. The conference was impressed with the outstanding success of the NATO-supported training center for experimental aerodynamics in Brussels, and proposed that this precedent be extended to other areas where cooperative projects could be helpful.

The NATO Science Advisory Committee is now actively considering a number of new cooperative projects which might merit NATO contract support.

Meanwhile, during the last year both the Brussels Aerodynamic Center and the Air Defense Technical Center at The Hague have increased the effectiveness of their programs.

(e) The NATO Defense Missile Training Center: Last year the conference recommended that a NATO Defense Missile Training Center be established to assure the entire NATO community an opportunity for intensive and systematic training in the handling of defensive missiles.

Reinforced by this recommendation, AGARD, in cooperation with SHAPE, has conducted a study of available training range areas. Steps to budget funds for a missile training installation are in a preliminary stage.

Following the 1957 discussions, it became increasingly evident that any NATO missile center would also be useful for the education of the civilian scientific and technical personnel. Such a center might thereby aid our community in establishing a base for the science of astronautics in addition to the primary function of training NATO's defensive missile units.

(f) Atlantic Institute for Defense Studies: Last year the conference recommended the establishment of an Atlantic Institute for Defense Studies which would bring the techniques of modern science to bear on defense planning on a NATO-wide basis. It was suggested that this institute could be responsible to SHAPE.

This proposal recognized that effective defense planning can no longer be improvised. Today, with weapons systems and defense problems becoming more complex, there is increasing need for comprehensive programs of operational research.

The potential benefits to be derived from operational research have become increasingly recognized since our 1957 session, particularly through AGARD and SHAPE efforts in their conduct of conferences on operational research, history, and methods.

We are encouraged by AGARD's recent establishment of a summer study institute in operational research methods, in which all our NATO nations are being invited to enroll students. This first course we understand will begin in the summer of 1959 and will be open to both civilian and military students.

We hope that the experience thus gained will help speed an early decision by SHAPE on behalf of a broad and permanent institute of defense studies.

THE TASK AHEAD

The job before us is to build on the solid foundation laid in the past year—to bolster and expedite remedial programs already started, and to identify new areas where further action is needed.

We believe that the member governments should again be called on by the NATO Council to maintain and enlarge appropriate programs on the national level, looking both to the removal of barriers to talent and to the employment of trained manpower in the most efficient manner.

We believe also that the NATO Parliamentarians' Conference, the NATO Council, the member governments, and all nongovernmental bodies concerned should maintain and enlarge their programs for focusing public attention on the continuing importance of raising the level of scientific excellence within the Atlantic world.

Unless member states come squarely to grips with the problem and unless national programs receive widespread popular support, internatinal measures, however desirable in principle, will be of little worth.

In addition, we make the following specific recommendations for strengthening existing programs and for initiating new programs during the coming year:

1. NATO science fellowship program: It is gratifying that this promising program is now under way, and that the first fellowships will be awarded next year. But we have to measure the size of this program against the challenge. The contemplated annual cost of $4 million, when the program is in full operation, is only half the cost of one long-range bomber, and a tiny fraction of the cost of a single peacetime atomic powerplant.

Thousands of gifted students who could profit by training abroad at key centers for their particular discipline, do not now have the chance to go abroad. A $4 million fellowship program will help immensely. Considering the need, however, a larger program seems justified so that even more of the really able students can obtain the best training available, and at a time in their careers when that training can be most useful.

If this program discovers one truly exceptional mind—a Maxwell, a Fermi, an Einstein, or a Bohr of the coming generation—then our investment will have more than paid off. If it gives the Atlantic community one path-breaking idea we would not otherwise get we will have struck an excellent bargain.

We think that money used to discover and nurture topflight talent is money very well spent.

Therefore, we recommend that the NATO Council look forward to increasing the Science Fellowship Program. We believe a reasonable annual budget would be $8 million when the program is in full operation.

2. Cooperative research centers under NATO sponsorship: Here are three examples of cooperative research programs which are specially needed at this time and which would particularly benefit from the joint action of NATO members.

(a) A NATO center of materials research: Technological advances since World War II, in both peacetime and military fields, have strained metallurgical knowledge to the limit. In many cases further progress cannot be made without major steps forward both in basic and applied metallurgy.

An example: Aluminum is an excellent structural material for subsonic and transonic aircraft, but it cannot withstand the high temperatures met by ultra-high-performance aircraft now being designed. The broader application of molybdenum and columbium is essential. Our knowledge of the properties and behavior of these materials is very meager.

Another example: The phenomenon of nuclear radiation has created an entirely new and crucially important field of metallurgical research. Nuclear powerplant design is now seriously inhibited by our failure to develop economical and practical materials capable of long-life use in the high-temperature, high-radiation environment of nuclear reactors.

Still enother example: One of the major areas of concern in missile development and space research is the reentry problem, which revolves around finding materials which do not disintegrate when traveling through the atmosphere at hypersonic speeds.

Many universities and research centers, both in Europe and North America, now have excellent materials research programs under way. The OEEC is conducting a modest study in the metallurgical field. Yet no full-scale integrated program has been developed which would focus the best talents in the entire Atlantic Community on the really critical technical problems.

The possibilities of such a joint program might well be the subject of a study financed with NATO funds in 1959.

(b) An upper atmosphere and space research program: The technical problems confronting us in the new science of astronautics are immensely difficult. They will grow in magnitude and complexity as we reach further into space and as manned vehicles substitute for manned satellites. Space research and exploration will cut across every scientific discipline—theoretical and applied mathematics, physics, meteorology, chemistry, electronics, geology, biology, and medicine.

Designing and launching a carrier vehicle is an extremely complex undertaking. Large scale experiments in the upper atmosphere and outer space, in fact, might well be regarded as beyond the means of some of member states. As against this, there are numerous less costly but still critically important research projects which do lie within the competence of the smaller members of the community. Space medicine is an example. Fortunately we have among the European nations some of the world leaders in upper atmosphere studies.

Clearly, the scientific challenge in prospect far transcends the resources of even the most technically advanced members of NATO. There is work for all to do, and the job will go forward at maximum speed only if all take part. A cooperative effort in this area would seem eminently worthwhile.

(c) A NATO program for oceanographic research: Viewed in terms of political geography, the NATO Community is essentially a maritime confederation. Its survival depends upon the free transport of materials and peoples across the Atlantic basin and the littoral seas.

In time of peace, the ocean is a vast highway for commerce between the Old and the New World. In time of war, effective control of the ocean would be indispensable.

Although the continents are now giving up their last secrets, and although man has already taken the first step into space, the knowledge of the oceans, which make up three-fourths of the earth's surface, is meager and fragmentary.

Even roughly accurate maps of the deep sea floor exist for only about 2 percent of the total ocean area. We know but little about the properties of the ocean's waters and its bottoms, including the nature of the deep sea currents, the acoustic properties of the water, and the acoustic and magnetic properties of the bottom.

Recently, the advent of nuclear submarines or submarine-launched missiles has exposed the NATO Community to the threat of devastating attack from the sea. An effective system of defense is contingent upon a thorough knowledge of the environment in which submarines operate—the ocean.

Here is another area which appears to be a natural for cooperative research.

We recommend that the NATO Council, in its consideration of projects for cooperative research, give particular attention to the desirability of establishing joint research programs or centers in one or more of these fields; in materials, in upper atmosphere and space, and in oceanography.

(3) NATO policy for scientific research and development: As the NATO Council launches programs of scientific cooperation, including fellowships and advanced research institutes, the need increases for a basic NATO policy of scientific research and development. Without such a policy there is danger that efforts will be dissipated in too many directions and on less critical programs.

It is also essential to avoid overlapping and duplicating research and development, both in peacetime and military fields. Our scientific talent is too limited to be wasted in this way.

It is important to focus on a few of the most urgent objectives to achieve decisive results. A clear overall policy established by the Science Committee would guide member states in the award of NATO fellowships. It would also guide the Science Committee in selecting subjects for advanced research institutes, and in identifying the most promising fields for NATO-sponsored research centers and research grants.

We believe that NATO funds for scientific cooperation should be used to support the healthy evolution of a carefully planned international program for research and development.

Therefore, we recommend that the Science Committee give prompt attention to the formulation of an integrated and long-range policy for scientific research and development in the NATO area.

4. A NATO program to promote the exchange of technical information: A system to facilitate the exchange of technical documentation is believed essential to an expeditious and economically sound NATO research and development effort.

It is recommended, therefore, that an appropriate mechanism be established by NATO to promote the exchange of technical information, studies, and so forth, between the member nations.

THE CONTINUING CHALLENGE

With each passing month and week, the memory of the first sputnik is receding. Yet the need for urgent action is as great as last year.

The Soviet world is determined to reach and overreach our community in scientific and industrial achievement and in advanced weapons. They are bidding for the role of chief exporter of science and technology to critical underdeveloped areas.

And Soviet policy is characterized by infinite patience.

Free nations commonly respond grandly and vigorously to the dramatic challenge, but too often they are weak on the follow-through.

Our problem now is to stay on the job even without the kind of psychological shot in the arm provided by the first sputnik.

But nothing could be more wrong than to believe that we should improve the state of science solely because of dangers from without. We live in an age when all our future hopes for economic well-being go back to successes or failures in our laboratories.

Almost two centuries ago, the industrial revolution which changed the face of the world, was born in our Atlantic Community. That revolution raised standards of life in the Atlantic world to an unprecedented new plateau.

Now we are in a new revolution—the scientific revolution. The destiny of our community in this and the coming centuries will depend upon our imagination and perseverance in devising new solutions to the new problems posed by the scientific age.

ANNEX 1

NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL'S AGREEMENT ON NATO SCIENCE FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM

Note by the science adviser: The accompanying document describes the NATO science fellowship program that has been agreed to by the North Atlantic Council.—(N. F. Ramsey, Palais de Chaillot, Paris.)

NATO science fellowship program

The North Atlantic Council has agreed to establish a NATO science fellowship program with the joint purpose of stimulating the international exchange postgraduate and postdoctoral students of the pure and applied sciences between member countries and of increasing the scientific strength of the NATO alliance.

2. While the emphasis of the program should be on international exchange, it is appreciated that it may be necessary, and even desirable, for students or scientific workers of NATO countries who participate in this program to continue their studies in their countries of origin or in non-NATO countries. It is also appreciated that the stages of education which need to be encouraged may differ in different countries.

3. The fellowship program should be chiefly administered by the appropriate agencies within the member countries of NATO. The selection of students eligible for the program and determination of the magnitude of the stipends should be made nationally. The fellowships should be open to nationals of the participating countries and the selection of students should be made solely on the basis of scientific ability and merit. The recipient of the fellowship or his national group should arrange for the acceptance of fellowship holders.

4. The distribution of the funds by NATO is to be done by a simple formula, as given below. There will be a central organization of modest size in the office of the chairman of the science committee, to supervise the whole operation so that the chairman can report to the committee on the operation of the program. A panel of independent experts will be appointed as consultants to the science adviser to review each year the results of the program and to advise on the methods of operation of different countries. The central organization will assist the national agencies in the exchange of information about practice regarding stipends, standards, etc. Close liaison will be maintained with the AGARD and OEEC exchange and fellowship programs.

5. It is recommended that the distribution of the funds to the member countries should initially be proportionate to the population of the country concerned, with no nation receiving more than 15 percent of the total fellowship funds. This distribution formula should be subject to review by the science committee, which might at a later date recommend a different one to the North Atlantic Council.

6. The council has agreed that for the first year of the program the total amount should be for $1 million.

7. With the above procedure the magnitude of the fellowship program in each country for the first year is as follows:

Belgium	$26,900
Canada	48,300
Denmark	13,180
France	132,400
Germany	150,000
Greece	24,600
Iceland	480
Italy	149,800
Luxembourg	950
Netherlands	33,100
Norway	10,090
Portugal	26,000
Turkey	74,200
United Kingdom	150,000
USA	150,000

ANNEX 2

NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL'S AGREEMENT ON NATO ADVANCED STUDY INSTITUTE PROGRAM

Note by the science adviser: The accompanying document describes the NATO advanced study institute program that has been agreed to by the North Atlantic Council. (N. F. Ramsey, Palais de Chaillot, Paris.)

Advanced study institute program

The North Atlantic Council has agreed that there should be a program for the support of scientific study institutes for advanced or special topics. The highly successful summer institutes at Les Houches and Varenna with intensive lectures and seminars extending over a 2-week to 2-month period are examples of such activities.

2. The council has agreed that during the first year the program will be for $150,000. The distribution of the money is to be made by the office of the science adviser with the guidance of a panel of experts who will be representatives of various aspects of science rather than national representatives.

3. The money for the support of summer study institutes should be used both for direct grants to the institute, partially to cover teaching and administrative costs, and for living and travel expenses of participants from NATO countries. The grants to the summer study institutes should be made as unrestricted grants so as not to influence the policy of the institute nor its selection of students or staff.

4. The method of administration of this program will be reviewed annually.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 15, 1959

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Guy D. Newman, president, Howard Payne College, Brownwood, Tex., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray. Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, before the mountains were brought forth or ever Thou hast formed the earth and world, from everlasting to everlasting Thou art God.

We seek divine wisdom in this hour of great world tension, our Father, because our human wisdom is so limited we cannot meet adequately the exigencies of our time without Thy divine strength.

We are grateful for our Nation. We are grateful for our National Congress, for men and women in places of public responsibility who have proved they are worthy of our trust. God help them to be strong and fearless, undaunted in faith, and help them to realize gratefully that our Nation will remain strong only insofar as it remains Christian and righteous and virile and honorable.

Bless us all, and may this year, if it please God, be the greatest year in our Nation's life, as we seek to find and to follow the great will of Thy great mind.

We ask it in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 12, 1959, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Ratchford, one of his secretaries.

BOARD OF REGENTS, SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of 20 U.S.C. 42, 43, the Chair appoints as members of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution the following Members on the part of the House: Mr. CANNON, of Missouri; Mr. BROOKS of Louisiana; Mr. Bow, of Ohio.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF ARGENTINA

The resolution was agreed to.

OPERATIONS UNDER INTERNATIONAL CULTURAL EXCHANGE AND TRADE FAIR PARTICIPATION ACT OF 1956—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which was read by the Clerk, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the provisions of section 9 of Public Law 860 of the 84th Congress, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the fourth semiannual report of operations under the International Cultural Exchange and Trade Fair Participation Act of 1956.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 15, 1959.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

Mr. SMITH of Virginia, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 19, Rept. No. 2), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That effective from January 4, 1959, the Committee on Armed Services, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized to conduct a full and complete investigation and study of all matters—

(1) relating to the procurement, use, and disposition of materiel, equipment, supplies, and services, and the acquisition, use, and disposition of real property, by or within the Department of Defense;

(2) relating to the military and civilian personnel under the jurisdiction of the Department of Defense;

(3) involving the laws, regulations, and directives administered by or within the Department of Defense;

(4) involving the use of appropriated and nonappropriated funds by or within the Department of Defense; and

(5) relating to scientific research and development in support of the armed services.

The committee shall report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session) as soon as practicable during the present Congress the results of its investigation and study, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable.

For the purpose of carrying out this resolution the committee or subcommittee is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, and to require by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, by arrangement with the leadership, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FEDERAL AID TO SCHOOLS

Mr. COFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFIN. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a bill to provide financial assistance for the support of public schools by appropriating funds to the States to be used for constructing school facilities and for teachers' salaries. It offers the opportunity to give primary and secondary school children the kind of training they need to take advantage of the National Defense Education Act. This is identical to H. R. 22 and other bills which have been introduced on behalf of improved education for our youth.

The introduction of these bills is a healthy sign that the focus of congressional interest is once again returning to the basic need of capital investment in our most vital resource—the minds of our youth. One of the mysteries that would impress a visitor to our shores is how we could be so concerned over facilities for better education in 1957 and yet pass over them lightly in 1958. My hope now is that the klieg lights of sustained concern will center on this issue until adequate progress has been made.

If I have any reservation about any part of this bill, it applies to the "effort index," which will be used to insure an adequate effort on the part of States and communities in providing adequate buildings and teachers' salaries. This is an improvement over the effort index included in previous legislation, because it gives us 3 years in which to put our houses in order. But there is a danger that States with heavy demands for expenditures in the area of old-age assistance, highway construction and maintenance, institutions, and other necessary services may be penalized. The State of Maine has a taxload slightly above the national average, but its expenditures for education have been limited by the peculiar requirements of a sparsely settled State with an abnormally expensive highway construction and maintenance problems and the largest proportion of persons over 65 in the country. I do not want Maine to fall behind in its effort for education. Neither do I want to see it penalized because of conditions beyond its control.

I have initiated a study of this phase of the problem to determine how serious the limitations of the effort index may be. I realize that no bill can be perfect, but we must, I believe, make certain that we do not overlook an area which could undermine the intent of the bill.

There are two ways in which the problem I have described might be approached. The first is to provide a contingency fund to be expended by the Commissioner of Education in areas of special and critical need. The second is the possibility of introducing a factor based on the ratio of per capita tax revenues to per capita income into the formula for the effort index.

Either or both of these approaches may be desirable, and I plan to present such proposals to the Committee on Education and Labor when hearings are scheduled on these bills. For the present, however, I wish to reemphasize the importance of this basic legislation to our total education effort, by placing my name with other colleagues in the list of those who believe in the future of American education.

We all recognize that school buildings do not educate children, and that salary levels do not automatically determine the quality of teaching. However, without adequate teaching facilities, with overcrowded, poorly lighted, unsafe classrooms, children do not have surroundings conducive to study. Substandard salaries drive good teachers out of teaching in too many cases, and shatter the morale of those who remain in the profession.

If we were alone on a planet, we might be able to muddle through on education. Poor educational facilities and inadequate training for our youth would then be unfortunate, but not catastrophic. But today, the stake is more than the individual achievement of young people; the stake is the survival of the free world. If children in a free society do not receive the very best education, then they will not be able to compete with highly skilled youth from the Iron Curtain countries.

We must answer the question: Do we believe in our free system of education strongly enough to give it the support it needs? Or are we token worshipers at the shrine of education, bowing to the image of education but doing nothing to perpetuate its influence?

TRANSPORTATION AND/OR POSSESSION OF EXPLOSIVES IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD in two instances.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, the legislation I have introduced to make it a Federal crime to transport and/or possess explosives in interstate commerce, with the intent or knowledge that such explosives will be used wantonly to destroy or damage any structure, is in line with the requested needs of the Department of Justice. One of the most significant actions that can be taken by this Congress would be the early passage of such legislation so that the law-enforcing arm of the Federal Government could effectively deal with such outrages; and, perhaps more important, I believe the passage of Federal legislation will serve as a deterrent to those who may be contemplating initial or additional acts of violence against public buildings, homes, and places of worship.

The seriousness of the situation has certainly been recognized by this Congress. There is strong congressional support, from all sections of the country, for passage of a Federal antibombing measure. I believe that the many House and Senate Members who have joined in support of legislation similar to, or exactly the same as, that which I have proposed, indicates that neither partisanship nor sectionalism can ever override positive legislation to protect the rights and, indeed, the very lives of our people.

I am confident and hopeful that the immediate need to legislate in this field will bring speedy action by the Committee on the Judiciary, followed by prompt action by this body.

REPORTING OF CERTAIN FINANCIAL TRANSACTIONS AND ADMINISTRATIVE PRACTICES OF LABOR ORGANIZATIONS AND EMPLOYERS

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, on the opening day of this session, January 7, I introduced a measure to provide for the reporting and disclosure of certain financial transactions and administrative practices of labor organizations and employers, to prevent abuses in the administration of trusteeships by labor organizations, to provide standards with respect to the election of officers of labor organizations, and for other purposes.

It is my intention to offer some revisions or amendments and such a revised bill will be presented in the very near future. However, because of the importance of the subject at hand, I felt it necessary to introduce immediately the main substance of this proposal so that the House committee to which it would be assigned would have an early opportunity to consider thoroughly its intent and purpose.

A WORLD OF SCIENTIFIC MIRACLES

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, as Americans we are proud of our industrial and agricultural efficiency. We take pride in the transformation of an untamed frontier into a highly mechanized society. We boast of our superhighways, hydroelectric dams, factories, and science laboratories.

All of these are worthwhile achievements that have brought new opportunities and higher standards of life to the American people. Yet we are haunted by the stubborn fact that just as man cannot live by bread alone, neither can he live by steel, concrete, and petroleum.

The editors of Holiday magazine warned last July that—

> As we pour more and more of our thought and emotion and money into fabrications like the missile, we risk losing contact with our natural environment. The result could be a science going from success to success while we ourselves become more and more out of touch with the great flows of meaning which nature sends out to her creatures. We are already, television help us, well along this road. To go to the end would mean a world of scientific miracles serving a human race full of trivial and deadened personalities.

I believe that the young people of today are the finest generation in our history; but all Americans, young and old alike, need to beware of the corroding effects of life in the age of gadgets. It is entirely possible that automobiles, television, escalators, paved roads, packaged foods, and innerspring mattresses could produce a crop of softies. This is a luxury we cannot afford, either in the face of the Soviet challenge or from the vantage point of our individual enjoyment of life.

In every one of us there is a basic need for the recreation of the human spirit that stems from the interplay between man and nature.

We recognize this need as we seek out the scenic vacation areas of the Nation, or as we push out from crowded metropolitan centers to the surrounding countryside or suburban areas.

Fortunately for us, America is blessed by a bounteous nature. It has always been possible for our citizens to seek out untamed, primitive wilderness areas where at least for a time they could drink to their satisfaction of the joys of nature.

The Nation's wilderness areas provide a splendid opportunity to open the eyes and strengthen the hearts and minds of millions of young Americans. At the same time, older Americans are refreshed by the stimulus of primitive country unmarked by our mechanical civilization.

As the distinguished conservationist, Howard Zahniser, executive secretary of The Wilderness Society, has put it:

> So long as it remains in its natural condition, the wild country of our parks, forests, and refuges will play an ever more vital part as the scene for a great adventure for youth. For a few precious days each year, youngsters can be Indians, trappers, wilderness explorers, and pioneers. Yet, for a lifetime after, such experiences remain to strengthen them as men and leaders of our civilization. (Outdoor America, February 1958.)

During the 1930's, many young Americans found a fresh new appreciation of life through their contacts with wilderness areas in the CCC camps. Scores of these young Americans emerged with stronger bodies, clearer minds, and more wholesome spirits after they had lived for a time in the wilderness.

In the United States, approximately 2 percent of our land area remains in a wilderness state. Most of this is within the public domain—in roadless sections of the national forests, in back areas of our national parks, and in some of our wildlife refuges and Indian reservations.

All the experience of our history points to the certainty that unless we develop a Federal policy for the preservation of our wilderness areas, they will soon be exploited and consumed for other purposes. As Mr. Zahniser has put it:

> If we are to see wilderness preserved, we must preserve it deliberately.

This is the objective of the so-called Wilderness Bill introduced in the 84th Congress, reintroduced in the 85th Congress in revised form, and now further revised and presented in the 86th Congress.

With several of my colleagues, I introduced the bill in the last session of the Congress. On Monday I reintroduced the bill in improved form. The new bill represents a program which I earnestly hope will be enacted into law in the 86th Congress.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill as revised be printed at this point in the RECORD:

A bill to establish a National Wilderness Preservation System for the permanent good of the whole people, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a), in order to secure for the American people of present and future generations the benefits of an enduring resource of wilderness, there is hereby established a National Wilderness Preservation System. As hereinafter provided, this System shall be composed of federally owned or controlled areas in the United States and its Territories and possessions, retaining their primeval environment and influence and being managed for purposes consistent with their continued preservation as wilderness, which areas shall serve the public purposes of recreational, scenic, scientific, educational, conservation, and historical use and enjoyment by the people in such manner as will leave them unimpaired for future use and enjoyment as wilderness.

(b) The Congress recognizes that an increasing population, accompanied by expanding settlement and growing mechanization, is destined to occupy and modify all areas within the United States, its Territories, and possessions except those that are designated for preservation and protection in their natural condition. The preservation of such designated areas of wilderness is recognized as a desirable policy of the Government of the United States of America for the health, welfare, knowledge, and happiness of its citizens of present and future generations, particularly for those uses of such areas that facilitate recreation and the preservation or restoration of health.

(c) It is accordingly declared to be the policy of Congress (1) to secure the dedication of an adequate system of areas of wilderness to serve the recreational, scenic, scientific, educational, conservation, and historical needs of the people, and (2) to provide for the protection of these areas and for the gathering and dissemination of information regarding their use and enjoyment as wilderness. Pursuant to this policy the Congress gives sanction to the continued preservation as wilderness of those areas federally owned or controlled that are within national parks, national forests, national wildlife refuges, or other public lands, and that have so far retained under their Federal administration the principal attributes of their primeval character. It is pursuant to this policy and sanction that the National Wilderness Preservation System is established. The units of this System designated for inclusion by this Act, and those that may later be designated in accordance with its provisions, shall be so protected and administered as to preserve their wilderness character.

(d) In establishing thus a National Wilderness Preservation System to include units within the national forests it is further declared to be the policy of Congress to administer the national forests with the general objectives of multiple use and sustained yield, and in order to carry out this policy the Secretary of Agriculture is accordingly directed to administer the national forests on a multiple-use basis so that all the resources thereof, including the recreational and wildlife-habitat resources, will be used and developed to produce a sustained yield of products and services, including the establishment and maintenance of wilderness areas, for the benefit of all the people of this and future generations. Such areas of wilderness like all other national forest land shall be so managed as to protect and preserve the watersheds, the soil, the beneficial forest and timber growth, and all beneficial vegetative cover. The purposes of this Act are further declared to be within and supplemental to but not in interference with the purposes for which national forests are established as set forth in the Act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat. 34, 35; U.S.C. 475, 551).

(e) A wilderness, in contrast with those areas where man and his own works dominate the landscape, is hereby recognized as an area where the earth and its community of life are untrammeled by man, where man himself is a visitor who does not remain. For the purposes of this Act the term "wilderness" shall include the areas provided for in section 2 of this Act and such other areas as shall be designated for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

NATIONAL WILDERNESS PRESERVATION SYSTEM

SEC. 2. The National Wilderness Preservation System (hereafter referred to in this Act as the Wilderness System) shall comprise (subject to existing private rights, if any) the federally owned or controlled areas of land and water provided for in this section and the related airspace reservations.

NATIONAL FOREST AREAS

(a) The Wilderness System shall include as wilderness areas the areas within the national forests classified on June 1, 1958, by the Department of Agriculture or the Forest Service as wilderness, wild, primitive, or roadless:

Provided, That the Wilderness System shall not include any primitive area which the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine to be not predominantly of wilderness value, and each primitive area included in the Wilderness System shall be subject to such boundary modification as the Secretary shall determine to be needed to exclude any portions not predominantly of wilderness value or to add any adjacent national forest lands that are predominantly of wilderness value. Determinations regarding national forest areas classified as primitive shall be made within fifteen years after the date of this Act, and any such area regarding which such determinations have not been made shall then, with the exception of any roads, motor trails, structures, or other installations then existing, become a part of the Wilderness System without regard further to this proviso.

Additional areas for inclusion in the Wilderness System may be designated within national forests by the Secretary of Agriculture, after not less than ninety days' public notice and the holding of a public hearing, if there is a demand for such a hearing, and such designations shall take effect as provided in subsection (f) below. The publication of a proposal to add any national forest area or part thereof to the Wilderness System shall segregate the public lands involved from any or all appropriations under the public-land laws to the extent deemed necessary by the Secretary of Agriculture.

NATIONAL PARK SYSTEM AREAS

(b) At the times, in the manner, and with the exceptions hereinafter provided for, the Wilderness System shall include each park and monument in the National Park System on June 1, 1958, embracing a continuous area of five thousand acres or more without roads, and such additional units of the National Park System as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe.

Not later than ten years after the date of this Act, or within two years after the unit has been prescribed for addition to the Wilderness System, whichever is later, and ninety days after giving public notice in accordance with section 4 of the Administrative Procedure Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 238; 5 U.S.C. 1003) the Secretary of the Interior shall designate within each unit of the National Park System to be included in the Wilderness System such area or areas as he shall determine to be required for roads, motor trails, buildings, accommodations for visitors, and administrative installations. Each such unit, with the exception of the particular area or areas determined to be required for the aforesaid purposes, shall become a part of the Wilderness System when the designation of such area or areas has been made. Should the Secretary fail to make such a designation within the time limits specified, each such unit shall then become a part of the Wilderness System with the exception of roads, motor trails, buildings, accommodations for visitors, and administrative installations then in existence.

No designation of an area for roads, motor trails, buildings, accommodations for visitors, or administrative installations shall modify or affect the application to that area of the provisions of the Act approved August 25, 1916, entitled "An Act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes" (39 Stat. 535, as amended; 16 U.S.C. 1 and the following). The accommodations and installations in such designated areas shall be incident to the conservation and use and enjoyment of the scenery and the natural and historical objects and flora and fauna of the park or monument in its natural condition. Further, the inclusion of any National Park System area within the Wilderness System pursuant to this Act shall in no manner lower the standards evolved for the use and preservation of such National Park System areas in accordance with the Act of August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535, as amended; 16 U.S.C., 1952 edition, sec. 1 and the following), the statutory authority under which the area was created, or any other Act of Congress which might pertain to or affect such National Park System area, including but not limited to the Act of June 8, 1906 (34 Stat. 225; 16 U.S.C., 1952 edition, secs. 432 and the following); the provisions of title 16, United States Code, 1952 edition, section 796; and the act of August 21, 1935 (49 Stat. 666; title 16, U.S.C., 1952 edition, sec. 461, and the following).

NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGES AND RANGES

(c) The Wilderness System shall include such wildlife refuges and game ranges, or portions thereof, as the Secretary of the Interior shall designate. Within 5 years after the date of this Act the Secretary shall survey the refuges and ranges under his jurisdiction on June 1, 1958, and designate for inclusion in the Wilderness System those refuges and ranges, or portions thereof, that he determines to be appropriate. Further, the Secretary shall survey any refuges or ranges added to his jurisdiction after June 1, 1958, to determine if they are, or contain areas that are, suitable for inclusion in the Wilderness System, and shall make such determination and so designate the appropriate refuge, range, or portion thereof, within 2 years after the refuge or range is added to his jurisdiction.

Within two years after the designation of any refuge or range in its entirety, and ninety days after giving public notice in accordance with section 4, Administrative Procedure Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 238; 5 U.S.C. 1003), the Secretary of the Interior shall designate within such refuge or range such area or areas as he shall determine to be required for roads and buildings and other installations for administration and protection of the wildlife, which area or areas shall be excluded from the Wilderness System. Should the Secretary fail to make such designation within the time limit specified, the refuge or range, with the exception of any road, building, or other installation for administration and protection then existing, shall automatically then become a part of the Wilderness System.

THE INDIANS' WILDERNESS

(d) The Wilderness System shall include such areas of tribal land on Indian reservations as the Secretary of the Interior may designate as appropriate for inclusion upon the recommendation of or with the consent of the tribes, bands, or group concerned, acting through their tribal councils or other duly constituted authorities. Such designation shall not change title to the land or any beneficial interest therein, and shall not modify or otherwise affect the Indians' right to the land.

The Secretary of the Interior shall make any addition, modification, or elimination recommended by any tribal council or other duly constituted authority of any tribe or band with regard to any area of its tribal land.

Nothing in this Act shall in any respect abrogate any treaty with any band or tribe of Indians, or in any way modify or otherwise affect the Indians' hunting and fishing rights or privileges.

OTHER UNITS

(e) The Wilderness System shall also include such units as may be designated within any federally owned or controlled area of land and/or water by the official or officials authorized to determine the use of the lands and waters involved, including any area or areas acquired by gift or bequest by any agency of the Federal Government for preservation as wilderness. Addition to or modification or elimination of such units shall be in accordance with regulations that shall be established in conformity with the purposes of this Act by the official or officials authorized to determine the use of the lands and waters involved, including, but not limited to, provisions for segregating any public lands involved from any or all forms of appropriation under the public-land laws pending addition of such units to the Wilderness System, and shall take effect as provided in subsection (f) below. Such regulations with regard to any privately owned area given or bequeathed to a Federal agency for preservation as wilderness shall be in accordance with such agreements as shall be made at the time of such gift or bequest.

ADDITIONS, MODIFICATIONS, AND ELIMINATIONS

(f) Any proposed addition to, modification of, or elimination from any area of wilderness established in accordance with this Act, and any proposed addition or elimination of any unit to or from the Wilderness System, shall be made only after not less than ninety days public notice and the holding of a public hearing, if there is a demand for such a hearing, and shall be reported with map and description to Congress by the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Interior, or other official or officials having jurisdiction over the lands involved and shall take effect upon the expiration of the first period of one hundred and twenty calendar days, of continuous session of Congress, following the date on which the report is received by Congress; but only if during this period there has not been passed by Congress a concurrent resolution opposing such proposed addition, modification, or elimination: Provided, That nothing in this Act shall restrict or affect the authority of officials of the United States, acting pursuant to other law, to establish in the manner prescribed by such law, areas of the National Park System, or to make additions, modifications, or eliminations, from any area of such National Park System pursuant to such authority. Within any unit of the Wilderness System the acquisition of any privately owned lands is hereby authorized, and such sums as the Congress may approve for such acquisition are hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

USE OF THE WILDERNESS

SEC. 3. (a) Nothing in this Act shall be interpreted as interfering with the purposes stated in the establishment of any national park or monument, national forest, national wildlife refuge, Indian reservation, or other Federal land area involved, except that any agency administering any area within the Wilderness System shall be responsible for preserving the wilderness character of the area and shall so administer such area for such other purposes as also to preserve its wilderness character. The Wilderness System shall be devoted to the public purposes of recreational, educational, scenic, scientific, conservation, and historical use. All such use shall be in harmony, both in kind and degree, with the wilderness environment and with its preservation.

(b) Except as specially provided in this section, and subject to existing private rights (if any), no portion of any area constituting a unit of the Wilderness System shall be used for any form of commercial enterprise not contemplated in the purposes of this Act. Within such areas, except as otherwise provided in this section and in section 2 of this Act, there shall be no permanent road; nor shall there be any use of motor vehicles, motorized equipment, or motorboats, or landing of aircraft, nor any other mechanical transport or delivery of persons or supplies, nor any temporary road, nor any structure or installation, in excess of the minimum required for the administration of the area for the purposes of this Act.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS

(c) The following special provisions are hereby made:

(1) Within national forest areas included in the Wilderness System grazing of domestic livestock and the use of aircraft or motorboats where these practices have already become well established may be permitted to continue subject to such restrictions as the Secretary of Agriculture deems desirable. Within national forest areas included in the Wilderness System such measures may be taken as may be necessary in the control of insects and diseases, subject to such conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture deems desirable.

(2) Within national forest areas included in the Wilderness System the President may, within a specific area and in accordance with such regulations as he may deem desirable, authorize prospecting, mining, or the establishment or maintenance of reservoirs and water-conservation works, including the road construction found essential to such mining and reservoir construction, upon his determination that such use in the specific area will better serve the interests of the United States and the people thereof than will its denial.

(3) Other provisions of this Act to the contrary notwithstanding, the management of the Boundary Waters Canoe Area, formerly designated as the Superior, Little Indian Sioux, and Caribou roadless areas in the Superior National Forest, Minnesota, shall be in accordance with regulations established by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the general purpose of maintaining, without unnecessary restrictions on other uses, including that of timber, the primitive character of the area, particularly in the vicinity of lakes, streams, and portages: Provided, That nothing in this Act shall preclude the continuance within the area of any already established use of motorboats. Nothing in this Act shall modify the restrictions and provisions of the Shipstead-Nolan Act, Public Law 539, Seventy-first Congress, second session, July 10, 1930, and the Humphrey-Thye-Blatnik-Andresen Act, Public Law 607, Eighty-fourth Congress, second session, June 22, 1956, as applying to the Superior National Forest or the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture. Modifications of the Boundary Waters Canoe Area within the Superior National Forest shall be accomplished in the same manner as provided in section 2 (a) and (f).

(4) Any existing use or form of appropriation authorized or provided for in the Executive order or legislation establishing any national wildlife refuge or range existing on the date of approval of this Act may be continued under such authorization or provision.

(5) Nothing in this Act shall constitute an express or implied claim or denial on the part of the Federal Government as to exemption from State water laws.

NATIONAL WILDERNESS PRESERVATION COUNCIL

SEC. 4. (a) The National Wilderness Preservation Council is hereby created, to consist ex officio of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and also three citizen members to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution may each designate an official of his Department or Institution to serve as his alternate on the Council. The citizen members shall be persons known to be informed regarding, and interested in the preservation of, wilderness; one of them shall be appointed initially for a term of two years, one for a term of four years, and one for a term of six years. After the expiration of these initial terms, each citizen member shall be appointed for a six-year term. The President shall designate from among the citizen members a chairman, who shall serve for a two-year term. The Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution shall be ex officio the secretary of the Council and, subject to the Council, shall maintain its headquarters.

(b) Copies of regulations established or issued in connection with the administration of any unit or units of the Wilderness System, and copies of any subsequent amendments thereto, and copies of any reports with map and description submitted to Congress regarding additions, modifications, or eliminations in accordance with Section 2(f) of this Act shall be forwarded to the secretary of the National Wilderness Preservation Council by the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Interior, or such other official or officials as shall establish or issue them. The Council shall maintain a public file of such copies, but shall have no administrative jurisdiction over any unit in the Wilderness System nor over any agency that does have such jurisdiction.

(c) The Council shall serve as the repository for, and shall maintain available for public inspection, such maps and official papers regarding the Wilderness System as may be filed with it. The Council shall serve as a nonexclusive clearinghouse for exchange of information among the agencies administering areas within the Wilderness System. The Council may make, sponsor, and encourage the coordination of surveys of wilderness needs and conditions and gather and disseminate information, including maps, for the information of the public regarding use and preservation of the areas of wilderness within the Wilderness System, including information and maps regarding State and other non-Federal areas. The Council is directed to consult with, advise, and invoke the aid of appropriate officers of the United States Government and to assist in obtaining cooperation in wilderness preservation and use among Federal and State agencies and private agencies and organizations concerned therewith. The Council, through its Chairman, shall annually present to Congress, not later than the tenth day of January, a report on the operations of the Council during the preceding fiscal year and on the status of the Wilderness System at the close of that fiscal year, including an annotated list of the areas included showing their size, location, and administering agency, and shall make such recommendations to Congress as the Council shall deem advisable.

(d) The Council shall meet annually and at such times between annual meetings as the Council shall determine, or upon call of the Chairman or any three members. Members of the Council shall serve as such without compensation but shall receive transportation expenses and in addition a per diem payment to be fixed by the Council, not to exceed $50 a day, as reimbursement for expenditures in connection with attending any meeting of the Council. A sum sufficient to pay the necessary expenses of the Council, including printing and binding and rent, not to exceed an annual expenditure of $100,000, is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Disbursements from such appropriations shall be made by the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution. The Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution in behalf of the Council is authorized to accept private gifts and benefactions to be used to further the purposes of this Act, and such gifts and benefactions shall be deductible from income for Federal tax purposes and shall be exempt from Federal estate tax.

SEC. 5. This Act shall be known as the "National Wilderness Preservation Act."

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. I have introduced legislation this week to return the budget processes to the legislative branch of the Government and thereby do away with the dangerous executive budget concept set up in 1921.

The unconstitutional operations of the present Bureau of the Budget, its presumption to dictate policy at the highest level, its encroachment upon the prerogatives of the Congress all go to show the present concept of the budget structure has outlived its usefulness and is now a menace to the general welfare.

Any class B dictator will soon become a full-fledged evil unless put out of existence. The integrity of the budget processes can only be preserved by the provisions of my bill to create a Commissioner of the Budget to head a U.S. Budget Office under the legislative branch of the Government.

The insolence of the Bureau of the Budget is evidenced clearly in a memorandum, dated December 31, 1958, from Maurice H. Stans, Director of the Budget Bureau in the Executive Office of the President, to the Honorable Neil H. McElroy, Secretary of Defense.

It is a shocking circumstance when a creature of executive appointment will exhibit such haughtiness and pretension. This gag rule, this conspiracy to handcuff witnesses before a congressional committee in performance of its constitutional duty borders on high crime and misdemeanor.

There is no law or regulation issued under any law and no constitutional provision direct or indirect which can justify such a memorandum as this. The next thing will be an order to place the Director of the Bureau of the Budget in some sort of Graustarkian uniform with swagger stick and a new title: "Pooh-bah and Lord High Executioner."

I call upon Congress to direct an immediate investigation of this latest affront to its dignity.

Is this what is meant by the general staff system? Is this what is meant by team play? What kind of groveling, heel-clicking, faceless wonders will this memorandum make of Defense Department witnesses before the Armed Services and Appropriations Committees of the Congress?

No wonder Gen. James Gavin and Gen. Matthew Ridgway and many other civilian and military leaders of the Department of Defense could not stomach this regimentation.

This letter flaunts the clear language of the act of Congress passed last year when, after much debate, expressed language was written to prevent the very thing this memorandum directs.

It is a sham and a fraud to say that this memorandum is other than a deliberately intended threat and gag to witnesses. It is what the letter leaves unsaid that is the true evil. The Sword of Damocles, indeed. Or, as said in the game of little children, "Heavy, heavy what hangs over thy head: fine or superfine?"

In this atmosphere, Machiavelli would be a rank amateur.

I have the highest respect for the integrity of Secretary of Defense McElroy and I know he must be greatly embarrassed and chagrined to receive this pernicious document from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget. Far be it from me to put my friend on a spot, but I say to him and to all of his witnesses, in and out of uniform, they better not bring this memorandum to any hearings of the Appropriations Subcommittee for the Department of Defense.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, D. C., December 31, 1958.

Memorandum for the Honorable Neil H. McElroy:

The President will shortly present his budget for the fiscal year 1960 to the Congress. As you know, the normal process of budgeting results in recommended amounts that in many cases are less than the agency head had requested.

It is understandable that officials and employees will feel strongly about the importance of their own agency's work, and will sometimes believe that a larger budget might be in order. Such feelings, however, must be related to an awareness that our budget resources are not adequate to accommodate in any one year all of the things that might be desired. The President is responsible for reviewing the total needs of the executive branch in the light of tax and debt policy and for deciding among competing requests for priorities. Executive branch personnel are expected to support the President in his budget recommendations.

As you and your staff prepare to justify your portion of the budget before Congress, you will want to observe the requirements set forth at the President's direction in Bureau of the Budget Circular No. A–10. It is expected that witnesses will carefully avoid volunteering views differing from the budget, either on the record or off the record. While direct questions at hearings must be answered frankly, it is expected that a witness who feels that he must set forth a personal view inconsistent with the President's budget will also point out that the President's judgment on the matter was reached from his overall perspective as the head of the Government, and in the light of overriding national policy. The witness should make it clear that his personal comments are not to be construed as a request for additional funds.

Please see that a reminder of this reaches all officials and employees who participate in hearings on appropriations and on legislation directly related to budget proposals, including civil functions of the Corps of Engineers.

MAURICE H. STANS,
Director.

THE CUBAN REVOLUTION

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, Cuba has 6 million people. One hundred and eighty of them reportedly have been executed by the new government. For 2 years Cuba was torn by a civil war which alined Batista and his military power against 95 percent of the Cuban people. Batista held on through a policy of terror. This meant one atrocity after another usually by government officials. Now these officials and others are being called to answer for their crimes. A long trial may not be needed in many instances.

Of course no one should be executed without a fair trial. To date I have seen no direct evidence that this has happened. There is now a free press in Cuba. Many correspondents from the United States are freely circulating there. This was not true under Batista. The estimated 20,000 murders committed to keep him in power did not receive the coverage given these executions. A free press helps insure fair trials.

It is my hope that the Inter-American Bar Association will be asked to consult with the Cuban Government. Leading lawyers from the Western Hemisphere could be of timely assistance in reestablishing the Cuban court system and in assuring everyone, including Cubans, that the new government is not embarking on the bloody road of Batista.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States in his recent state of the Union message said that the current recession is "fading into history."

Within the borders of the 32d Congressional District of New York the recession and unemployment connected with it are by no means fading into history.

Last month the Navy announced the closing down of a number of naval facilities scattered throughout the United States, including the U.S. Naval Supply Depot at Scotia, N.Y. At Scotia over 600 civilian employees are slated to lose their jobs because of this action.

It just doesn't make sense for any agency of the U.S. Government to take deliberate action in an area which already is suffering from substantial unemployment without any consideration of the impact which this action will have on the overall economic life of the community. The right hand of the Government ought to know what the left hand is doing. It is just plain bad administration to speak in one moment about relieving distressed areas and at the same moment to allow some other agency of the Government to contribute to the distress of those very areas.

I have today offered legislation to require congressional consideration of any reduction in civilian personnel at any military or naval installation located in an area of substantial labor surplus. Under my legislation such reductions could not be made without first being submitted to Congress, and could not take effect if either House of Congress disapproves.

My bill, if adopted, will enable all of the facts bearing on the economic life of any distressed area to be fully presented and considered before any jobs can be cut in such an area.

Mr. Speaker, I urge Members of the House to join in supporting this legislation.

THE FARM PROGRAM MESS

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying to the effect that a weak law in the hands of an able and sympathetic administrator is often much more effective than a good law in the hands of an incapable or unsympathetic administrator.

There is no question but that there have been defects in the farm programs that were designed to be established through legislation enacted by Congress. But as the editorial from a recent issue of the Des Moines Register well points out:

Secretary Benson has been so fanatically opposed to Government farm programs that there is considerable reason to believe that he has tried to make the programs look bad in the way he has administered them.

Secretary Benson has played a major role in driving price supports ever lower, and this at a time when nearly all costs of farm operation have steadily increased. He is either incapable of understanding or deliberately ignores the fact that continued underpricing of the raw materials (new wealth) of the farms must eventually have dire consequences for the entire economy of the Nation.

The crutch that has been and is now being used to prop up the Nation's economy is deficit financing and borrowed money. That cannot continue indefinitely.

Mr. Benson has long since outlived his usefulness as Secretary of Agriculture. The vast majority of American farmers have little or no confidence in him. The hour is late, but in the best interests of this vast and vital industry and the national economy, Benson ought to tender his resignation, step aside, and make way for a new Secretary who earnestly desires to work with Congress and the various farm organizations in solving the mess that is the present farm program.

The editorial from the Des Moines Register follows:

The indications now are that in January 1961, after 8 years of Ezra Benson's dedicated effort to master the farm problem, the costs of the Federal programs and the size of the crop surpluses will be two to four times what they were in January 1953, when Secretary Benson came into office. This is the lead sentence of an article in the January Fortune magazine. The article goes on to ask, "Why, after 6 years of Eisenhower-Benson management, is the farm problem getting worse instead of better"?

Fortunes' answer is that Benson has made too many compromises and has not pushed harder and more consistently to dismantle the acreage-control and price-support programs.

Of course, if the farm problem is viewed simply as a matter of reducing the Federal budget, that is the correct solution. If the farm price support programs were abandoned, the cost of the programs would disappear. But not even Mr. Benson has recommended such a stern measure. It would mean a drastic further decline in farm income, which is already down substantially since 1947.

However, the Secretary has recommended consistently that price supports be reduced, and Congress has given him considerable authority to do so. Price supports are much lower now than in 1953.

Why has the cost of the programs gone up while price supports were going down?

One big reason is that weather has been favorable and production high. Secretary Benson hoped that as price supports were lowered, farmers would produce less of the basic crops. But it didn't work out that way. Farmers have been producing more corn and wheat than ever. Even though price supports are lower, it costs the Government more to carry out the program, because there is more grain to be covered.

In the last 2 years, by making corn loans available to everyone, Benson deliberately increased the cost of that program. Farmers who failed to comply with their acreage allotments could get loans about 25 cents below the regular rate.

Crop acreage controls never have worked very well in limiting production, but Secretary Benson has not tried to make them work even as well as in the past. The noncompliance corn loan was a strong incentive to farmers to grow as much corn as possible. The Secretary campaigned to get rid of the allotments, and this has now been accomplished as a result of the farmer referendum last November. In addition, Mr. Benson worked against limitation of production by refusing to require farmers to comply with allotments on all crops if they were to receive benefits on any. So wheat and cotton producers, for example, have been free to expand corn production.

It is paradoxical that the man who was going to get Government out of agriculture has got Government deeper into agriculture than ever before. Surpluses have mounted and are still mounting. Government expenditures for price support, storage, and disposal of surpluses have risen from less than $1 billion a year to more than $3 billion a year and are still rising.

The cost of farm programs would have been much lower in the last 3 years if Secretary Benson had done his best to make the crop acreage controls work—and had limited corn loans to those who comply with acreage allotments.

Secretary Benson has been so fanatically opposed to Government farm programs that there is considerable reason to believe that he has tried to make the programs look bad in the way he has administered them.

DIRECTIVE FROM THE BUREAU OF THE BUDGET

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, the memorandum from the Director of the Budget, Maurice H. Stans, dated December 31, 1958, will not in any way whatsoever interfere with the hearings of the House Committee on Appropriations. Any witness for the executive branch of the Government under this memorandum is given full authority to answer questions frankly.

The full text of the memorandum from Mr. Stans to the Secretary of Defense is as follows:

MEMORANDUM FOR THE HONORABLE NEIL A. MCELROY

The President will shortly present his budget for the fiscal year 1960 to the Congress. As you know, the normal process of budgeting results in recommended amounts that in many cases are less than the agency head had requested.

It is understandable that officials and employees will feel strongly about the importance of their own agency's work, and will sometimes believe that a larger budget might be in order. Such feelings, however, must be related to an awareness that our budget resources are not adequate to accommodate in any one year all of the things that might be desired. The President is responsible for reviewing the total needs of the executive branch in the light of tax and debt policy and for deciding among competing requests for priorities. Executive branch personnel are expected to support the President in his budget recommendations.

As you and your staff prepare to justify your portion of the budget before Congress, you will want to observe the requirements set forth at the President's direction in Bureau of the Budget Circular No. A–10. It is expected that witnesses will carefully avoid volunteering views differing from the budget, either on the record or off the record. While direct questions at hearings must be answered frankly, it is expected that a witness who feels that he must set forth a personal view inconsistent with the President's budget will also point out that the President's judgment on the matter was reached from his overall perspective as the head of the Government, and in the light of overriding national policy. The witness should make it clear that his personal comments are not to be construed as a request for additional funds.

Please see that a reminder of this reaches all officials and employees who participate in hearings on appropriations and on legislation directly related to budget proposals, including civil functions of the Corps of Engineers.

MAURICE H. STANS,
Director.

It should also be pointed out that the executive branch of the Federal Government, whether Democratic or Republican, has pursued the same policy. As a matter of fact under the Truman administration a much more severe and restrictive limitation was imposed on witnesses from the executive branch of the Federal Government when they were testifying on behalf of the President's budget.

For example on November 15, 1946, the following memorandum was issued and personally signed by former President Truman:

MEMORANDUM FOR THE DIRECTOR OF THE BUREAU OF THE BUDGET

I have noticed that on several occasions certain department and agency officials have shown a tendency to seek from Congress larger appropriations than were contemplated in official budget estimates.

The estimates which I transmit to Congress reflect a balanced program for the executive branch as a whole, and each individual estimate is considered in the light of this program, its relationship to other estimates, and the fiscal position of the Government. While agency witnesses before congressional committees must feel free to supply facts in answer to questions of committee members, I cannot condone the practice of seizing upon any opportunity which presents itself to indicate an opinion, either directly or indirectly, that my estimates are insufficient.

When you notify the heads of the various departments and agencies of the amounts to be included in the 1948 budget for their activities, I wish you would include a reminder that I shall expect them and their subordinates to support only the President's estimates in hearings and discussions with Members of Congress.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

It should be stated on behalf of the Chief Executive whether Mr. Truman or Mr. Eisenhower, that as head of the executive branch of the Government the President has the right to expect that his aids and assistants will represent his views. This is the orderly and proper way to run such a vast and complicated business involving over 4½ million military and civilian employees and a budget totaling $77 billion.

It should be reemphasized that as long as all witnesses are given clearance to express their personal views when interrogated by a direct question there will be no interference with the responsibility of the Committee on Appropriations to carry out its duty to determine the validity of budget or executive programs.

ADDITIONAL JUDGESHIP FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS

Mr. ALGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALGER. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to provide for an additional judgeship for the northern judicial district of Texas. In this action I become a cosponsor with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ROGERS].

The need for the judgeship is exceptional and of an emergency nature, it is also critical. By the test of any criteria this need can be clearly shown, by population, area of backlog of cases, as compared to other districts. In fiscal 1958 there were 1,837 civil cases filed in the northern district, an average of 612 per judge, far beyond, almost twice, the 273 nationwide average per judge. The northern district serves 100 counties, 92,955 square miles, and 3,093,000 people.

Last year the Judiciary Committee approved the Judicial Conference recommendations for additional judgeships. I had the privilege of testifying before the committee. The omnibus judgeship bill included judgeships in the southern, western, and northern districts of Texas.

Comparatively, the northern district had the same number of cases filed as the southern district which had four judges, not three as in the northern district. Judge Whitfield Davidson, Judge Joe Estes, and Judge Joe Dooley have been carrying this load. Now Judge Dooley has been injured, a broken leg, and will be out 5 or 6 months. This adds to the almost impossible situation. Another judge, at least one, is urgently needed right now, long overdue.

So it is that I am requesting the judgeship for the northern district before the needs of other districts are considered. The facts support this need. The need transcends partisan politics.

Elmore Whitehurst, U.S. referee in bankruptcy for the northern district, formerly Asisstant Director of the Administrative Office of U.S. Courts in Washington has said that he didn't know of any district in the same population area any place in the Nation in worse shape, regarding the number of Federal judges, than northern Texas.

It is my hope, my request, that the members of the Judiciary Committee and then this House will take the action so urgently needed, even though the help for other judicial districts is postponed. Later in the session we can alleviate the need in other districts.

THE REPUBLICANS ARE GETTING READY TO FIGHT

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the attention of the Speaker and the majority leader is desired, for a moment.

It has been rumored around that Republicans would not fight, that we had lost our courage, our determination to make a fight for the principles of our party.

It is my hope that the Speaker realizes from what has been said here this morning—and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GROSS] has long been my leader—that we are just getting ready to fight the opposition—though there may be one or two individuals in the executive department we have not attacked. And I assume that we will start—well, along about July—well, at least before the Congress adjourns to tell the people just how we will implement the party's policy.

NORMAN P. MASON

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was very happy and very proud that President Eisenhower announced he had promoted Mr. Norman P. Mason, who has been the head of the Federal Housing Authority, to the position of Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency. Mr. Mason is one of the finest men I have ever known and has a splendid record both as a businessman and as a great civic leader. The people who have worked for him for years have nothing but the highest praise and approval for him. He was always anxious to improve the position of labor. He lives in Chelmsford, which is in my district. I rejoice in the fact that the Congress and the country are going to have the benefit of his great abilities.

Mr. Mason is blessed with a beautiful wife and a fine son and a fine daughter, and with four grandsons he can help develop a new generation of public spirited citizens.

The following article from the New York Times gives a résumé of some of the new Administrator's accomplishments. May he have a very successful term of office I am sure is the wish of all of us—I know he is well and favorably known to both branches of Congress:

A YANKEE FROM UPSTATE: NORMAN PEIRCE MASON

WASHINGTON, January 14.—A native of upstate New York with the characteristics of a New England Yankee will be the Government's new housing chief. He is Norman Peirce Mason, a 62-year-old former lumber dealer. For the last 4 years he has headed the Federal Housing Administration. In his new job as Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, to which he was named today by President Eisenhower, he will supervise his old agency, the FHA, as well as a conglomeration of other activities ranging from slum clearance to loans for college dormitories and from community planning to public housing.

Mr. Mason's Yankeeness is readily explainable. Though he was born in the small town of Willsboro along Lake Champlain in New York, he has lived since 1923 in New England in the town of Chelmsford, Mass.

AGENCY UNDER FIRE

Mr. Mason came to Washington in 1954 in unusual circumstances. The FHA—the oldest of the housing agencies and among the least controversial—had suddenly been tinged with scandal. The activities were connected with two of its half dozen mortgage insurance activities—involving both high officials of the agency and private operators in various home building and repair fields.

They had mostly taken place before the Eisenhower administration, but the President ousted Guy T. O. Hollyday as Commissioner and named Mr. Mason to take over. There has not been a breath of scandal since.

The road to high government service for this New Englander was in no significant way through his participation in politics. Over the years he had been president of his local, State, regional, and then national head of the Retail Lumber Dealers Association. From that post he was nominated for and won election as New England member of the board of directors of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

LED CONSTRUCTION GROUP

Quickly named to head the chamber's construction committee, he found himself becoming acquainted with the leaders in all facets of the home-building and construction industry (there are 134 trade associations in the industry). As a natural next step, he became a member of the advisory committee named by the new administration to recommend changes in the Nation's housing laws.

When the scandal broke, Mr. Mason was a "natural" for a new commissioner. He was well known to the industry, had administrative experience in business and was an Eisenhower supporter. He has served ever since under Albert M. Cole, whose place he will take as head of HHFA.

His job has been widely commended within the building industry and even among Democrats in Congress.

In his hometown of Willsboro, Mr. Mason, as he puts it today, "lived in the house at the top of the hill." His father was one of the two or three leading citizens of the town. When Mr. Mason was 14, the family moved to Plattsburgh after his father had made an unsuccessful venture into politics.

Mr. Mason served in the Navy as an enlisted man in World War I after graduating from high school. When his father died in 1922 he took over the family hardware business in Plattsburgh. Then in 1923 he pooled his inheritance and that of his wife's to purchase a languishing lumber firm in Chelmsford. He built it up over the years to a thriving firm with 5 lumberyards, a box manufacturing plant, 100 employees, and a $1,300,000 annual volume of business.

Short and stocky with gray hair and a slight bald spot on the back of his head, Mr. Mason counts golf and photography as his main hobbies.

His son David runs the business in Chelmsford. A married daughter, Mrs. Charles Svenson, also lives in Chelmsford.

REPEAL OF FEDERAL EXCISE TAX ON AUTOMOTIVE VEHICLES

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. Speaker and distinguished colleagues, I have just introduced in the Congress a measure designed to repeal the Federal excise tax on automotive vehicles. In my judgment, early enactment of this measure will insure employment in our automotive industries, have a stabilizing effect on the national economy, and help to build a barrier against future economic recession.

But of equal importance, passage of this measure will remove a long-standing inequity from our present tax structure, as this excise tax was originally enacted as a wartime measure.

As many of my colleagues will recall, I introduced this same bill early in the 85th Congress but no action was taken, despite the fact that such legislation was strongly endorsed and supported by many of our outstanding leaders in our business communities and in the field of organized labor. In my own mind, I am confident that failure of the 85th Congress to take action on that legislative proposal contributed immensely to the crippling recession that plagued our Nation during the past year.

We are trying to get our economy rolling at full speed without taking off our emergency brake that was once needed for an emergency that no longer exists. How long are we going to be blind to the effects of this tax that has depressed a major national market and deprived our working people of full employment?

I ask today: Will the 86th Congress make the same mistake? Will we pass up another opportunity to correct a gross tax inequity and, at the same time, to enact an important antirecession measure?

To me the reasons for repealing the Federal excise tax on automotive vehicles are little different today than 2 years ago when I first made this proposal to the Congress. The urgency for such legislative action on our part is just as great today as it was in January 1957—if not greater.

I was, indeed, encouraged to hear the President in his state of the Union message last Friday say that:

> I am requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare appropriate proposals for revising, at the proper time, our tax structure, to remove inequities and to enhance incentives for all Americans to work, to save, and invest.

It is my hope that this is one of the areas of revision that he had in mind—together with many of our other wartime excise taxes. In my opinion there is urgent need for the House to give most serious study to correcting excise tax inequities—including telephone, leather products, jewelry, and transportation, to mention but a few.

Mr. Speaker, let me point out just a few important aspects of the automotive industry that cannot be overemphasized. I feel qualified to speak on this subject, because in our congressional district a significant portion of the automobile industry of America is centered.

Into the Sixth Congressional District of Michigan come an estimated 15,000 different parts that comprise a motor vehicle. From 57 different foreign lands and each of the 49 States of the Union come various raw materials that are used in the manufacture of a motor vehicle.

The automobile industry uses more plate glass than the entire building and construction industry of America. The automobile industry uses more leather upholstery than the entire furniture industry. Equally significant, the automobile industry uses more iron and steel than any other single industry in the world.

Thus with such multifarious ramifications that extend into nearly every segment of our society, one can easily discern the tenacious relationship of the automobile industry to both national and international economy. In a word, literally millions of jobs, not only in Michigan, but in every other State of our Union depend entirely upon the production of automobiles. It follows naturally that any slump in the automobile industry is soon reflected in countless other business enterprises which also provide Americans with economic livelihood. I feel that you should be reminded that one out of every seven employed persons in the United States is engaged in the manufacture, distribution, service or commercial use of motor vehicles.

Thus Mr. Speaker, while calling for repeal of the excise tax on automotive vehicles, I speak in behalf of the economic welfare of millions of wage earners throughout our entire country. This is not an isolated economic concept; it is nationwide in scope.

Just what would be the result if we repealed the Federal excise tax on automotive vehicles?

At once the price of automobiles would be reduced, and it is elemental that this in turn could stimulate sales and ultimately increase production. More jobs would be created in hundreds of other manufacturing enterprises that are dependent in large part upon automobile production. These enterprises would include the steel industry, the brass and copper industries, and literally thousands of others, including many small business concerns.

Such tax relief would be fair and equitable. Seventy-three percent of our American families own automobiles, and 61 percent of all American adults are licensed drivers. In addition, we must remember 68 percent of all employed persons in the United States drive automobiles to work, and 75 percent of all business trips are made by automobile. Significantly, 75 percent of all American automobiles are used for business purposes. It can no longer be argued that the automobile is a luxury.

To those who recognize that we have a growing national economy, to those that talk of a higher standard of living for all Americans, to those who believe that we are in a vital economic struggle that makes it imperative for our economy to expand if our system of free enterprise is to maintain its position of world leadership, to all of you, I urge that you join with me in asking for early and favorable consideration of the measure that I have introduced here today.

CUBA

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, Castro's executions now total 185. Four to six thousand are in jail awaiting drumhead courts-martial and the number increases daily. Fidel Castro boasts that the slaughter shall continue despite condemnatory world opinion.

Many innocents have been caught in the dragnet. It may be a gay pastime for Castro but bodes ill for Cuba.

We did not send Gen. Leonard Wood and "Teddy" Roosevelt to rescue Cuba from Spanish oppression in 1898, only to have that unhappy country now plunged into a blood bath. The President and the administration should publicly express horror and indignation and have the matter placed before the United Nations.

Castro might well follow the courageous and majestic example of General de Gaulle, who has granted amnesty to some 7,000 Algerian rebels.

COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, on Monday last, the gentleman from California [Mr. ROOSEVELT] addressed the House and explained his resolution designed to abolish the Committee on Un-American Activities of the House and to add to the list of matters within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary just two words, "seditious activity."

I waited in vain, Mr. Speaker, to hear the gentleman from California describe how his resolution would strengthen the investigation of communism by abolishing the Committee on Un-American Activities and vesting certain limited investigating jurisdiction of subversion in the Judiciary Committee when the Judiciary Committee itself is presently overworked and handles now over 50 percent of all bills introduced into the House.

Let us make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker, the resolution of the gentleman from California is not designed to strengthen the investigation of subversion. It is designed to strangle the investigation of subversion.

I am not irrevocably wedded to any particular structural organization of a unit of the House charged with the investigation of subversion. As this House knows, I myself have recently made certain suggestions for jurisdictional changes in the present committee and from time to time I have given considerable study to possible new language relating to powers and duties of the present committee.

I am, however, Mr. Speaker, irrevocably committed to do all in my power as a Member of this Congress and as a citizen of this Republic to resist and fight communism and to fight it with all my might, and for that I make no apologies to anyone.

The issue presented by the resolution of the gentleman from California is simply this: Are we going to investigate and legislate against the Communist conspiracy, or are we not?

And now, Mr. Speaker, let me take a few minutes to analyze the basic fallacy of the contentions of the gentleman from California respecting the legal implications of his resolution. He contends that his resolution will resolve difficulties stemming from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Watkins against United States, and he quotes certain of the dicta of that case respecting pertinency of questions posed to a witness under interrogation by a congressional committee. In essence, Mr. Speaker, all the Watkins decision said on this point is that a witness before a congressional committee is entitled to know the pertinency of questions posed to him and that his knowledge of the pertinency of questions can be made clear by several devices, including the authorizing resolution, the opening remarks of the chairman, members, or counsel for the committee, the nature of the proceedings, the questions themselves, and the chairman's response to an objection on pertinency.

How, Mr. Speaker, could the abolition of the Committee on Un-American Activities and the addition to the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee of two words possibly have any bearing upon the pronouncements of the courts respecting pertinency of a question asked of a witness?

Since the pronouncements of the court in the Watkins case, the U.S. Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in the case of Barenblatt against United States has rejected the thesis that the Watkins case voided the basic authority of the Committee on Un-American Activities to compel compliance with its mandate to investigate subversion. I shall not comment further on the Barenblatt case because it is pending in the Supreme Court of the United States and it would be highly inappropriate for me as well as for any Member of this House, including the gentleman from California, to make any public remarks which would prejudice the Court's position in that case.

In his remarks in support of his resolution, the gentleman from California assured the House that his resolution did not involve any direct or indirect criticism of the members of the Committee on Un-American Activities or of any particular situation. If this is to be taken at face value, if he has no criticism of the committee or of any particular situation in connection with the functioning of the committee, does he expect a similar state of affairs to prevail if the investigation of subversion should be vested in another committee whose power would stem from a jurisdiction described in two words, "seditious activity"? If the Committee on the Judiciary were to conduct a hearing on "seditious activity," how would these two words resolve issues of pertinency of questions posed by the committee to a witness? The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the words "seditious activity" unlike the phrase in the present charter of the Committee on Un-American Activities have never been interpreted by the courts and it would necessitate a complete new cycle of litigation over the course of many years before there would be a body of law which could guide the investigators as to their powers and duties.

Irrespective of the motive of the author of this resolution, I say that it is a subterfuge and a fraud when it is presented to this House under the guise of strengthening investigation of subversion. If it is the will of the House that we no longer resist, investigate and legislate against communism, let us meet the issue squarely by passing a resolution precluding investigations of communism. Let us repeal the some three dozen laws now on the statute books and which have stemmed from investigations of the Committee on Un-American Activities. Let us then, Mr. Speaker, have the courage to face the American people and tell them what we have done.

I am a little amused that the gentleman from California would profess that he has no criticism of the committee or of any particular situation because most of those who are presently clamoring for the destruction of the Committee on Un-American Activities did not take this position. Most of those who join in the move to abolish the Committee on Un-American Activities complain that the committee is witch hunting, is violating fundamental rights, is promiscuously destroying reputations, and the like, that the Members of the Committee, particularly myself, are Fascist warmongers and possess other characteristics which are so vile as to be unfit for repetition. Such, Mr. Speaker, is the position of Communist agents and those under Communist discipline who constitute the leadership of the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee and its affiliate organizations, including the Citizens Committee To Preserve American Freedoms which are controlled lock, stock and barrel by the Communists.

Such is likewise the position of the National Lawyers Guild which has been bombarding the Members of this House with appeals to abolish the committee. And what might be the reason for this position by the National Lawyers Guild? Could it be that this organization has a deadly ax to grind? Well, the National Lawyers Guild has been thoroughly investigated by the committee and found to be the legal arm of the Communist Party.

A year ago, the Committee on Un-American Activities published a booklet entitled "Operation Abolition" in which is set forth complete details of the campaign against the House Committee on Un-American Activities, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the entire Government security program spearheaded by the Communist front, the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee and its affiliates. The man who is the chief ringleader of the campaign is one Frank Wilkinson, whose headquarters have been in southern California. Why should Frank Wilkinson want to see an extinction of the investigating powers of the Congress in the field of subversion? Could it be, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Wilkinson might have a personal interest in the matter? Well, Mr. Wilkinson has been identified before the Committee on Un-American Activities by former FBI agents, working underground in the Communist movement, as a hard-core Communist agent. Twice Mr. Wilkinson has been summoned before the Committee and is presently under indictment in Georgia for contempt of the committee. Under date of November 9, 1958, just 2 months ago, Mr. Wilkinson held a strategy meeting at the First Unitarian Church in Los Angeles. He was introduced as Secretary of the Committee To Preserve American Freedoms, on leave of absence to direct the campaign of the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee To Abolish the Committee on Un-American Activities. In this meeting, Mr. Wilkinson explained the importance of getting 100,000 signatures as quickly as possible sent to the Congress of the United States, and particularly those in certain districts in California, to abolish the Committee on Un-American Activities.

Wilkinson further explained that Allen Barth, chief editorial writer of the notorious Washington Post and Times Herald, would appear in California for a big kickoff drive against the House committee. Wilkinson likewise explained how he had lined up various other groups and organizations to join in the campaign. Rallies have been held, Mr. Speaker, under the auspices of the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee in over a dozen sections of the country. The chairman of the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee is an identified Communist, Harvey O'Connor, who, like Frank Wilkinson, has been cited for contempt of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California is the only person I know who has no criticism to offer of the Committee on Un-American Activities, but who wants to abolish the committee for the purpose of strengthening the investigation of subversion.

COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DOYLE] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein the texts of H. Res. 151 and H. Res. 307.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I speak in opposition to the proposal of my distinguished colleague from California, Hon. JAMES ROOSEVELT, as contained in his resolution recently filed to abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee and to transfer its jurisdiction to a subcommittee on the House Committee on the Judiciary. I will not try to cover the same field treated by my distinguished colleagues, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHERER] and the gentleman from California [Mr. JACKSON]. I had the benefit of listening to Mr. ROOSEVELT'S discussion on this floor in support of his resolution on Monday, January 12, and having now already been an active member of the House Committee on Un-American Activities for 7 years last passed, I deem it fitting that I give the House the benefit of my considered opinion and include a recommendation of my own on the subject involved. Those of you who have been Members of this great legislative body for several years will remember that I became a member of the House Un-American Activities Committee at the urgent request of the distinguished Speaker of our House, Hon. SAM RAYBURN. I did not seek it at that time and it still is a fact that I am actively at work as a member of the House Armed Services Committee.

I do not disagree with the statement frequently made by Members of this House that, on account of the extremely difficult and pressing nature of its work, the House Un-American Activities Committee is likely the most difficult committee of the House to serve as a member. Included in my remarks for the benefit of the large number of new Members of this House and also for the purpose of refreshing the recollection of the older Members, I will state that I will only have time on this occasion, to cite a very few of the major facts, showing definite progress of the Committee on Un-American Activities during the last few years, especially in the field of policies, practices and procedures. For instance, a booklet containing the revised rules of procedure of the committee was printed July 15, 1953, and since that time has been distributed or easily available to every witness and distributed to every legal counsel for every witness appearing before the committee. This major development and improvement was under a Republican administration when the Honorable Harold Velde was chairman of the Un-American Activities Committee. It was my good fortune to have the experience and responsibility of being chairman of that Committee on Rules. This printed booklet also included the text of Public Law 601 of the 79th Congress which created the Committee on Un-American Activities which consists of only nine members as a standing committee.

I understand that since the issuance of that set of committee rules on July 15, 1953, some other committees of the House have likewise such a set of rules for information and instruction and guidance of their committee. This set of committee rules is some proof of a continuing desire and determination on the part of the committee to be eminently fair and just to witnesses before it and to their legal counsel and also to perform the committee responsibility in accordance with the intent of Congress creating said committee.

In making this statement, I do not contend that there is not still room for further improvements. There always will be. But, my colleagues, since the committee rules are generally recognized substantially fair and just to the witnesses and counsel appearing before it, then of course, this fact eliminates any claim for abolishing the committee on the grounds it has no rules, nor on the grounds its rules are not substantially fair and just and just to all concerned.

Nor, did Mr. ROOSEVELT claim that the committee rules were not fair nor just. He frankly stated he was not criticizing the committee on any particular point.

I am never satisfied to have the committee stand still nor to neglect to make advancements and improvements in its policies, its procedures, and practices. Hence, what I say further today, in objection to Mr. ROOSEVELT'S resolution to abolish the committee, is not because I am entirely satisfied with my committee procedures or policies or even with its functioning in every facet, but because I believe the abolition of the committee and the transference of its necessary strategic responsibility to a subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee, would markedly weaken the position of the House of Representatives in performance of its responsibilities to continue active, diligent, adequate investigation of subversive activities. And, also in the essential area of remedial legislation: It would naturally lessen the effectiveness of the House of Representatives in the vital field of remedial legislation to meet the vigorous and ever-present conspiracy of Communist subversive infiltration wherever it chose to stick its ugly head. Also, growing out of the committee's marked advances in functioning and as further proof that substantial progress has been made by the House itself in this area, is the fact that House Resolution 151 which was filed February 22, 1955, and which was voted out of the House Committee on Rules on March 23, 1955, by unanimous committee vote and likewise unanimously agreed to by the House itself.

That resolution not only applied to the Committee on Un-American Activities, but it amended rule XI, section 25, by providing that every committee of the House, in fixing the number of its members to constitute a quorum for taking testimony and taking evidence, shall not fix a quorum of less than two committee members; that the chairman of every investigative hearing shall announce in an opening statement, the purpose of such investigation, and that witnesses at investigative hearings may be accompanied by their own counsel for the purpose of advising them concerning their constitutional rights; that if the committee determines that evidence or testimony at an investigative hearing may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person, it shall then receive such testimony in executive session.

House Resolution 151 contained other major provisions; and while it was my privilege to offer House Resolution 151, most of the text thereof came from experiences had in the committee and from other House Members, including the distinguished Speaker, and also the distinguished majority leader contributed to its provisions. May I make it crystal clear that in retrospect of my active participation as one of the nine members of this committee over a term of 7 years I recollect more than one occasion wherein if I had to do it over again I am sure I could and would do differently and that my revised action would be an improvement on what I had previously done. I include the text of House Resolution 151 in my remarks at this point:

H. Res. 151

Resolved, That rule XI 25(a) of the Rules of the House of Representatives is amended to read:

"25. (a) the Rules of the House are the rules of its committees so far as applicable, except that a motion to recess from day to day is a motion of high privilege in committees. Committees may adopt additional rules not inconsistent therewith."

SEC. 2. Rule XI 25 is further amended by adding at the end thereof:

"(h) Each committee may fix the number of its members to constitute a quorum for taking testimony and receiving evidence, which shall be not less than two.

"(i) The chairman at an investigative hearing shall announce in an opening statement the subject of the investigation.

"(j) A copy of the committee rules, if any, and paragraph 25 of rule XI of the House of Representatives shall be made available to the witness.

"(k) Witnesses at investigative hearings may be accompanied by their own counsel for the purpose of advising them concerning their constitutional rights.

"(l) The chairman may punish breaches of order and decorum, and of professional ethics on the part of counsel, by censure and exclusion from the hearings; and the committee may cite the offender to the House for contempt.

"(m) If the committee determines that evidence or testimony at an investigative hearing may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person, it shall—

"(1) receive such evidence or testimony in executive session;

"(2) afford such person an opportunity voluntarily to appear as a witness; and

"(3) receive and dispose of requests from such person to subpena additional witnesses.

"(n) Except as provided in paragraph (m), the chairman shall receive and the committee shall dispose of requests to subpena additional witnesses.

"(o) No evidence or testimony taken in executive session may be released or used in public sessions without the consent of the committee.

"(p) In the discretion of the committee, witnesses may submit brief and pertinent sworn statements in writing for inclusion in the record. The committee is the sole judge of the pertinency of testimony and evidence adduced at its hearing.

"(q) Upon payment of the cost thereof, a witness may obtain a transcript copy of his testimony given at a public session or, if given at an executive session, when authorized by the committee."

Furthermore, my own opinion is that nine members on the committee is not a sufficient number to adequately meet the increasing challenge of very heavy and necessary daily work to be accomplished. It is not a committee the functioning of which can be, or should be too much done by staff members, for the nature of its work requires and depends upon the fullest possible informed functioning of each and every committee member. In fact, if the committee were an exclusive committee and its members were not on any other major committee, it, I believe, would materially strengthen the performance of the committee's jurisdiction.

I welcome decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States bearing on the functioning of our committee. I welcome them as guideposts. For, my colleagues, the work of this committee has only been in being for comparatively a few years and I am sure considerable basic law involving the work of the committee and its jurisdiction will still necessarily be promulgated by the Supreme Court. The work of this committee will continue to be under legal attack by the enemies of internal security of the United States.

It will not surprise you for me to say that every now and then the committee cooperates to see that cases which arise, growing out of the committee's functioning, are as promptly as possible pressed forward to the final decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, so that the committee can be fully advised of just what the law in the premises is. This, I believe, is as it should be; for ours must be a government by law. There is no other source from which the committee can be guided, as to what the law in a parallel is.

There is no other way provided under our system of Government, whereby the committee can constructively function, in legal protection of the rights of individuals; and having the duty also to protect the rights and safety of the public in this very sensitive area.

Some of you have heard me frequently state, that I will fight for the right of any American citizen to exercise his right of petition; to say what he thinks; to think as he pleases; to write as he pleases; to print what he pleases and to pray as he wishes—as long as he does it within the four corners of the United States Constitution. This means he must be a law-abiding citizen. And whenever I meet a man who has an opinion different than mine, I again thank God, that under our Constitution and law, there is no legal way by which I can force him to believe as I do. Rigid conformity in thinking and doing is not on the highway to freedom, of either individuals or nations.

Now, let us further look at Mr. ROOSEVELT'S resolution and his speech in support thereof. First, I call your attention to the very first paragraph of his speech on Monday last wherein he stated:

At the outset I wish to emphasize that by abolishing the committee it is not my intention to have the House cease its activity in investigating subversion.

It therefore is crystal clear, is it not, that he recognizes that there is a continuing need for the House of Representatives to have a committee active, diligent, and adequate to continue activity in investigating subversion and in remedial legislation? By his statement, he recognizes the continuance of subversion and is in favor of the House continuing to expend tax dollars through the medium of a House committee. But he argues the present long experienced House committee should be entirely abolished and the obligation and responsibility turned over in its entirety to a different group, also of able members, but which is merely a subcommittee of the very able House Judiciary Committee with already most burdensome duties. In this connection, I have not yet heard that the House Judiciary Committee chairman or any member of the House Judiciary Committee indicate that they would welcome such new duties being placed upon them.

As one reason for advocating his resolution, the gentleman from California [Mr. ROOSEVELT] states that, on the Judiciary Committee there are two present members of the House Un-American Activities Committee, to wit: the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], the chairman, and the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILLIS], and that they would be there to guide the Judiciary subcommittee in the event the Un-American Activities Committee is transferred to an unwilling House Judiciary Committee. It is very true that these two gentlemen are able, distinguished lawyers and do render extremely valuable service in their duties on the Un-American Activities Committee, but may I state that the policy of the Democratic side of the House requires that all Democratic members of the Un-American Activities Committee be lawyers and that only one of the nine members of the present committee is not a lawyer.

Since the gentleman from California [Mr. ROOSEVELT] in his speech to the House the other day states that he had informed Committee Chairman WALTER with his "full assurance that there is no direct or implied criticism of the committee members in any fashion nor is it predicated on direct or implied criticism of any particular situation," I think it is therefore fair to conclude that he rests his case for the abolition of the Un-American Activities Committee primarily on whatever import the decision in the Watkins against U.S. case has on the Committee on Un-American Activities and its operation under Public Law 601 of the 79th Congress enacted in 1946, constituted by rules X and XI of the existing rules of the House of Representatives.

I hope I have made it crystal clear that I feel strongly that abolishing the committee, as proposed by my colleague from California, would be a major catastrophe and that transferring its duties to merely a subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee would be likewise a definite step toward minimizing the need of investigating subversion. Now, let us take a necessary brief look at the case of Watkins against United States upon which the gentleman from California [Mr. ROOSEVELT] relies to support his resolution.

In what I believe has been a diligent study by me of that case, and related cases also, I wish to state, that while my distinguished colleague and I are miles apart and diametrically opposed in our respective positions on his resolution, he strongly favoring it and I just as strongly disfavoring it, I do recognize that the case of Watkins against United States makes it very timely and necessary that this House review and reconsider the text of Public Law 601 under which the committee presently operates and to bring the operating jurisdiction and governing the committee clearly within the purview of the Supreme Court decisions. As Mr. ROOSEVELT informed you on Monday last, the highest court in our land in that case clearly indicated that it considered the text of Public Law 601 as being so indefinite and uncertain, and subject to so many different possible interpretations and opinions, that a witness before the committee might well not be able to know clearly from the text of Public Law 601, just what his position was, as to being subject to criminal contempt if he refused to answer certain questions by the committee. May I humbly state, that in connection with my study as chairman of the committee on rules for the Un-American Activities Committee in 1953, in my study of the then existing decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and district court of appeals, I then became convinced that it was a fact that the text of Public Law 601 in some places was ambiguous and uncertain and that especially the terms "un-American activity" and "un-American propaganda" were such. At that time, July 1953, and I want to emphasize that year, I so stated but it was then reasoned that sooner or later, probably sooner, the Supreme Court of the United States would find that issue squarely before it, and would no doubt make a ruling for the guidance of the committee. So I bided my time, still firmly believing and stating my firm opinion in the premises. I know some of my fellow Members realized I was not exactly satisfied with the situation.

But then on July 1, 1957, 85th Congress, under House Resolution 307, I filed a resolution which was referred to the House Committee on Rules suggesting a change in the name of the committee from Un-American Activities to Committee on Subversive Activities, also eliminating the term "un-American" wherever it appeared in Public Law 601 and establishing the jurisdiction of the Committee on Subversive Activities as set forth in my resolution in House Resolution 307. I wish to advise the House at this time, that this day, with only one or two minor changes, I have again filed the text of which originally appeared on July 1, 1957, in my House Resolution 307, referred to the House Rules Committee.

I include the text of my House Resolution 307 as part of my remarks:

H. Res. 307

Resolved, That clause 1(q) of rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives of the United States is amended to read: "(q) Committee on Subversive Activities, to consist of nine members;" and that clause 17, rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives is amended to read:

"COMMITTEE ON SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

"(A) SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

"(b) The Committee on Subversive Activities is authorized to make investigations of (i) the extent, character, and objects of subversive activities and propaganda in the United States, (ii) the Committee on Subversive Activities as a whole or by subcommittee is authorized to make from time to time investigations of the origin, extent, character and control and objects of any subversive movement in the United States which seeks to establish a totalitarian dictatorship in the United States and to destroy the representative form of government provided for in the United States Constitution, by its use of deceitful infiltration of other groups; conspiracy, treachery, sabotage, espionage, terrorism, subversion, and any subversive activity and propaganda, (iii) or by any means designed and used by it to accomplish its subversive purpose, (iv) whether it is of a domestic origin or is instigated from a foreign country, (v) any and all other pertinent questions that would aid and assist the U.S. Congress in any constitutional legislative purpose.

"The Committee on Subversive Activities shall report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session) the results of any such investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable in aid of a constitutional legislative purpose.

"For the purpose of any such investigation, the Committee on Subversive Activities, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any subcommittee, or by any member designated by any such chairman, and may be served by any person designated by any such chairman or member."

I ask for as early a hearing on this total matter before the House Rules Committee as soon as consistent and appropriate in the premises and taking into consideration the possibility that the Supreme Court may render a decision in the Barenblatt and related cases before too long.

I naturally would not do this at this time, or any time, if I did not conscientiously and urgently feel and believe that it is imperative that our House committee and every committee of the House operate in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Also if, at any time, said Supreme Court rules that we are not doing so in any case, that then we should bring our policies and procedures within the definition and interpretation laid down by the Supreme Court. Therefore, I trust that in view of the fact that I have now again taken this same position with reference to Public Law 601 as I took in 1953 and again in my resolution, House Resolution 307, on July 1, 1957, as is well known to many of you, you will not underestimate the vigor with which I oppose the Roosevelt resolution.

A few minutes ago you heard my distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] remind you that within the last month it had been proposed by him to initiate a substantial change in the jurisdiction and duties of this committee. My proposal today again filed, is not without precedent in proposing changes, the filing of the resolution, House Resolution 307, by me was considerably before we were presented with the problem before us today. I had planned to file this resolution on the opening day of this 86th Congress.

If my action in filing this resolution again, after waiting about 19 months, for a decision of the Supreme Court, be misunderstood or misinterpreted by any person, then I regret it, but my service of more than 12 years in this great legislative body dictates that it is essential to me that I stand clearly and definitively in support of principles which involve the rights of individuals and the security of our Nation against subversive activities by Communists advocating force and violence or by any other subversives against the Constitution of the United States.

You will recall that on last Monday, when the gentleman from California [Mr. ROOSEVELT] was arguing in support of his resolution, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], my distinguished and able chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee, called his attention as set forth on page 568 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for January 12 to the fact that the very question the gentleman from California [Mr. ROOSEVELT] had raised as to the meaning of un-American had been raised in the Barenblatt case now pending before the Supreme Court of the United States. I also recognize that fact and hope the Supreme Court will meet that issue squarely and render an opinion which will be another definite guidepost for Congress itself, as well as for our Committee.

On Monday you also heard my distinguished committee colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHERER], as appears on page 572 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date, state that the committee can and would change its charter as at present to agree with the decision of the Supreme Court, so as to comply with that decision if and when it came, and he stated that can easily be done.

But, lest any of you have not had opportunity to read the full text of the decision of the Supreme Court on which the gentleman from California [Mr. ROOSEVELT] relies, said Court in that decision stated amongst other pertinent language, it would be difficult to imagine a less explicit authorizing resolution. Who can define the meaning of un-American?

I do not believe that was mere dictum. However, I submit that, if the Supreme Court felt that on account of the Public Law 601 being, as it stated in its decision, there, nevertheless I call your attention to the fact that said Court did not hold nor infer that Public Law 601 was unconstitutional. It could have done so, had it so concluded. Of course, by referring exclusively to the text of Public Law 601, is not the only way in which a witness can be advised and fully informed of the pertinency of questions asked him by the committee. For instance, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in the case of Lloyd Barenblatt, appellant, in consideration of that case, which was remanded back to it from the U.S. Supreme Court on reargument of appeal, rendered its decision on January 16, 1958, in discussing the Watkins against U.S. case, stated:

> We do believe that the Supreme Court was of the opinion that the vagueness of the resolution made it necessary and only fair that the witness be apprised of the particular matter under inquiry by the committee or subcommittee holding the hearings, and, on objection, of the pertinency of the questions involved in the inquiry.

And, the U.S. Court of Appeals in said case illustrated one of the other ways by quoting from the record of the hearings before a subcommittee of the Un-American Activities Committee on which subcommittee I sat during the 2d session of the 83d Congress, at which time Committee Chairman Velde and I participated in a brief discussion so as to clarify the pertinency of the questions which were being asked witness Barenblatt, I now quote from the decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals on page 12 and 13 thereof as follows:

> Mr. DOYLE (Representative DOYLE). Mr. Chairman, I think the record should show that at this time there are pending before the United States Congress several active bills dealing with the question of subversive activities, dealing with the question of the Communist Party, dealing with the question of the responsibility that we have as a congressional committee under Public Law 601.
> I am sure that is the record, and I would like the record of this hearing of this committee to especially show it——
> Mr. VELDE (Representative Velde). Yes, I think——
> Mr. DOYLE (continuing). And that this witness and these other witnesses could help us in line with our Public Law 601 responsibility to have hearing with reference to recommendations for legislation in this area under Public Law 601 in accordance therewith.
> Mr. VELDE. I concur with you, Mr. DOYLE, and I wish to further state that the record should show that the evidence or information contained in the files of this committee, some of them in the nature of evidence, shows clearly that the witness has information about Communist activities in the United States of America, particularly while he attended the University of Michigan.
> That information which the witness has would be very valuable to this committee and its work.
> It is the opinion of the committee, at least the Chair, that the committee has a constitutional legal right in all ways and forms, and means, to get the information which has been requested from the witness.

The court of appeals affirmed the decision in the Watkins case and held that this discussion was part of definite information to Barenblatt as to the pertinency of questions being asked him.

I might say that the district court affirmed the opinion in the case of Watkins versus the United States.

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOYLE. I yield.

Mr. SCHERER. The gentleman from California [Mr. DOYLE] has been discussing the decision in the Watkins case because, as the gentleman has pointed out, one of the principal points decided by the Supreme Court in the Watkins case was that a witness called before the committee was entitled to have explained to him in detail the relevancy and pertinency of any question asked. I would like to ask the gentleman this question. Since that decision was handed down by the Supreme Court—has or has not the committee followed religiously the instruction of the Court in the Watkins case and explained to every witness the pertinency and relevancy of a question when the issue was raised?

Mr. DOYLE. I will say that whenever I have been present, it did. I do not know what it did when I was not present. But, I believe, it probably did because the committee tries to follow the decisions of the Supreme Court.

Mr. SCHERER. Whether we agree with them or not?

Mr. DOYLE. That is right.

And now, calling your attention to Mr. ROOSEVELT's statement on Monday made in his speech appearing on page 568 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date, wherein he states:

> There are, and have been for many years, citizen groups throughout the country who have urged the abolition of the Un-American Activities Committee. There is no doubt in my mind that a fringe of these groups have been Communist dominated, or Communist inspired.

I wish to further inform the House I have recently seen what appears to be a photostat of a letter dated November 14, 1958 on the stationery of what appears to be headed, "Emergency Civil Liberties Committee, 421 Seventh Avenue, New York, N.Y." The person's name to whom this original letter was addressed does not appear, but the last paragraph thereof states:

> I am enclosing a copy of the draft of our program for 1959. This program will be submitted to our national council at its New York meeting on December 14. We genuinely hope that you will read this draft carefully and give us the benefit of your criticisms and suggestions in time for the December meeting. An envelope is enclosed for this purpose.

And I have recently seen also the photostat of what appears to be the draft program for 1959 of said Emergency Civil Liberties Committee. I wish to read two paragraphs thereof:

> We call upon Congress to heed the clear decision of the Supreme Court in the Watkins case and to put an end to the unconstitutional Un-American Activities Committee. We support heartily the action of our chairman, Harvey O'Connor, in refusing to recognize the authority of that committee to inquire into his private affairs. If he should be indicted we will give all possible support to his defense in the courts.

REPEAL

We will work for the repeal of repressive legislation that was pushed through in the McCarthy days. Specifically we call for the repeal by Congress of:

1. The Smith Act.
2. The Internal Security Act.
3. The Communist Control Act.

Please also note that the abolition of the House committee is but one item of their package deal of four, designed to practically obliterate all existing internal security programs.

You will note in this last by Chairman O'Connor about 1½ months ago that he designates the Un-American Activities Committee as an unconstitutional committee. I submit that I know of no decision of any high court which makes that holding.

I have in my possession a printed petition which I received through the mail on or about January 15, 1959, from the American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California at 2863 West Ninth Street, Los Angeles, Calif. I have also received from the Committee To Preserve American Freedoms a similar petition of which I have received several copies. A letter accompanying same states:

In light of the short term of the petition's circulation, during the busy holiday season, we consider the total signature impressive. We found, you will be interested to know, that a great many of those who also feel that the committee should be eliminated declined to put their names on this petition for fear of reprisal by the committee, hardly a healthy state for this democratic Nation.

This letter from the American Civil Liberties Union addressed to me notifies me that Hon. JAMES ROOSEVELT will offer a resolution to eliminate the Committee on Un-American Activities and my support of the resolution is requested. It then states that on the date the letter was written, to wit, December 31, 1958, there had been secured on these petitions in support of Mr. ROOSEVELT'S resolution only 8,596 signatures.

I can also inform the House that there was a definite campaign in California over a considerable period by the said American Civil Liberties Union and by the Committee To Preserve American Freedoms in which they announced jointly and severally that they were undertaking to secure 100,000 signatures to these petitions by December 15, 1958. One parcel of printed matter from the Committee To Preserve American Freedoms with offices at 617 North Larchmont Boulevard, Los Angeles, Calif., directed that persons in favor of supporting the Roosevelt resolution be especially active in letting their support thereof be known to Congressmen CLYDE DOYLE and DON JACKSON, members of the committee and Democratic and Republican Congressmen respectively from Los Angeles County, Calif. I further state that I have not received a single one of these petitions signed by even one person from the great 23d Congressional District, which I have the honor to represent. I have received several unsigned sent me by leaders of the Democratic Party and Democratic groups in the great 23d Congressional District with statements that they were opposed to the Roosevelt resolution. In making this reference to these petitions, the origin of the support thereof, together with the campaign to repeal the Smith Act and the Internal Security and Communist Control Act, my opinion is, shows it is all one package, emanating from Communist-dominated or Communist-inspired persons.

I realize that there are some patriotic American citizens who have apparently lent their names in support of this program of abolition of the committee. I again reiterate my support of the right of petition to Congress of any American citizen. But, I also wish to emphasize that in support of this abolition program against the Un-American Activities Committee, the Smith Act, the Internal Security Act, and the Communist Control Act as announced by Mr. Clark Foreman and the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee and the Committee To Preserve American Freedoms, Los Angeles, Calif., are some very active persons the House Un-American Activities Committee has reason to believe have been and, as far as is now known, they still are active subversive Communists. It is clear to me, that no matter how so-called liberal or openminded any patriotic person in America is, in support of the right of freedom of thinking and nonconformity, that such persons should investigate with vigilant scrutiny whether or not the petitions or documents they are being asked to sign directed against the internal security of our Nation are not, in fact, part of the fringe of the groups that have been Communist-dominated or Communist-inspired and stated and described by Mr. Roosevelt on page 568 of his speech on last Monday in support of his resolution.

In closing, I present the partial text of a letter written to me by Director J. Edgar Hoover, U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Investigation, in answer to my inquiry to him asking his opinion as to the work and value of congressional investigative committees. Here is what he said:

The American people owe a great debt of gratitude to the work over the years of congressional investigating committees. These committees, day after day, secure information vitally needed in the consideration of new legislation. They are indeed indispensable parts of the American legislative process.

We in the FBI have the highest appreciation for the contributions rendered by congressional investigating committees dealing with Un-American activities. Each in its own way is serving the American people. The FBI is strictly a fact-gathering agency. It does not express opinions or make recommendations on the information it secures. That is the function of other officials of the Government. As the investigative arm of the Department of Justice, the FBI is charged with the duty of investigating violations of the laws of the United States, collecting evidence in cases in which the United States is or may be a party in interest, and performing other duties imposed by law. Its function is not exposure or securing information for legislative purposes. That is the function of the congressional investigating committees.

I feel that both the FBI and congressional investigating committees, in the field of internal security, have important roles to play. We are working for the same goal—protecting our great Nation from enemies who seek to destroy us. Our work is not contradictory, but mutually helpful. That is as it should be.

My colleagues, the abolition of the House Un-American Activities Committee would give to every subversive person or group of persons, not only domestic, but foreign, cause for great glee and would dangerously weaken and even destroy effective defenses or deterrents against the enemies of the American way of life as promulgated by the Constitution of the United States.

COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ROGERS of Florida). Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. JACKSON] is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HIESTAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON. I yield briefly.

Mr. HIESTAND. Mr. Speaker, apropos the remarks of our distinguished colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. DOYLE], I am sure he realizes that this petition of last fall by the American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California calling for the elimination of the Un-American Activities Committee was and is dangerous. I considered this a dangerous attack on an important instrument of our internal security program, and expressed this conviction at several public meetings. Soon citizens of the district I represent began a spontaneous counterattack with petitions supporting the committee. The movement spread to other districts and to other States.

I have here hundreds of these petitions, and and I understand hundreds more are on the way. Signed by many thousands of patriotic and clear-thinking southern Californians, these petitions are a spontaneous voice of the people that cannot be ignored. Furthermore, I have been told by colleagues from other districts and States that they too are receiving petitions. I am proud of the people of my district who started this movement. I am proud to represent such citizens.

The Un-American Activities Committee must be preserved. The attack that was launched this week followed months and years of careful preparation. The Communist-inspired front organizations, the American Civil Liberties Union, the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee, and the Communist Party itself have finally found dupes to undertake their program for undermining America. We must stop them in their tracks. I feel sure we can do it and these petitions should prove very effective.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and also ask unanimous consent that my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. MCDONOUGH], may extend his remarks immediately following mine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, continuing Un-American Activities Day, whether the Trojan Horse is hauled inside the walls of a besieged city during daylight hours by iron chains or whether it is surreptitiously pulled through the gates at night by silken cords, the threat posed to the inhabitants of the community is not diminished in any manner. By the same token, whether a bulwark against organized subversion and treachery is demolished by triphammer blows or through a process of slow erosion, the flood will eventually come through the breaches to overwhelm those who live behind the protective wall.

The antipathy toward the House Committee on Un-American Activities evidenced by some organizations and individuals within the American community its nothing new. For many years, and for a variety of reasons best known to those who seek to destroy the House Committee on Un-American Activities, efforts have been made to abolish this standing committee of the House, or, failing that, to so limit its effectiveness as to render it a completely innocuous and ineffectual instrument for the detection of threats directed against our national security and welfare. The independent activities of the several organizations in opposition have not been marked by any significant success in the past, and it was not until 2 years ago that any great effort was exerted by Red-tinged organizations in the United States to coordinate and make more effective the work of the groups which had long opposed the committee's work. In 1957 the House Committee on Un-American Activities documented the work being done nationally by these organizations to bring about the abolition of the committee, and this material was released in November 1957, by the committee in a report entitled "Operation Abolition." The report documented the campaign against the committee, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the Government security program. The attack was at that time, and presently is, spearheaded by an organization called the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee.

Parenthetically, the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee should not be confused with the American Civil Liberties Committee. I say it should not although I confess that there are times when in my own mind I question whether it should or not.

Groups coordinating with the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee are named in full in the report, including that of the Los Angeles Citizens Committee To Preserve American Freedoms, certainly a fine and fancy title. Also documented were the Communist-action records of the principal officers of the groups. The report was given wide circulation in the fall of 1957, with copies going to all Members of the Congress.

In the event the report did not personally reach all Members of the House, a copy can presently be obtained by calling the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Failing to make any considerable headway in the House in the matter of curtailing annual appropriations for the committee's use, the organizations principally concerned with the abolition of the committee, or the restriction of its powers, last year increased the scope of their operations and launched an all-out campaign from coast to coast, seeking to achieve this year the goal pursued so assiduously for many years past. To this end a nationwide campaign to obtain signatures to petitions calling for the abolition of the House Committee on Un-American Activities was launched simultaneously in a number of cities throughout the country, and the important task of mustering public support was assigned to one Frank Wilkinson, identified under oath before the House Committee on Un-American Activities as a member of the Communist Party.

On December 7, 1956, Mrs. Anita Schneider, former undercover agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the Communist Party, was a witness at a public hearing of the Committee on Un-American Activities. The following reference to Frank Wilkinson appears in her testimony:

Mrs. SCHNEIDER. The two outlines, or rather, the letter and the outline that I have in my hand—"Facts and Opinions on the Brownell-Butler Law"—were put out by the Citizens Committee To Preserve American Freedoms.

* * * * *

Mrs. SCHNEIDER. I had some contact with that committee.

Mr. ARENS. Was it Communist controlled?

Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Yes.

Mr. ARENS. Who was the ringleader in that organization?

Mrs. SCHNEIDER. I didn't work in that organization, and I don't know who the ringleader was. My contact on that occasion was with Frank Wilkinson, I believe.

Mr. ARENS. Do you know him as a Communist?

Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Yes.

Frank Wilkinson appeared as a witness at the same hearings, December 7, 1956, and refused to answer questions, stating:

As a matter of conscience and personal responsibility, I am refusing to answer any questions of this committee * * * because I challenge * * * the constitutionality of this committee.

On July 30, 1958, Frank Wilkinson was called again as a witness before the Committee on Un-American Activities, and because of refusal to answer questions was subsequently cited for contempt of Congress.

Frank Wilkinson was a speaker at a meeting of the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee—I–1956—on May 18, 1955, according to the organization's publication Rights, July 1955, page 6. An announcement of a meeting to be held jointly by the Philadelphia Committee To Uphold the Supreme Court and the ECLC on October 18, 1958, at the Adelphia Hotel, Philadelphia, showed Frank Wilkinson on the program. Letterheads of September 30, 1954, April 3, 1955, February 21, 1957, and a dinner invitation of December 15, 1958, listed Frank Wilkinson as a member of the National Council of the ECLC. As shown on letterheads of the organization, May 8, 1957, and February 14, 1958, Frank Wilkinson was a member of the executive committee of its national council.

It is abundantly clear, Mr. Speaker, that Wilkinson was given a full-time task to coordinate, and in large part, direct the drive against the committee. This task, as will be demonstrated, took Wilkinson into many parts of the Nation on behalf of "Operation Abolition." Because I am more familiar with the course of events as they transpired in Los Angeles, I shall not attempt to sketch a broad picture of the national campaign, but relate from various sources the activity in southern California. It may be presumed that the campaign on a national scale differed only in the matter of details and personalities. The interlocking and coordinated activity of Communist and non-Communist groups is significant and characteristic of the tactics of the Communist Party and its agents in pursuing any given goal. It would appear that a tactical error was committed in assigning a publicly identified member of the party to coordinate the abolition drive on behalf of the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee and the other sponsoring bodies.

Certainly, so far as the public was concerned, it put a red flag on the drive for petitions, and doubtless slowed the drive down considerably.

I stress the importance of the campaign conducted by the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee, because it is this group, more than any other in this country, which has coordinated and directed the attack on the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Nor has the drive to abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities constituted the only activity of the ECLU because, as the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. DOYLE] pointed out, the draft program for the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee seeks in addition to the abolition of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, the repeal of the Smith Act, the Communist Control Act, and other security measures which have been passed in the general welfare of the people of this country.

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON. Certainly.

Mr. SCHERER. The gentleman has discussed the drive of the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee to abolish the Committee on Un-American Activities. May I supplement what the gentleman has said or ask him if it is not a fact that part of that drive consisted in sending representatives of that committee to the various cities in which the House Committee on Un-American Activities was holding hearings and during those hearings conducted rallies opposing the committee and putting ads of sizable nature in the local papers attacking the committee.

Mr. JACKSON. That is true, and I will develop that subsequently.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point the draft program of the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The draft program is as follows:

EMERGENCY CIVIL LIBERTIES COMMITTEE
DRAFT PROGRAM FOR 1959

The hopes of the voters in the November elections included, we believe, the desire that our Federal and State governments limit their conduct to that authorized by their constitutions. Those rights of individuals which have been protected in recent rulings of the Supreme Court were successfully defended by courageous Senators in the 85th Congress. We consider it a prime responsibility of ECLC to do everything in our power to see that the rights of the people will be protected in the 86th Congress.

WORK WITH CONGRESS

Without diminishing our present legal and educational work, we will give greater emphasis to legislative activity. To develop closer relations with Congress and to keep our associates regularly informed on civil liberties, we will open a Washington office. We hope to establish better liaison with other groups now interested in civil liberties and to encourage more local committees devoted to the cause of individual rights.

ABOLITION

We call upon Congress to heed the clear decision of the Supreme Court in the Watkins case and to put an end to the unconstitutional Un-American Activities Committee. We support heartily the action of our chairman, Harvey O'Connor, in refusing to recognize the authority of that committee to inquire into his private affairs. If he should be indicted, we will give all possible support to his defense in the courts.

REPEAL

We will work for the repeal of repressive legislation that was pushed through in the McCarthy days. Specifically, we call for the repeal by Congress of—

1. The Smith Act.
2. The Internal Security Act.
3. The Communist Control Act.

We also call for the repeal by State legislatures of various so-called internal-security, teacher-screening, and loyalty-oath acts.

OPPOSITION

We will oppose any new attempts to push through Congress anti-civil-liberties legislation. From our experience in the last session of Congress, we warn the people to be prepared to resist efforts in the following fields:

1. Enabling the Secretary of State to discriminate against citizens for political reasons in the granting of passports.
2. Extending screening and blacklisting.
3. Allowing State sedition laws that would compound the witchhunt on the State level.
4. Relaxing the present requirement that Federal authorities arrest only on evidence and move without unnecessary delay to arraignment (so-called Mallory bills).

CIVIL RIGHTS

In the field of civil rights we ask that the Federal Government provide an example by insisting on the constitutional rights of all members of the Armed Forces. We will work for a law making it a Federal offense for any public or semipublic facility to discriminate against a member of the Armed Forces because of race, creed, or color.

CHALLENGES IN THE COURTS

Through our General Counsel, Leonard B. Boudin, we will continue to give free legal service to significant constitutional cases where we think Government actions require a challenge.

Passports: Although our victory in the Kent and Briehl case has put an end to the arbitrary actions of the State Department in withholding passports for political reasons, the Department still denies the right of American citizens to go to China. We plan to bring that issue to the courts in the case of author Waldo Franks v. John Foster Dulles.

Congressional investigations: In the case of newspaperman William Price, we are supporting his right to refuse to answer questions of Senator EASTLAND'S Internal Security Subcommittee dealing with Mr. Price's political views and associations. In the defense of Mr. Price our General Counsel is associated with Mr. Harry I. Rand.

Honorable discharge: The Supreme Court held in the case of Abramowitz v. Brucker, an ECLC-sponsored test case to which our General Counsel gave free legal service, that the Army was acting illegally in denying a soldier an honorable discharge because of political activity before he was inducted. The Army has obeyed the letter of the Court's decision, but has continued to ignore the constitutional implications. It now denies honorable discharge to soldiers whose political or educational activities, while in the Reserve, are not what the Army likes. In other words, men drafted into the Army must adhere for 8 years to Army ideas of what is politically acceptable if they expect an honorable discharge. Our General Counsel will contest the Army's right to such authority.

Screening and blacklisting: The Coast Guard continues to deny employment in the privately owned merchant marine to radio operators and seamen of whose political past it disapproves. Our general counsel is contesting this policy in two different cases.

In this same area our general counsel is testing the right of the transit authority in New York to dismiss a worker because he refuses to reveal his past political associations. This involves a test of the New York State so-called security-risk law.

Right to privacy: The New Hampshire Supreme Court balked when the U.S. Supreme Court, on the basis of its decision in the Sweezy case, vacated the case against Dr. Willard Uphaus. So the right of Dr. Uphaus to withhold from the New Hampshire attorney general the list of guests at the camp of the World Fellowship of Faiths is again before the Supreme Court. In this case our general counsel is associated with Dr. Royal W. France as defense counsel.

Smith Act: Although we are not supplying counsel in the Junius Scales case, we consider it of such importance that we are helping raise some of the expenses. Mr. Scales has been convicted for mere membership in the Communist Party. His conviction was remanded by the Supreme Court, and he was tried again after he had resigned as a member of the Communist Party. He was nevertheless convicted again and the case will be heard for the second time by the Supreme Court.

EDUCATION

In connection with both the legislative and legal work, there is need for increased educational efforts. In addition to Rights, which will in 1959 be published in alternate months, we intend to issue frequent legislative bulletins to our associates and to all groups interested in supporting civil liberties.

Meetings will be held in connection with issues and cases, and we will also continue to try to supply speakers to other groups interested in keeping informed on civil liberties issues.

To accomplish this program we will need the continued support of our friends and an increasing number of associates and cooperating groups. We invite criticism of this program and also suggestions for more effective work.

Mr. JACKSON. In pursuit of the aims set forth in the draft program there appeared on the regular Sunday church calendar of the First Unitarian Church of Los Angeles, on Sunday, November 9, 1958, the following notice:

2:30 p.m. Frank Wilkinson, secretary, Committee to Preserve American Freedoms, will report on the national campaign to abolish the Un-American Activities Committee. Mr. Wilkinson is on a year's leave of absence to direct this national campaign for the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee, New York.

Parenthetically it should be added at this point that the minister of the First Unitarian Church of Los Angeles, Calif., the Reverend Steven Fritchman, has long been identified with Communist-front and Communist-action groups.

Subpenaed by the House Committee on Un-American Activities in Los Angeles several years ago Mr. Fritchman declined to answer any questions having to do with his alleged membership in the Community Party and his activities on behalf of the Communist Party. However, a forum which has long been conducted in that particular church has been used consistently as a sounding board for Communists and for the dissemination of Communist propaganda in the city of Los Angeles.

The meeting, as announced, was held, and it was opened by one Henry Steinmetz of San Diego, another uncooperative witness who had declined under oath to answer questions relating to his activities in and on behalf of the Communist Party. Steinmetz announced that the American-Russian Institute, cited as a Communist organization by the Attorney General of the United States, by the Senate Judiciary Committee, and by the Internal Security Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and the House Committee on Un-American Activities, would soon occupy new quarters at 4212 Melrose Avenue, Los Angeles, Calif., and that a meeting at Baces Hall, 1530 North Vermont Avenue, on November 20, would feature Mr. Rockwell Kent, another notorious Communist. Mr. Steinmetz announced that Mr. Kent would be introduced by the Reverend Steven Fritchman, so we have them all in the same bag for the moment. Kent, incidentally, had just returned from the Soviet Union after forcing issuance of a passport from the Department of State.

Frank Wilkinson was then introduced for a talk on the progress of "The national campaign to abolish the Un-American Activities Committee with a first-hand account of his experience in recent House Un-American Activities Committee hearings." Wilkinson said that he had just come from the mail office where thousands of petitions were being put into the mails, urging abolition of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. These petitions, Wilkinson said, were a plea to southern California representatives in Congress "individually or jointly to offer at the opening of the 86th Congress a resolution to eliminate the Committee on Un-American Activities from the list of standing committees of the House of Representatives." He announced that some of the petitions were available for those in attendance. At this point, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a copy of the petition in question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[Supplement to Open Forum, vol. XXXV, No. 11, November 1958]

For a redress of grievances we petition our southern California Representatives in the Congress of the United States: 13th Congressional District, Hon. CHARLES M. TEAGUE; 15th Congressional District, Hon. GORDON L. MCDONOUGH; 16th Congressional District, Hon. DONALD L. JACKSON; 17th Congressional District, Hon. CECIL R. KING; 18th Congressional District, Hon. CRAIG HOSMER; 19th Congressional District, Hon. CHET HOLIFIELD; 20th Congressional District, Hon. H. ALLEN SMITH; 21st Congressional District, Hon. EDGAR HIESTAND; 22d Congressional District, Hon. JOSEPH F. HOLT; 23d Congressional District, Hon. CLYDE DOYLE; 24th Congressional District, Hon. GLENARD F. LIPSCOMB; 25th Congressional District, Hon. GEORGE KASEM; 26th Congressional District, Hon. JAMES ROOSEVELT; 27th Congressional District, Hon. HARRY R. SHEPPARD; 28th Congressional District, Hon. JAMES B. UTT; 29th Congressional District, Hon. D. S. SAUND; 30th Congressional District, Hon. ROBERT C. WILSON, individually or jointly to offer at the opening of the 86th Congress a resolution to eliminate the Committee on Un-American Activities from the list of standing committees of the House of Representatives.

Bishop James C. Baker, Robert Clark, Rev. Allan Hunter, Loren Miller, Esq., Gifford Phillips, Alan Sieroty, Esq., Robert S. Vogel, Clare Warne, Esq., Dr. William I. Young.

American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California, 2063 West Ninth Street, Los Angeles 4, Calif., Dunkirk 5-6234.

Mr. JACKSON. I want to direct the attention of the House membership to the name of the organization sponsoring the petitions, because it demonstrates the overlapping nature of organizations active in the abolition movement, and indicates the willingness with which non-Communist groups accept the assistance of the Communist Party and its agents when a parallel course of action is to be followed. The American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California has not, to my knowledge, been cited as a Communist-action or a Communist-front group. Nonetheless, we must assume that the American Civil Liberties Union had no objection in this instance to joining hands with Communists and Communist sympathizers in pursuing a common purpose. The petitions prepared by the American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California were made available to those in attendance by an identified member of the Communist Party, who called on known Communists and Communist sympathizers in the audience to exert their best efforts in obtaining signatures. We can be certain that they did just this, although I understand they fell considerably short of the 100,000 they wanted to get.

Now, this is a word of friendly advice. If the American Civil Liberties Union is sincere in its protestations of purity, it had best give searching inquiry to the extent that it is being used by the conspiracy for its own purposes. It would appear on the surface, and in light of recent developments, that the American Civil Liberties Union is prepared to accept help from any source, including Communist, when its own objectives appear to be served by such assistance. On the reverse side of the petition appear five excerpts from the Supreme Court's Watkins decision, emphasizing five "indictments" against the House committee. Several letters are reproduced, including one from our distinguished colleague from California [Mr. ROOSEVELT], which states:

It is my intention to cooperate in the offering of a resolution in the Democratic caucus and then on the floor of the House to eliminate the Un-American Activities Committee as one of the standing committees of the House of Representatives.

Wilkinson announced that several delegations had called on Mr. ROOSEVELT to get him to introduce such a resolution on the opening day of Congress to bring this action through the Rules Committee. Wilkinson announced that he considered Mr. ROOSEVELT's statement a rather "iffy" one, but believed that the resolution would be introduced, if not by Mr. ROOSEVELT then by someone else. Wilkinson laid great stress upon the importance of getting 100,000 American Civil Liberties Union petitions signed as quickly as possible, which would, he said, require a great deal of work by many people. I might add in this connection, that to this time I have not received one of the petitions, although it is quite unlikely any would have been directed to my attention as a member of the committee under attack. Wilkinson pointed out that if these petitions could be obtained in sufficient numbers in the districts of such Congressmen as JACKSON, HOLT, DOYLE, "and even HIESTAND" it might make them more cautious. Again, I direct attention to the fact that the petitions which these Communists were so anxious to obtain in large numbers were not initiated by any identified Communist action group, but by the American Civil Liberties Union. Continuing his presentation, Wilkinson said that Alan Barth, editorial writer of the Washington Post and Times Herald would be in Los Angeles November 14 and 15 to give a big kickoff against the House committee.

He announced that "we have the best plan in the United States" to get after the committee.

He explained that the House Un-American Activities Committee was established in 1938 and had since that time subpenaed over 5,000 individuals. He said that many of these had lost their jobs—reputations had been hurt—unions had been broken up and even churches had been hit by this "damnable committee." Mr. Wilkinson conveniently failed to add that ministerial and labor officials subpenaed by the committee had, in all instances, long and impressive records of cooperation with the Communist conspiracy. Some of the so-called labor leaders were subsequently expelled from their unions or parent organizations when their activities became known to responsible union leaders. He gave credit to the Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice for its help. He lauded the "wonderful Supreme Court rulings," and said that after the last election the skies are clearing and the climate improving.

He announced that Women for Legislative Action were cooperating in the drive to abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities. This organization is also highly suspect. He said that immediately after the Watkins decision had been handed down he was called east by Harvey O'Connor, who has been mentioned by the chairman, and Corlis Lamont, prime movers of the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee, to assist in developing the campaign against the House Committee on Un-American Activities, using as a principal lever the decision in the Watkins case. The strategy to be developed, Wilkinson said, was to have representatives at any committee hearing anywhere in the country to mobilize action and sentiment and to hinder the committee's work. I might say they were very successful in that. Our hearings during the last year have been harassed and hindered to a greater extent by Communists and Communist sympathizers in the hearing rooms than any time during my service on that committee.

He was sent to Gary, Ind., when the House Un-American Activities Committee held hearings there. He said that he began a house-to-house canvass among those subpenaed to appear as witnesses and American Civil Liberties Union members and he obtained more than a thousand dollars to run an ad in the Gary Post. The work in Gary, he announced, brought out 200 people on the date of the hearings. One of the principal tasks in so harassing this committee of the Congress, he said, is to get the "right people out."

There can be little question in the mind of any thoughtful person but that the Communist Party and its agents have been a driving force in the present drive to abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities, or transfer its functions in such a manner as to render it completely innocuous. I respect the opinions of every colleague in the House, and I do not question their motives in the introduction of legislative proposals. However, I feel that I am dutybound to put on the record whatever evidence there is of Communist participation in a drive to abolish what I consider to be one of the most important committees in this House. That there is opposition to the committee from outside Communist ranks none will deny. Some of this opposition is decidedly non-Communist in nature. I do not believe my colleague from California would under any circumstances lend any measure of comfort to the Communist Party or place in its hands an instrument to be wielded against American institutions. Yet it is abundantly evident that the introduction of Mr. ROOSEVELT's resolution to abolish the committee and submerge its functions among several other subcommittees of the House Committee on the Judiciary has in fact been hailed in Communist circles as the first truly effective blow against the House committee.

There is abundant and documented proof that the burden of the abolition operation has been assumed and carried by Communist action groups, and that the principal beneficiaries of the committee's abolition would be those whose dedication is to another and far different form of government.

The argument has been advanced in some quarters that the task of combating subversion and disloyalty is a matter for the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other security agencies. Those who pursue this old argument must, by this time, be aware that the functions of law-enforcement agencies differ materially from the functions of a committee charged by the Congress with investigations looking toward recommendations for legislative action. The Federal Bureau of Investigation is not equipped in any respect to pursue inquiries directed to the legislative purpose, and the utility of the FBI to pursue its own important work would be damaged immeasurably by any attempt to shoulder it with the unwanted task of reporting to the Congress on its detailed operations as the investigations, from time to time, disclose the necessity for new legislation. The House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States have wisely provided that from these two bodies there shall be detailed to certain Members the responsibility of conducting inquiry into the propaganda efforts of those who seek the destruction of our institutions. To this end both of the Houses of Congress have gathered together trained staffs to investigate, analyze, and prepare their findings on the activities of a common enemy for submission to the two Houses for appropriate remedial action.

The House Committee on Un-American Activities is no sinecure. It is hard work and a task that is made no easier by the unremitting pressures which are brought to bear upon the members of the committee. Upon accepting appointment of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, one voluntarily lays himself open to unmitigated abuse, personal vilification, and unwarranted calumny. This is the recognized lot of one who accepts the gage of battle hurled down by the Communists, the fellow travelers, the liberal press, and those whose concept of individual liberty completely blinds them to the nature of the threat with which we are confronted as a Nation. They appear to forget that a smiling Soviet Ambassador represents the mailed fist that smashed the Hungarian freedom fighters and gave Budapest a terrible blood bath. Enveloped in the charm exuded by an affable Mr. Mikoyan, there appears a tendency on the part of some to close their eyes to the grim reality of the titanic struggle being waged, and to picture a mortal enemy of human freedom as a casual window shopper and genial visitor. No member of the House Committee on Un-American Activities will yield to anyone in a desire to achieve a world at peace, a world in which all of the peoples of the earth can live their lives, untroubled by the implications of nuclear weapons and intercontinental ballistic missiles. This is a world we all want, and it is a goal which the members of the House Committee seek to achieve, in common with other men of good will, irrespective of their politics. But, Mr. Speaker, the people of America cannot forget, and must not forget, that while Mr. Mikoyan shops in a supermarket, the intransigence of the Soviet Union with respect to Berlin, constitutes international blackmail and a continuing threat to the peace of the world. Janus, the Roman god, was two-faced, but no more so than the Soviet Union in its international dealings. While the one hand appears to be extended in a gesture of friendship, the other threatens the world with a club.

The House Committee on Un-American Activities did not simply spring into existence without reason or purpose. It came into being because of the nature of a threat to our Nation, and because of a record of treachery and deceit on the part of our wartime ally, the Soviet Union. If the American people are aware of the threat it is because of the work that has been done by the House Committee on Un-American Activities and its counterpart on the other side of the Capitol. I said that I had received no petitions demanding the abolition of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, Mr. Speaker, but I should add that I have received several hundred communications asking that I oppose the abolition of the committee, or the transfer of its functions elsewhere.

It has often been said, and quite truthfully, that a man is known by the company he keeps. It is true that in some instances undesirable company will attach itself to a program or project having considerable merit. That wonderful institution, the Salvation Army, could not be condemned because a corner drunk joined enthusiastically in the singing of "Rock of Ages." Nonetheless, and knowing the Salvation Army and its good works, I am confident that the band would move on down the street, leaving perhaps one or two of its members to counsel and care for the inebriate.

Unfortunately, the non-Communist groups and individuals who, for a variety of reasons best known to themselves, seek the abolition of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, do not appear to be making a dedicated effort to weed out and repudiate Communist support of the movement. For whatever reason others may oppose the work of the committee, there is no question as to why the Communists themselves would be overjoyed to see it abolished. They fear and hate the committee because they recognize it to be a major obstacle in the United States to untrammeled freedom of action in the courses which are laid down for them by the international conspiracy, and to the implementation of which they have dedicated their lives.

Exposure for exposure's sake is not, as proclaimed by some, of primary consideration in the work of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. It is a corollary of any inquiry, particulary one conducted by a public body such as the Congress of the United States.

Individuals innocent of any collaboration with the Communist apparatus are not subpenaed as witnesses before the committee, except in rare instances where it appears that certain documents and records pertaining to the conspiracy may be in the possession of a third party.

I make that as a categorical statement and challenge anyone to gainsay it.

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JACKSON. I yield.

Mr. SCHERER. How long has the gentleman been a member of the Committee on Un-American Activities?

Mr. JACKSON. About 8 years.

Mr. SCHERER. During your experience as a member of that committee, has any person been identified as a member of the Communist Party except by having a witness or witnesses who have personal knowledge of his membership in the Party and his activities on behalf of the Communist conspiracy?

Mr. JACKSON. My answer to that would be "No."

Mr. SCHERER. We followed, in the identification of individuals and their activities in connection with the Communist Party the rules of law and the rules of evidence used in our courts.

Mr. JACKSON. I would say that we did in all instances, and I reiterate that I know of no innocent person who has been subpenaed before the House Committee on Un-American Activities. We require one, and frequently two or three, identifications under oath of an individual as a member of the Communist Party before he is called before the committee.

Mr. SCHERER. In other words, there is no hearsay evidence used as is charged in many cases?

Mr. JACKSON. No, sir. I have no way of knowing what future action may be taken with respect to the resolution introduced by the gentleman from California, but I do hope that a substantial volume of opposition to the provisions of the resolution will make itself evident in the days ahead.

I applaud the action taken yesterday when, by unanimous vote, the Republican Conference of the House adopted a strong resolution opposing the abolition of the Committee on Un-American Activities. I hope that other voices in this House, on both sides of the aisle, will be raised to assure a continuation of the vital work which is presently being done. A great majority of the American people are truly concerned about the pending resolution, and they have a right to know where we stand, individually and collectively, on a question as fundamental as the one presented by the introduction of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I should like to quote from a letter with which many of you are familiar, addressed to the chairman of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, by Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, Chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, whose knowledge of the Communist conspiracy I would think would be second to none in this country, and whose splendid work through the years has not only made the FBI the most effective agency of its kind in the world, but which has done stalwart service in challenging the threat against our liberties and in taking the actions necessary to bring those responsible for the threat before the bar of justice.

In his letter to the chairman, Mr. Hoover said:

I have just finished reviewing "Operation Abolition," which will be released by the Committee on Un-American Activities on November 13, 1957. This booklet depicts another example of the apparent ease with which the Communists have been able to enlist the support of misguided individuals to assist them in obscuring their subversive workings. Certainly the real meaning of civil liberties is not understood by these Communist apologists. Your committee's role in safeguarding our freedoms is well known to every patriotic citizen, and real Americans are not going to be fooled or misled by efforts to discredit your vital task.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON. I am very happy to yield to my distinguished colleague from California.

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I am delighted that the Chairman and several members of the committee have taken the time today to so fully explain their reasons for approving the Un-American Activities Committee and its actions. I think it is wholly in keeping with good sound legislation to say that I am delighted also to hear my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. DOYLE], today, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHERER], I believe last Monday, state that if the Supreme Court decision which may be forthcoming shortly should indicate the necessity for a revision in the mandate of the committee that they would certainly believe that that should be done. I think that is a tremendous step forward.

Then, on next Thursday, Mr. Speaker, a week from today, I will ask for time to place before the House—and as long as this full record has now been placed before the House—an enlargement of the matters that I have previously discussed.

I thank the gentleman from California.

Mr. JACKSON. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it is my personal opinion, but I believe it is an opinion which is shared by millions throughout the length and breadth of the land, that at this crucial point in our national history, and at this crucial point in world history we cannot afford as a people to be lulled into any complacent dreams that the conspiracy has stopped its operations, that we no longer have anything to fear. As a matter of fact, the evidence that our committee had developed of espionage, fraud, and deceit, which has characterized the Communist Party since its inception is still going on today. If ever we needed alertness, if ever we needed a new dedication, I think it is now when we stand in danger of coming under this affable spell.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. I think in that connection it might be well to point out the comfort these people receive from decisions of the courts; and in that connection I would like to quote from Dorothy Connolly. She was chairman of the Communist Party in California. When a decision of the Supreme Court came down Miss Connolly said:

This case is the greatest victory the Communist Party in America has ever received—

Referring to a decision of the Supreme Court—

It will mark a rejuvenation of the party in America. We have lost some members in the last few years, but now we are on our way.

Mr. JACKSON. I thank the gentleman for the contribution. In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to express the high regard I hold for the chairman of this committee, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]. I have been on the committee for several years, both before and during his chairmanship. He has not permitted in the deliberations of that committee any taint of partisanship. We who serve on the committee, and I refer to Members on both sides of the aisle, realize that there is nothing the enemy would like better than to drive a wedge between us on a partisan basis. He is a good, able, decent, outstanding American, and I count myself as fortunate for having the privilege of serving on his committee.

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SCHERER. That feeling about the chairman is shared by all members of the committee, and particularly the Members on the Republican side of the aisle.

Mr. JACKSON. I am sure that is the case.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues from California, Mr. DONALD JACKSON, Republican, and Mr. CLYDE DOYLE, Democrat, both ranking members of the House Un-American Activities Committee, in opposing the resolution introduced by Mr. ROOSEVELT to abolish the Un-American Activities Committee.

My position in this matter is no sudden impulse. On the contrary it is a reiteration of my consistent support of the purposes and policies of the House Un-American Activities Committee which has effectively functioned as a security agency by fighting the spread of communism in the United States as well as exposing those people who are known Communists who believe in the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence as well as those who have associated themselves with the Communist philosophy by attempting to invade the private precincts of our religious, social, fraternal, business, and industrial circles as well as our Government on the local and Federal level.

Communism is a godless, atheistic philosophy which seeks to implant in the human mind the superiority of materialism over spiritualism and to be relentless in its pursuit to accomplish this by destroying everything that interferes with its avowed purpose.

Certainly the U.S. Government through its House of Representatives should protect itself and the high principles it stands for against any influence as destructive of these principles as is communism by continuing, retaining, and supporting the House Un-American Activities Committee.

During the recent election many frequent attempts were made by several committees, especially the committee headed by Frank Wilkerson and of the First Unitarian Church of Los Angeles, which is in my district, to contact me and obtain my support for a resolution to abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee. I consistently and vigorously refused to see these committees or discuss this question with them.

It is unfortunate that 60,000 names as reported in a recent editorial in the Los Angeles Herald-Express were obtained in Los Angeles County urging the abolition of the House Un-American Activities Committee. I am certain that many of the people who signed this petition were misinformed and misguided into believing that they were supporting a cause to protect social justice and civil rights.

I agree with the chairman of the committee, Representative FRANCIS WALTER, that there may be amendments necessary to change some of the jurisdiction of the committee. I am, however, opposed to supporting the Roosevelt resolution to abolish the committee and transfer its jurisdiction to the House Judiciary Committee.

THE SUCCESS OF THE CASTRO REVOLUTION AND THE FAILURE OF OUR STATE DEPARTMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ROGERS of Florida). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. POWELL] is recognized.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, it may come as a shocking surprise to the people of the United States—the greatest democracy in the world—that we have been the partners in the blood bath of Batista for the past years. With funds of the taxpayers of this "land of the free and home of the brave" we helped to arm Dictator Batista's forces. We sent men from our Navy, Army, and Air Force to direct his armed forces. We bestowed one of the highest U.S. military decorations on the Chief of the Cuban Air Force in November 1957, shortly after he had ordered and led the bombardment of the open city, Cienfuegos, with American planes and ammunition. Our former Ambassador, Earl Smith, openly sided with Batista upon instructions from the Department of State. Our Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Rubottom, on March 5, before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, admitted:

The Cuban Government is certainly using the military equipment at its disposal to beat back armed insurrection.

We have been partners in the casualties of 20,000 men, women, and children, victims of the Batista bloodbath over the past years. We continued this policy of aiding, abetting, arming, sympathizing with and helping to direct Batista's reign of terror in the face of repeated objections by great citizens of this country, including Members of this Congress.

On March 12, Assistant Secretary of State Macomber wrote our distinguished colleague from Oregon, Representative PORTER, that he could not furnish him the list of arms which we had given and were giving to Batista because the list was classified. Yet at that very same moment I had in my hand a complete list of the instruments of death that we had shipped and were shipping in open violation of the intent of the U.S. Congress. In section 105, subsection b, part 4 of the Mutual Security Act and the Mutual Assistance Agreement with Cuba, we, the good Members of Congress, clearly specified that arms "may be used only in the implementation of defense plans agreed upon by the United States and Cuba under which Cuba participates in missions important to the defense of the Western Hemisphere." The Army Missions Agreement on August 28, 1951, clearly stipulates that the agreement will be subjected to cancellation at the initiative of the Government of the United States or the Government of Cuba at any time when any one of the two governments finds itself involved in internal or external hostilities. I call for the Foreign Affairs Committee of this Congress to investigate the Department of State as to why it so openly, flagrantly and wantonly defied the laws and intent of Congress and its own agreement.

I held several conferences with the present president of Cuba, Dr. Urrutia, the Provisional Treasurer of Cuba, Mr. Raoul Chivas, and the representative of Mr. Castro in the Western Hemisphere, Dr. Mario Llanera. I was able to get from Senor Castro the documents which our State Department said were "classified" and could not be released to a U.S. Congressman. Despite the fact that officials in our Government tried to prevent me from disclosing these documents, on March 20, on this floor of Congress, I listed in detail the sorry record of our support of Batista. This included the contract numbers, specifications, description in detail of rifles, grenades, rockets, howitzers, tanks, machineguns, cartridges, armored cars, bombs, automatic rifles, and mortars. I have attached to this speech the full speech as recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 104, part 4, pages 4948–4949.

WITHIN 48 HOURS THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE STOPPED ALL ARMED SHIPMENTS AND THIS WAS THE BEGINNING OF THE END OF BATISTA

Is it not amazing that during the 20 years of Batista's bloodbath no one challenged him or his government for their atrocities. Now that the guilty are being punished there is a great hue and cry. This is the kind of hypocrisy that causes our would-be friends to view us with suspicion.

The shallowness of our foreign policy with the Latin American countries is best symbolized by the fact that major decisions can be made upon the basis of one or two speeches by Members of this Congress. The truth is that we have no policy for Latin America. As was brought out in the New York Times magazine section this past Sunday, as a result of our Department of State's policy anti-Yankeeism today is perhaps stronger than ever before in Cuban history. Cuban hostility is directed against American policies not American people.

Cuba now has a new government and what we need is a new policy in our Department of State with new representatives not only in Cuba but throughout Latin America. In August 1957 the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, Mr. Anderson, told Latin Americans that they were wasting their time discussing the Development Loan Institution. But 3 months after Vice President NIXON and his wife in Latin America had to bear the brunt of the failures of our Department of State, the Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, C. Douglas Dillon, announced U.S. support for exactly such a development bank that our Latin American friends had asked us for in 1957.

The Department of State did move on March 22 when I demanded on the floor of Congress on March 20 that they stop sending arms. But why so late?

Meeting in conference with my friend, Dr. Mario Llanera, the representative of Senor Castro, I requested on last Monday, January 5, at 11:30:

First. The recognition of the Castro Government.

Second. The offer of financial assistance.

Third. The refusal of asylum in the United States to Batista.

Fourth. The recall of former Ambassador Earl Smith.

I am happy to say that within 5 days the State Department did all four of these things.

From this beginning last week we could have gone on to a constructive foreign policy in Latin America that would undoubtedly have brought much good to our friends in the Caribbean and ourselves. But now we have immediately turned around and are sending 55 U.S. Marines with 5 officers and 4 noncommissioned officers to Haiti to help train the Haitian Army. This deal was done with the approval of the State Department although negotiated by the Navy. Private information has reached me from Haiti that the entire deal was masterminded by Trujillo, himself. Trujillo and Haiti haven't spoken to each other since he massacred 35,000 Haitian laborers at the border a few years back. Now that he is about to be invaded and defeated, he needs Haiti because the Haitian border is the jump-off place.

On the northern coast at the point where Haiti and the Dominican Republic join each other there is a town called Monte Cristi. This has an excellent seaport on the Haitian side. From that point Trujillo will be invaded and will be conquered and he knows it. He has sucked the United States into the deal by getting them to provide our Marines to beef up the Haitian Army which is a police force. He has given Duvalier, the Dictator of Haiti, $13 million top priority of which is to pay the United States for the cost of this Latin American Hitler-Mussolini type axis of Trujillo-Duvalier.

I urge my colleagues on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and on the House Foreign Affairs Committee to stage an immediate investigation. We must demand that these Marines do not leave New York next Tuesday for Haiti and we must find out just who has the connections with the administration who can be bought off by Duvalier and Trujillo and for his price deliver the United States into the hands again of blood-built dictators.

Haiti is now being run by a despicable and desperate Duvalier. That beautiful land of wonderful people in which I have had such deep personal interest is now a land of terrorism and assassination.

Here we go again, the United States of America, to support another blood bath. When will we stop being hypocrites? When will we stop preaching democracy at home and practicing fascism all over the world? The days of the dictators are numbered, yet we continue to support them; Duvalier of Haiti, Trujillo of the Dominican Republic, Stroessner of Paraguay, and Sonoza of Nicaragua. As surely as I stand here their days are numbered. Across the broad earth's surging breast the irresistible force of free men will sweep these petty pirates from their thrones and with them will go the good will toward our Nation unless we change our foreign policy toward Latin America, not tomorrow but today.

President Betancourt of Venezuela sent me a message through Dr. Llanera that he believes that no country should be allowed to be a member of the Organization of American States that does not hold democratic elections. The Foreign Affairs Committees of the Senate and of the House should consider very carefully any form of aid to those countries presided over by tyrants. The cry should go up from those of us who belong to this greatest Congress of the world's greatest democracy—"No more aid for tyrants!"

The appointment of Mr. Phillip Bonsal as the new U.S. Ambassador to Cuba is a wise one. His appointment will be utterly meaningless unless he is backed up with a new Department of State policy which will not force him, as it forced former Ambassadors Gardner and Smith, to play "footsie" with Fascists.

Finally, one very naive Member of this House tried to pin the Communist label on the Castro movement. But, in a speech delivered to this House on Monday, May 12, 1958. I detailed the exact connections of the Communist Party with Batista and Batista's brutal aggressions against the Roman Catholic Church in Cuba.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may now attach to this speech all the speeches delivered by me in previous sessions of this body concerning Cuba, Batista, and Dr. Fidel Castro.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Mar. 20, 1958]

STOP THE FLOW OF ARMS TO BATISTA

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. POWELL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

(Mr. POWELL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, the United States is a partner with the dictator of Cuba, Fulgencio Batista, in the killing of close to 4,000 Cubans so far, and it is time that we should get out and get out at once. We not only have been and are supplying arms to Batista, but we have a military mission established in Cuba actively assisting the Cuban Army. There should be immediate stoppage of the flow of arms and ammunition from this country and there should be an immediate withdrawal of the mission.

The following is a list of the arms that have been sent to Cuba with the contract number during the past 2 years:

Contract da Cuba 551: Tools for the repair of Browning machineguns. Regular shipments being made.

Contract da Cuba 553: 3,000 M–1 caliber 30 rifles and spare parts; 1,500 75-millimeter grenades; 1,000 3.5 millimeter rockets; 1,000 60-millimeter mortar grenades; 5,000 81-millimeter mortar grenades; 1 complete battery of light mountain howitzer artillery, shipment completed except for some accessories and spare parts.

Contract da Cuba 554: 1 fire direction set (artillery set No. 5).

Contract da Cuba 555: Tools for the repair and maintenance of caliber 30 rifle M1903A3. Partial shipments being made.

Contract da Cuba 559: 7 M4A3 tanks equipped with 76-millimeter gun. Shipment completed.

Contract da Cuba 560: 6 AN–PRC–10 radio sets; 1 SB–18/GT emergency switchboard; 2 SB/22/PT switchboard; 3 WD–1/TT wire; 10 EE–8 telephone; shipment completed.

Contract da Cuba: 38 AN/VRC–10, delivered; 138 installations units for above, delivered; 1 AN/URM–48 signal generator, delivered; 38 TS–LCC handset, in process; 1 ID–292/PRC–6 alinement indicator, in process; batteries, wire and crystals for above, partial shipments made.

Contract da Cuba 571: 20 .50-caliber Browning machineguns; 20 .30-caliber Browning machineguns; 100,000 cartridges armor piercing, for .50-caliber machineguns. Spare parts for above. Shipment completed except for spare parts, in which partial shipment is being made.

Contract da Cuba 565: 4 Brush B–168038. Delivery scheduled for April 1958.

Contract da Cuba 569: 1,500 M–1 carbines; 150 spare parts; 7,500 hand grenades MK–2. Delivery completed except for spare parts, on which first partial shipment was made on October 18.

Contract da Cuba 570: 16 B M70D telescopes. Shipment scheduled for April 1958.

Contract da Cuba 571: 20 .50-caliber linking and delinking machines.

Contract da Cuba 572: Tools for the repair of M4A3 tanks. Shipments in process.

Contract da Cuba 578: Periscopes for M4A3 and M3A1 tanks. Shipment scheduled for April 1958.

Contract da Cuba 579: 20 M20 armored cars. Being rebuilt to be delivered.

Contract da Cuba 580: Communication equipment valued at $89,998.66. Delivery scheduled for August 1958.

Contract da Cuba 587: 1950 Garand rifles caliber .30. Delivered in March 1958.

Contract da Cuba 591: Spare parts for 77 mm. battery. In process.

Contract da Cuba 592: Tools for the maintenance of M4A3 tanks. In process.

Contract opc 64 (USAF): Bombs for the Cuban Air Forces, valued at $328,931.48. Shipped in October 1957.

Contract da Cuba 64 (USN): 300 5-inch rockets; already delivered.

Contract da Cuba 66 (USN): 25,000 20-mm. caps. Shipment in process.

Contract da Cuba 6400 (USN): 50 magazines for 20-mm. guns. Shipment in process.

Besides these are the following requests on which no contract number had been assigned, as of the date of information received: 50 Browning automatic rifles M–1918A2; 3,000 75-millimeter grenades; 24 60-millimeter mortars; 20 50-caliber machineguns; 1,000 60-millimeter grenades; 10,000 hand grenades; 10 radio transmitter-receivers AN/G–R9 for jeep installation; 10 3.5-inch rocket launchers, M20B1; 1,000,000 30-caliber caps for above; 6,000 United States caliber 30 M–1 rifles; 2,000 United States caliber 30 M–1 carbines.

MEMORANDUM TO CONGRESSMAN ADAM C. POWELL, JR., FROM DR. MARIO LLERNA, CHAIRMAN, CONCERNING THE CUBAN CRISIS AND U.S. HELP TO DICTATOR BATISTA

"Fulgencio Batista first came to power in 1933 during the revolution that overthrew Dictator Machado. He was a sergeant in the army and as such he staged his first military coup d'etat (September 4, 1933).

"After 4 months of civilian provisional government, he overthrew President Grau San Martin and became Cuba strong man. In this he was openly encouraged by American Ambassador Jefferson Caffery.

"For 11 years Batista ruled the country uncontested. He stepped out of power in 1944 after a constitutional election, and became a political exile immediately afterward.

"In 1952 Batista went back to Cuba and presented himself again as candidate for president. The election was to be held on June 1, 1952.

"When it was all too obvious that he didn't have the slightest chance, he talked his old military pals into staging another coup d'etat, his second. That was March 10, 1952, just 80 days before the scheduled election.

"Since that date Batista rules Cuba as probably the most corrupt and bloodiest tyrant in all Latin American history.

"It is convenient to have in mind that in 1954 Batista had himself elected in a phony election in which he was the only candidate. It was a matter of having some democratic front mainly for the purpose of impressing American public opinion. It was a ridiculous farce, all prefabricated in Batista's military quarters. The people, of course, did not participate.

"Since Batista took power in 1952 all civil liberties and individual rights perished in Cuba.

"The number of people assassinated by Batista's armed forces and secret police run well above 4,000.

"All the Cuban people are against Batista—civic leaders, professionals, cultural and religious institutions, etc.

"The U.S. Government has been favorable to Batista all along. Former Ambassador Arthur Gardner acted short of being Batista's best publicity agent.

"But it is selling arms to Batista as well as providing him with tanks, planes, and other military equipment under the pretext of the Rio Treaty (for hemispheric defense) which has contributed most to keep him in power against the will of the Cuban people.

"Last September 1957, during an uprising that took place in the navy garrison, the civilian population of Cienfuegos (50,000) were bombed and machinegunned with American jet planes flown by airmen trained by American instructors.

"Small villages of the Oriente Province have suffered that same treatment in reprisal for helping Castro's revolutionary army with food and information. Hundreds of innocent men, women, and children have been killed that way.

"On top of all this, an American military mission is kept in Cuba, also under the clauses of some mutual defense treaty. Such a mission is supposed to be there in order to instruct Cuban armed forces for the event of some continental aggression. But as everybody in Cuba says, if they (Batista's armed forces) haven't been able to wipe out Castro's guerrillas in Oriente, what could they do in the presence of some mighty invader?

"The American military mission in Cuba, however, serves one purpose: give moral support to Batista and his gang and identify itself with the dictator.

"DR. MARIO LLERENA,
"Registered Agent for Dr. Fidel Castro and the 26th July Movement."

"NEW YORK, N.Y., March 18, 1958.

"No one in Cuba today supports Batista. On March 17 in Habana, Cuba, a manifesto was given to President Batista from the representatives of 42 religious, fraternal, professional, civic, and cultural organizations. It said: 'The bitter passions inundating the country will plunge it into anarchy unless Batista steps down.'

"Finally, I would like to conclude with this letter which has just been smuggled out of Cuba through the underground to my friend, the provisional president of the Fidel Castro movement, who is now in voluntary exile in New York:

" 'In April 1957 I resigned my commission in the Cuban Navy as a one-man protest against the wholesale murders committed by fellow officers of the navy (namely Lieutenant Laurent, Lieutenant Olayon, and Ensign Perez Mejides) on the farming communities of the Sierra Maestra. This is no hearsay or exaggeration. I am an eyewitness to several of them, as during the months of January, February, and March of 1957, my ship, the frigate Jose Marti F–301, was conducting a patrol from Santiago de Cuba to Cabo-Cruz, we used to go into Pilon Harbor (headquarters of the navy infantry contingent that was operating against Fidel Castro) and where the above-mentioned officers conducted their unspeakable crimes against defenseless canecutters and small merchants. These two cases will give you an idea of the situation that is still going on in an even greater scale in Oriente Province and in Habana.

" 'On the morning of February 2, 1957, while in Pilon, I went ashore to relax a little along the outskirts of the village, and I found a half burnt bohio and the inside was plainly visible. There were four bodies inside, three adults (two females and a male) mutilated beyond recognition and in a crude crib a child about 3 or 4 years old with a bayonet pinning it down through the stomach. These murders had been performed the night before by Lieutenant Laurent upon learning that the guajiro had expressed himself in favor of Castro in one of the local bars. Later that day Laurent was aboard a ship and confessed in order to impress all of us that he had personally ordered and participated in the murders. About 2 weeks later—February 16, 1957—we were again in Pilon. That night a group of officers from the ship (I was in the group) went ashore for a walk. Nearing the canefields we saw a fire a short distance away. We ran toward the fire to try to help. What we saw still makes me sick literally. Tied to three palm trees, were six individuals, two men and four women, all naked, their bodies soaked in gasoline and a fire built at their feet. Twenty armed sailors with Lieutenant Olayon were conducting the affair. The first thing they did was to point their guns at us (we were unarmed) and ordered us not to interfere and to go back to the ship. When we reached the pier, it was heavily patrolled by Laurent's men who had orders to shoot anyone coming ashore, we were permitted to go aboard, but that was all. Next morning we saw the burnt bodies still tied with wires to the palm trees. Later we learned that the men were small merchants in town, his nephew, his wife, and three daughters, accused of having sold food to Castro (more than 100 miles away). The women had been brutally violated before. Upon arrival in Havana, I presented my resignation, stating plainly my motives, and in a personal interview with the chief of the navy (Adm. Rodriguez Calderon) I restated that I was unwilling to continue to wear the same uniform as murderers like Olayon, Laurent, etc. Needless to say, my resignation was accepted immediately. Since then things have gone from bad to worse. All political suspects, whether innocent or not, are tortured beyond imagination, some killed afterward, and most kept in this so-called preventive prison against all law and order. Our lives are constantly in danger, but don't worry, we will manage somehow.'

"Maybe the New York Times will be interested in all this.

"I will write you soon.

" 'Your loving brother."

Protection for Dr. Mario L'Erena

(Extension of remarks of Hon. Adam C. Powell, Jr., of New York, in the House of Representatives, Tuesday, April 1, 1958)

Mr. Powell. Mr. Speaker, information has just been received by me from the Fidel Castro movement in Cuba that two hired assassins are applying for their visas from the American Embassy in Havana to come to the United States. They are being sent by the dictator of Cuba, Batista. Their names are Miguel Sotolongo and Juan de Dios Seloiziano, and their intended victim is Dr. Mario L'Erena, who is the national director of the 26th of July movement representing in the United States Fidel Castro.

I demand that the Department of State refuse to allow these two men to enter our country and I demand that Dr. L'Erena be protected. We cannot have another Galindez-Murphy assassination.

I have also learned that due to the revelation of the amount of arms sent by our Government to Batista, which was stated on the floor of Congress on March 20, 1958, and due to the remarks of my colleague, the Honorable Charles Porter, of Oregon, the State Department has canceled further shipment of arms to Batista.

Cuba

(Extension of remarks of Hon. Adam C. Powell, Jr., of New York, in the House of Representatives, Wednesday, April 2, 1958)

Mr. Powell. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Record, I include the following letter and related material:

Miami, Fla., March 23, 1958.

Hon. Adam C. Powell, Jr.,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D.C.

Dear Sir: As a former Prime Minister and President of the Cuban Senate, I read with unusual interest your remarks of March 20 on the floor of the House.

Heartiest congratulations for your courageous and gallant intervention in behalf of my country. Through such speeches, and by supplying such information to your colleagues in the House, you are contributing mightily to the defense of democracy in the Western Hemisphere and to amicable relations between your great country and mine.

You will be interested to know that I have just written a letter to the Honorable Secretary of State, Mr. John Foster Dulles, in which I question the advisability of continuing American military assistance to Dictator Batista, especially in view of the fact that he has violated repeatedly the mutual defense agreement. I also pointed out in my letter that, since there exists in Cuba a state of domestic hostility or civil war, the Government of the United States can and should recall its military mission from Havana. To do nothing is to proclaim that the U.S. Government is backing Batista in his struggle to maintain himself in power, in opposition to the expressed wishes of the Cuban people.

I enclose for your information the following papers:

1. A newspaper report (before censorship was imposed) of the barbaric tortures inflicted upon a 50-year-old schoolteacher, and the courageous protest of the attendant doctor.

2. A copy of a letter written by a group of 11 magistrates to the supreme court, in which they stress the lack of guarantees for the judiciary in Cuba. Batista, through the armed forces, prevents the judges from acting.

3. A copy of my statements to the American press during my recent visit to Washington. You will note that I criticize the State Department, the Pentagon, and the Inter-American Defense Board.

4. My thoughts on why the Cuban Peace Commission was doomed to failure. Although this document is out of date because the Commission failed a few days after I prepared it, it does show that there is no solution to the Cuban crisis as long as Batista is in power.

Hoping you will continue to work for amicable Cuban-American relations, I remain,

Gratefully yours,

Manuel Antonio de Varona.

Tortures Under Batista

The distinguished educator, Miss Esther Milanés, was subjected to unbelievable tortures after she was arrested last February 24. She was kept at the 12th district police station until the 27th of that month, when she and another woman were released, after undergoing barbaric and cruel tortures. Here's how the doctor's report reads:

"The patient presents multiple bruises and lacerations in the gluteal regions (buttocks) as well as lesions over all her body, serious internal injuries in the vagina, and deafness due to destruction of her tympanum (eardrums)."

In connection with this case, Dr. J. A. Presno, a distinguished physician, has sent the following letter to the president of the supreme court:

"Havana, March 8, 1958.

"Honorable Sir: According to the press, Miss Esther Milanés has accused certain police officers of grave and inhuman treatment.

"The indescribable odyssey suffered by my patient, performed with inconceivable sadism, makes evident not only a threat to our most elemental human rights, but also a lack of respect toward womankind. This respect, which we men owe to all women, is tied up with the love we feel for our mothers, who gave us life.

"As a son, a husband, and a father, I appeal to this, the highest court in our land, to demand an investigation of these serious charges" (as reported by the newspaper Excelsior, Havana, Cuba, March 9, 1958).

Lack of Guarantees for the Judiciary in Cuba

The following letter, sent by a group of magistrates to the supreme court, demands guarantees for the judicial branch of the Government and describes the terrible conditions prevailing now in Cuba:

"Never before in the history of our country had the administration of justice been so ridiculed and mocked. For example, a soldier shot to death a judge's two sons; two magistrates' homes were riddled with bullets, while a bomb exploded in another; a judge was imprisoned and kept without food; two men due to appear in court were found dead.

"All vices are exploited by the same people who are paid to prosecute them. The list of murdered citizens grows by day and the assassins are not prosecuted.

"A fire has broken out or a bomb has exploded in every single court building; a man was found shot to death a short distance from the supreme court and the killers have not been found.

"In some municipalities violent deaths are reported daily, but the judges are prevented from acting by the armed forces." (Reported by the press on March 9, 1958, and signed by 11 magistrates.)

Statements to the American Press by Dr. Manuel Antonio de Varona, Who Was Prime Minister and President of the Cuban Senate in Cuba's Last Constitutional Government, Which Was Overthrown by Batista on March 10, 1952

On my way through Washington, I wish to inform the press about the most recent barbaric acts committed by Batista's dictatorship.

In addition to the students, farmers, workers, and professionals murdered daily, Batista is employing physical torture on suspects and political prisoners, regardless of age, sex, or physical condition. The most tragic case is that of Esther Milanés, a 50-year-old schoolteacher, who was brutally beaten up by the police in Habana. This infamy has been denounced to the supreme court by Dr. J. A. Presno, a distinguished physician. Details are given in a separate sheet.

I feel it is ridiculous to tell the free world that Cuba belongs to the family of democratic nations and to keep an American military mission there. The mission, whose task is to train Cuban officers for continental defense, in reality only serves to prepare officers to defend a crumbling dictatorship which is finding an ever-increasing wave of popular resistance and to squash the democratic aspirations of all the Cubans who oppose Batista.

The concept of hemispheric defense and a mistaken interpretation of the principle of neutrality toward recognized governments, confuses public opinion in Latin America. Since this policy is applied equally to democratic governments and dictatorial regimes, Latin Americans see in this American attitude an open support of American dictatorships.

These errors may be due to the inexperience of ambassadors who are not career officers and who do not inform their government properly of the conditions prevalent in the dictatorship countries. Another source of errors is the Pentagon; still another is the American Defense Board. The designation of officers on good-will missions and the granting of medals to the high military officers who guide and direct the killings and tortures of the dictator's enemies usually come from these organizations.

In the case of Cuba, misguided policies are creating ill will among the Cubans and placing this Government in an untenable position, for it is contradictory to fight dictatorships in Europe and Asia, while not doing the same in Latin America.

It is impossible to play the part of world leaders of democracy while military and technical help, as well as arms, are given to despotic governments, enemies of democracy, which is one and indivisible.

In short, I protest against the military help being extended to Dictator Batista, first because it serves to keep in power an unpopular government, and, second, because Batista violates the letter and the spirit of the mutual defense assistance agreement.

The worst instance to date of this violation was the inhuman attack against the open city of Cienfuegos, when tanks and airplanes put down by force the uprising of September 5, 1957. These were arms supplied to Batista by the U.S. Government in conformity with the provisions of the mutual defense assistance agreement for the defense of the Western Hemisphere.

WHY THE NEW CUBAN PEACE COMMISSION IS INVALIDATED FROM THE START

(Confidential to high U.S. Government officials and legislators)

As a former Prime Minister and President of the Cuban Senate, I would like to tell you, quite frankly, why the new Cuban Peace Commission is doomed to failure from the start.

1. Batista has already outmaneuvered the church. As you know, the Roman Catholic Church is very powerful in Cuba, but it had never before intervened in political affairs.

The proclamation made by the Cuban episcopacy was, at first, a hard blow to Batista. But the dictator is a master strategist. He managed to talk the church leaders into naming a peace commission formed by lay leaders with whom he has always maintained the closest friendship. Thus he tricked the church into turning over its efforts to a pro-Batista group. In other words, it's another stall to consolidate himself in power.

2. The men who make up the new peace commission are not qualified to carry out its high objectives impartially or adequately. Here's why:

Dr. Cuervo Rubio is a former Vice President who served under Batista and is the doctor of Batista's wife.

Dr. Raúl de Cárdenas has received big favors from Batista in the past.

Mr. Victor Pedroso, banker, intimate friend of the Batista family, has had large financial dealings with the present regime.

Rev. R. P. González, prior to becoming a priest, was Under Secretary of Agriculture in the Batista government. He also used to be assistant to Martinez Saenz, president of the National Bank of Cuba.

Thus it is obvious that the above men could hardly be expected to tell Batista to go in order to make way for a new national government, as suggested by the episcopacy.

3. The opposition parties have already rejected the idea of any coalition government which includes Batista. There was a time when Cubans would have settled for elections, guaranteed civil rights or almost anything else. The Cuban situation has deteriorated to such an extent, however, that the only acceptable condition is: Batista must go. Unless the tyrant goes, the Cuban problem will remain unsolved.

In conclusion, if anyone doubt Batista's intentions, let him read his speech, given today, March 10, the sixth anniversary of his treacherous military coup. In very plain language he stated that there would be no concessions forthcoming, except elections in June on his own terms.

TO THE PEOPLE OF CUBA

Once again the Aggregate of Cuban Institutions—made up of religious, fraternal, professional, civic, and cultural organizations—wishes to express publicly its considered opinion in regard to the possibilities of solving, without bloodshed, the grave crisis affecting the nation, and to demand, from the Government, the kind of decision this moment calls for, if we, in this last and desperate effort, are to avoid the impending collapse of our fundamental state institutions.

This association, whenever it has raised its voice, has done so with a sense of responsibility, and a belligerent attitude for peace, and has often expressed, in frantic appeals, that it was necessary to arrive at a just solution of our grave international crisis. Fearful of the risk that uncontrolled passions would sink the nation into anarchy, it announced that, in such a contingency, these Cuban institutions would know how to fulfill their duty.

The moment has arrived. The Government, by ignoring all the appeals for peace and by depending on armed might, has provoked with that attitude the reaction of the young men and women of Cuba, who have exchanged their schoolbooks for war equipment and have started a general movement full of heroism and sacrifices, now admired and followed by all the social classes in our country. Against them, through 6 long, agonizing years, the regime has mobilized its entire repressive apparatus, which has been systematically employed with unsurpassed cruelty. Upon defenseless women and helpless adolescence has fallen the continuous and unmerciful weight of security forces in a manner having no parallel in the history of civil wars.

The regime has refused to look into the motivations behind our youth's actions, and, after subverting the juridical order of our state through an act of force, has suspended again all constitutional guaranties, having just announced a new drive to recruit 7,000 soldiers that might silence, in a war of extermination, all protests. It will all be in vain; the number of victims will increase, but the rebel movement will extend itself, because next to the young people and with them, both openly and clandestinely, is standing by the whole nation.

The people, witnessing with utter amazement the continuous flow of blood of its best human reserves, fails to understand this war of extinction, and cannot comprehend why the military supporters of this regime are fighting so hard to defend a government repudiated by the people.

The spectacle which Cuba's martyrdom offers to the world has not roused the feelings of those who seized power and who pretend to keep it against the will of all. No one hears the loud and excruciating outcry of mothers. No one listens to the voice of institutions not devoted to any particular sect, while the word uttered with pain by our venerable episcopacy receives, by way of answer, the deceiving, harsh imposition of an obstinate will to rule.

The Aggregate of Cuban Institutions has, thus far, proposed reconcilable formulas and civilized understandings. But now, aware of the fact that our nation is on the verge of collapse, we serenely demand the end of the present regime, since it has been unable to carry on the normal functions of government and to fulfill the high aims of statehood. As we request the discontinuance of the present administration through the abdication of those in the executive branch, and the dissolution of Congress, we are moved mainly by the instinct of social preservation, our intention being to contribute, in this manner, to the reestablishment of peace by removing the only cause that prevents a civilized solution.

This petition visualizes and carries with it the formation of a provisional government, formed by citizens of outstanding prestige, designated by all the vital forces of our nation, and having, as its aim, the pacification of the country through the adoption of the necessary measures that may lead, in a brief period, to free elections under full democratic guarantees, thus fulfilling our historic destiny.

To that end, the provisional government will confine itself to a minimum program, fundamentally containing the aims listed below. The said government will:

(a) Respect private property and be under obligation to fulfill all agreements and pacts, whether bilateral or in conjunction with the United Nations, as well as all promises and liabilities contracted by the Republic, deferring to the Congress the faculty of determining, at an opportune time, if they were contracted according to our constitution and our laws.

(b) Will declare null and void all the sentences dictated by the tribunals of the Republic and courts-martial held after March 10, 1952, dealing with political offenses intended to overthrow the regime instituted on that date.

(c) Govern itself, insofar as its peculiar nature permits, by the constitution of 1940, which will prevail especially in regard to individual rights.

(d) Exercise the legislative powers of government, limiting itself to the promulgation of laws strictly necessary for its good functioning, thus facilitating the return to a constitutional regime by popular consent.

(e) Give preferential treatment to laws promoting the start and development of an electoral process culminating in the designation of constitutional officials.

It is the understanding of this association that this is the only solution to save Cuba from chaos at this dramatic hour of its existence. Conscious, as we are, that we lack the power to remove the regime by force, we urge our citizenry to resist oppression by uniting closely and by exercising the rights that the constitution grants to free men everywhere.

MEMORANDUM TO THE MEMBERS OF THE U.S. CONGRESS FROM THE CUBAN CONGRESSMEN IN EXILE

1. The undersigned, former members of the Cuban Congress, democratically elected before the military coup of March 10, 1952, have the honor to address the Members of the U.S. Congress in order to inform them about some aspects of the current state of relations between their two countries and, particularly, about certain facts and feelings that are impairing these relations.

2. There is at present a widespread belief in Cuba that the U.S. Government is supporting Batista's ruthless dictatorship in contradiction to the repeatedly declared American policy in favor of world freedom and democracy. This belief is buttressing Batista's dictatorship, prolonging the terrible civil war now ravaging the country and seriously impairing the prestige and good will of the United States in Cuba.

3. The generalized Cuban belief in the United States support to Batista is based on the following facts:

(a) The great zeal in the application of the Neutrality Act against anti-Batista exiles and the unnecessarily rude treatment applied to them, as shown by the recent (February 14, 1958) handcuffing of Dr. Carlos Prio Socarras, former constitutional President of Cuba, deposed by Batista;

(b) The public demonstrations of friendship from the U.S. Army to the Cuban Army, as shown by the bestowal of one of the highest U.S. military decorations to the chief of the Cuban Air Force (November 1957) shortly after Colonel (now General) Tabernilla had ordered and led the bombardment and strafing of the open city of Cienfuegos (September 5, 1957) and the widely publicized praise lavished upon Batista by General Shepherd, Chairman of the Inter-American Defense Board (December 1957);

(c) The continuous shipments of arms to Batista, supplied freely or almost freely under the Mutual Defense Assistance Agreement of March 7, 1952, in spite of the openly known fact that Batista is using these arms to crush, and not defend, democracy in the Western Hemisphere, contradicting the purpose of the agreement and of the U.S. acts which authorized it and which supply the funds with which these shipments are financed; and

(d) The maintenance of a U.S. Army mission in Cuba that is giving the Cuban Army technical advice on the strategy and tactics of the current warfare against the Cuban people, in spite of the fact that article 5 of the Army Mission Agreement of August 28, 1951, clearly stipulates that the agreement "will be subject to cancellation at the initiative of Government of the United States or of the Government of Cuba, at any time, when any one of the two governments finds itself involved in internal or external hostilities" (the quote is a translation of the Spanish text).

4. The undersigned consider that it is not improper for them to inform their U.S. colleagues of the above-mentioned facts that may be of interest to them because of their bearing on the foreign policy of the United States, on the current world struggle for freedom and democracy, on the American prestige and good will abroad and on the welfare of one of the three closest neighbors of the United States. The undersigned also consider that it is not improper for them to request the moral support of their U.S. colleagues for their noble cause and hope that this information and this request of sympathy will be thus interpreted by the U.S. Senators and Congressmen and not construed as an attempt to interfere in their affairs or influence their conduct.

5. If any U.S. Senator or Congressman would like to obtain additional information on the facts described in this memorandum, the undersigned would be pleased to supply it to them, either in writing or personally, going to Washington if necessary or desirable. Requests for additional information or personal contact should be sent to: Dr. Lincoln Rodon, 5121 Alton Road, Miami Beach, Fla.

ANNEX TO THE MEMORANDUM

1. For those Members of the United States Congress that may not be familiar with recent Cuban developments, a brief outline of the origins and evolution of Batista's dictatorship follows.

2. On March 10, 1952, 82 days before the scheduled presidential elections in which he himself was a candidate supported by a small minority, Fulgencio Batista led a military coup, making himself chief of state in charge of organizing and directing the executive and legislative branches of government and assuming all their functions. Following the coup, Batista suspended the constitution, prevented Congress from meeting, actually shooting the capitol building when Congress tried to meet, prevailed over the courts, reorganized the army, navy, and police forces, dissolved the political parties and canceled the presidential elections scheduled for June 1, 1952.

3. Two and a half years after the coup, on November 1, 1954, Batista held rigged elections in which he was elected President. The elections were not only rigged but unilateral, Batista being the only candidate. All the opposition parties but one, abstained; and the one that did not abstain withdrew a few days before the election, owing to the violence and fraud used against it. Even members of the parties supporting Batista admitted publicly that there had been frauds and violence in the November 1954 elections.

4. Batista continues in power and his regime continues to have the same dictatorial nature that it has had from its inception. The constitution was nominally reestablished after the 1954 elections, but its basic rights are continually being suspended and martial law declared. Furthermore, with or without martial law, Batista has violated all political freedoms and human rights; imprisoning, torturing, and assassinating his political enemies with utter ignorance of the courts.

5. Batista had sabotaged all the efforts made by prominent Cuban citizens and institutions in favor of a peaceful and dignified settlement of Cuba's problems. In March 1956, the great Cuban patriot and elder statesman, Dr. Cosme de la Torriente, President of the General Assembly of the League of Nations, invited delegates from Batista's and opposition parties to seat together and discuss a solution. The meeting raised great hopes but was broken by Batista's delegates on a point of procedure. The failure of the negotiations closed the door to peaceful solutions and lit the fire that has been ravaging Cuba since then; few weeks after the meeting broke a group of army officers revolted, led by Col. Ramon Barquin, Cuban member of the Inter-American Defense Board and in successive months rebellion flamed in Matanzas and Santiago de Cuba; Fidel Castro landed and started its successful and ever growing guerrilla warfare, in Oriente; the presidential palace in Havana was attacked and almost taken; the Corinthia expedition landed in the northern coast of Oriente Province; the navy garrison of Cienfuegos uprose and occupied the city, that was later unmercifully bombarded by Batista's air force; several plots were discovered in the army, navy, and air force and Havana police; strong guerrillas began to operate in the central part of the island and Castro's men beat the army repeatedly and spread all throughout Oriente's Province. Simultaneously with these events, a wave of sabotage against canefields, sugar mills, sugar warehouses, tobacco warehouses, manufacturing plants, hotels, movie houses, public buildings, trains, and buses has been rising in tempo up to its current volume: At present, all schools are closed, trains do not circulate by night, movie houses and stores are empty, insurance premiums have risen twentyfold and each week costs the country hundreds of human lives and several million dollars.

6. It is not the purpose of this memorandum to describe Batista's terror or to enumerate its thousands of victims, which include women, children less than 15 years of age, students, workers, farmers, merchants, including two presidents of the National Students Federation, physicians, lawyers, and congressmen. Two fellow congressmen have fallen victim of Batista: Dr. Menelao Mora, member of the house of representatives for the Cuban Revolutionary Party (Autentico), killed while valiantly fighting in the attack on the Presidential Palace, and Dr. Pelayo Cuervo, senator for the party of the Cuban people (Ortodoxo) and its president and leader in the senate, arrested by members of the police forces and assassinated in the outskirts of Havana on March 13, 1957, under the direct orders of Dictator Batista.

7. Following a standard practice of Latin American dictators, Batista is at present trying to perpetuate himself in power by electing a puppet successor. Elections for this purpose were scheduled for the forthcoming June 1 and have been now postponed, owing to the current state of civil war, for November 3 of this year. The electoral plans are supported by Batista's men and some so-called opposition parties, but public opinion repudiates them as a fraud. On February 28, 1958, Cardinal Arteaga and all the archbishops and bishops of Cuba addressed the country requesting the formation of a government of national union, implicitly asking Batista to step aside. On March 15, the national colleges (associations) of lawyers, medical doctors, civil engineers, electrical engineers, agronomical engineers, mechanical engineers, architects, doctors in philosophy and literature, doctors in political and economic sciences, teachers, pharmacists, public accountants, dentists, veterinarians, chemists and sugar chemists; the Federation of Catholic Youth, the Cuban Council of Evangelical Churches, the Supreme Council Grade 33 of Freemasons, the women's club, and Lions Club, and 18 other national organizations signed a petition for Batista's resignation, for the sake of peace and freedom, in a momentous and historical document. These utterly unusual steps taken by the Catholic and Evangelical Churches and by nonpolitical organizations that together represent the whole of Cuba's learned middle class show the state of desperation that the Cuban society has reached and announces the new dawn of democracy in Cuba.

SPEECH BY DR. MANUEL BISBE

A paragraph of the speech made by Dr. Manuel Bisbe, president of the Cuban Peoples Party (Ortodoxo), in the meeting held in the Flagler Theater of Miami on the 16th of March 1958, honoring the memory of Dr. Pelayo Cuervo Navarro in the first anniversary of his death. In his speech Dr. Manuel Bisbe raises the issue of a revision of the Latin American policy of the State Department.

"The dictatorship of Batista is in its last stages. It will fall as fell the dictatorships of Rojas Pinilla in Colombia and of Perez Jimenez in Venezuela. The America of Bolivar, of Juarez, and of Marti will be free as is the America of Washington. But what hurts us is the support that is being given to dictators, and that arms sold to them for the defense of the hemisphere against the Communist danger, are used instead against the people. What hurts us is that a plan of general elections be supported despite facts that have proved that we were right and that Ambassador Smith was wrong. Batista cannot govern with a free press, and if he establishes censorship he cannot maintain order either. Let us go toward a democratic Latin America. Yet in the face of the grave situation of disorder that prevails in Cuba, how can the State Department think that general elections can be called notwithstanding the shameful collaboration that a few politicians of the so-called opposition are lending to the infamous comedy of general elections? The people of our America, with the support of decent army officers who are not willing to use their arms against democracy but to place them at its service, are helping to lay the foundations of a new era of freedom in our sister republics. Let Washington rectify its policy. You cannot hurt people and expect them to trust you afterward. Let the Americas be democratic, and if strength is made use of, let it be against dictatorships, and never against democracy, for I do not admit in the inter-American relationships any other attitude than to isolate dictatorial government, because the time has come that governments understand, as long ago our peoples have understood, that the blow stricken to democracy in any of our brother countries is a mortal blow to the very heart of our America."

BATISTA BACKED BY COMMUNISTS

(Extension of Remarks of Hon. ADAM C. POWELL, JR., of New York, in the House of Representatives, Monday, May 12, 1958)

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

"BATISTA BACKED BY COMMUNISTS

"My name is Jack A. Ossorio. My home address is 2028 Southwest 57th Court, Miami, Fla. I was born at Manzanillo, Province of Oriente, Cuba, of American and Cuban parents. I acquired American citizenship by birth abroad of an American parent (my father). I am registered at the American Embassy, Havana, Cuba.

"I came to the United States in 1937 to go to school. I attended Miami Senior High School, the University of Miami, and the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, Boston, where I received my master's degree. I served 3½ years in the United States Air Corps during the war and was honorably discharged.

"I have worked for several Miami radio stations, the General Electric Co., International General Electric Co., the North Dakota Research Foundation, and smaller companies. In 1954 the United States Department of State sent me to Honduras for a year.

"I am a specialist in inter-American affairs, a bilingual journalist, and a professor of English for foreigners. I am interested in Latin American affairs because I was born in that region, where my father is a Presbyterian missionary (in Cuba). I appear voluntarily before this committee because I have, for a long time, carried on a one-man fight against despotism in the Americas, believing that dictatorships are anachronistic and undesirable in our hemisphere. My main concern this time will be with the present regime in Cuba. I hope to convince you that aid to any dictatorship, and especially Batista's, gives us a black eye internationally.

"Dictator Batista and the Communist Party

"Gen. Fulgencio Batista, of Cuba, is like a chameleon: he changes color to suit his surroundings. In the year 1940 he allied himself with the Communists and was elected President of Cuba on the official Communist ticket, as the head of a coalition.

"Exhibit 1 shows the hammer and sickle and the Communist Party's promise to divide the land among farmers. One of the slogans at this time was 'Cuba Out of the Imperialistic War.'

"Exhibit 2 is a photo which shows Bastista and Cuba's most famous Communists: Juan Marinello, far left, and the colored man in the back, Garcia Agüero.

"Exhibit 3 shows Batista with the famous Communist leader Lombardo Toledano, and Lazaro Peña, the former secretary general of the Cuban Workers' Federation.

"Exhibit 4 shows Batista with the principal Cuban Communists.

"Exhibit 5 shows a picture of Communist Marinello, running for mayor of Havana, and Batista running for President. This was taken from the Communist newspaper Hoy, which Batista always allowed to circulate freely.

"Exhibit 6 is the statement made once by General Batista that the Communist Party exercised a democratic function in Cuba.

"Exhibit 7, dated July 1, 1953, was taken from the newspaper Prensa Libre. The news item reports that the CTC (Cuban Workers' Federation) had just made a pact with the Communists. The secretary general of the Tobacco Federation makes the statement that the pact with the Communists strengthens the workers' movement.

"Exhibit 8 is a copy of the official organ of the University Students' Federation, containing photographs of some of the dramatic events which have taken place in Cuba lately.

"Exhibit 9 is a publication by Cuban doctors denouncing Batista as an assassin. Included is a photostatic copy from the World Medical Convention, charging Batista with killing, torturing, and molesting doctors and patients. On the last page is a photograph of the American military mission: American Colonels Isaacson, Keller, and Stewart, and Commandants Cameron and Blackwell, when Tabernilla, Jr., received an American decoration. Tabernilla is the Cuban officer who bombed the open city of Cienfuegos with American military aid.

"Exhibit 10 is a report written by Carlos Hevia, a former President of Cuba and minister of state. This is a well-documented account of the intimate connections Batista has always had with the Communists. On page 6 we read the following significant paragraphs:

" 'Since Batista staged this coup d'etat of March 10, 1952, the Communist newspaper Hoy had had free circulation in Cuba, and big trucks carrying the newspaper throughout the island. And he is, in an undercover way, helping the Communists to gain once more control of the labor movement of Cuba. At the same time, democratic radio commentators are silenced, broadcasting stations closed, newspaper commentators and writers jailed and brutally beaten.

" 'While Batista has forbidden public gatherings, yet the Communists have been permitted to have large meetings. All Communist leaders are in Cuba without the Government harassing them in the least; most of them recently returned from Russia, arriving freely by plane at the airport.

" 'Batista has been in conversations with the Communists so that the so-called anti-Communist law that he has claimed to be preparing will finally be drafted in such a manner that it could be used against those who oppose him and favor democracy, and not against the Communists.

" 'When Batista organized his present party, PAU, about 1949, the Communists helped him; and thousands of them, including some of the best organizers, joined the new party; and these same Communists and their bosses are again gaining control of important positions in the Government and in the labor movement of Cuba.'

"Batista finally established an organization to repress Communists, but it is interesting to note that no Communist has ever been jailed and no restrictions have been placed on Communists. The organization has been used solely, however, to silence, jail, torture, and kill democratic Cubans.

"To the question, Is Batista a Communist? I would answer that he is both a Communist sympathizer and a Fascist. His communistic inclinations and indoctrination have been shown in his actions as dictator. For example, he has not prosecuted any Communist, but has placed them in important posts; he accuses his enemies of being Communists, so that in essence he is allied to communism, but poses to the contrary; he does not respect any fundamental freedom; he does not believe in freedom of the press; he discarded a democratic government and a constitution; he assumed the powers of Congress; he has made a mockery of judiciary power; he has not respected Cuban womanhood; last and most important, he has stolen millions (he probably has $200 million), exiled hundreds, tortured and killed thousands, mostly young men—the hope of Cuba.

"Batista is, more than a Communist or a Fascist, a political adventurer. He would sell out to Moscow tomorrow, if he stood to gain by it. He is typical of the man who would sell his own mother to get what he wants.

"Foreign espionage in Miami

"Any assistance given to dictators hurts the people who suffer under them and hurts us also. Take the matter of espionage.

"The city of Miami, Fla., is a hotbed of foreign espionage. There are any number of agents here paid by Batista, but without the knowledge of the Justice Department. Recently, when a briefcase was snatched from the Cuban consul, the names of spies were divulged. One of them is reported to have over $100,000 in the bank and, if so, probably paid no income taxes on it.

"What this amounts to is that a representative of a foreign government is really the head of a large and well-organized spy system, which spends large sums of money to spy on both foreign and American nationals.

"Certainly any aid given to Cuba, Santo Domingo, Nicaragua, or Paraguay is a definite contribution to the forces of tyranny in the Americas. For the great American democracy to play the dangerous game of fooling around with Fascist despots is to open the door to communism in the Americas, not to mention other similar evils.

"The State Department and Cuba

"As you consider aid under the Mutual Security Act of 1958, you should look into the mistaken, prototalitarian, criminal policy being followed by Secretary Dulles and Under Secretary for Latin American Affairs Roy Rubottom.

"The Mutual Defense Assistance Agreement was signed between the United States and Cuba at Habana on March 7, 1952, and its original purpose was 'to assist any American state subjected to an armed attack and to act together for the common defense and for the maintenance of the peace and security of the Western Hemisphere.'

"According to article I, paragraph 2, the Government of Cuba undertakes to make effective use of assistance received from the Government of the United States of America pursuant to this agreement for the purpose of implementing defense plans, accepted by the two Governments, under which the two Governments will participate in missions important to the defense of the Western Hemisphere, and will not, without the prior agreement of the Government of the United States of America, devote such assistance to purposes other than those for which it was furnished.'

"Now, such assistance has been used, over and over again, against the defenseless people of Cuba, and not for hemispheric defense, with the tacit consent of the United States Department of State. The worst instance to date of these violations was the inhuman attack against the open city of Cienfuegos, where tanks and airplanes put down by force the uprising of September 5, 1957. These were arms supplied to Batista by the United States Government in conformity with the provisions of the Mutual Defense Assistance Agreement for the defense of the Western Hemisphere. Did the Government of Cuba obtain the prior agreement of our Government?

"Certainly, the agreement has not been denounced. So, as many Cubans see it, if Russia raped Hungary, then the United States State and Defense Departments are raping Cuba. Even in India people are saying so. Is this the kind of aid the Mutual Security Act encompasses?

"Another sore spot is the agreement between the Government of the United States of America and Cuba, providing for the services of a United States Army mission to Cuba. Title I, article 1, declares that 'the purpose of this mission is to cooperate with the chief of staff of the Army of the Republic of Cuba and the Cuban Army. Officers of the mission will act, as required by the chief of staff of the Army of the Republic of Cuba, as tactical and technical advisers to the Cuban Army.'

"The people of Cuba see in such a provision a perfect excuse for the United States Army to intervene in favor of Batista. Thus the United States is taking sides, in the civil war now raging in Cuba, against the people of Cuba, for Batista is opposed by over 90 percent of the Cuban people. The State Department knows that the American mission is training Cuban officers to fight the young people of Cuba, who are fighting the tyrant on unequal terms. At any rate, the mission is only beginning ill will for Americans.

"Jules Dubois, writing in the Chicago Tribune, March 21, 1958, stated: 'Cuban public opinion, although throttled by the most severe censorship ever exercised by Batista, is outspoken against the United States. The people, from the leaders of the civic, religious, professional, and social institutions who demanded Batista resign, to the students, accuse the United States of pursuing a policy to support a dictator and lose the friendship of a nation.

" 'Smith (ambassador) is being branded as worse than his predecessor, Arthur Gardner. Yet when he first arrived he was a hero to the Cuban people and managed to erase the animosity that had been engendered by Gardner.

" 'Cubans, more than 90 percent of whom are trying to oust Batista, insist that the latter is being retained in office by the United States. When it is explained to them that the policy of our State Department is one of correctness and neutrality in this civil war, they reply: "Yes, we know. You Americans are very correct and very neutral on the side of Batista." '

"By paragraph b, article 4, of the Army mission agreement, the United States Government may recall the entire mission in the public interest of the United States of America. Since the State Department has not done so, the conclusion is that it considers it a wise policy not to recall the mission.

"But article 5 really shows how criminally negligent the men in the State Department are. Article 5 clearly states that 'this agreement is subject to cancellation upon the initiative of either the Government of the United States of America or the Government of the Republic of Cuba at any time during a period when either government is involved in domestic or foreign hostilities.'

"Since Cuba is involved in a civil war and since the men at the Department of State have ignored such a provision, it can only mean that they wish to keep Batista and his Gestapolike henchmen in power. Is this what the Mutual Security Act contemplates?

"The conclusion is obvious. While we continue to send arms to Batista and train his men, we are very careful to enforce our neutrality laws, thus depriving the people of Cuba of the help they desperately need to get rid of the monster. No wonder democrats everywhere feel that we are intervening in Cuba directly, in favor of Batista and against the best interests of 6 million long-suffering Cubans, for our tanks and jets have kept Batista in power during 6 long, painful years.

"We are asking for trouble. Is there not a possibility that, as a desperate reaction to so much injustice and oppression, some postdictatorship government may accuse us, before the United Nations, of complicity in genocide or extermination of a national group as a planned move? Would that not be very embarrassing, after the rape of Hungary?

"Latin American dictatorships

"As long as despotic regimes continue to flourish in Latin America, there will be no peace, no security, no solidarity in our continent. Democratic governments, elected by the people in honest elections, must replace the present dictatorships, which exist only through force and fraud.

"All American dictators hide behind a false front of material progress, blood, tears, poverty, and terror.

"The whole world blames our Department of State for the prevalence and continuance of Fascist dictatorships in Cuba, Nicaragua, Santo Domingo, and Paraguay. The argument advanced to explain our strange behavior is that we wish to protect our interests and the most expedient way to do it is through caudillos or strong men. It is unfortunately true that our Ambassadors too often have left the impression that we approve of and sympathize with unpopular regimes.

"Our interests are best protected by representative governments, not by ambitious, ruthless dictators. The adulator, the servile ruler is not our best friend. On the contrary, when we help our neighbors to get rid of oppressors, we protect our interests and secure peace and happiness for our continent.

"In conclusion

"If I could get only one thing across to this august committee, it would be this: No aid should ever be given to any government which is not the result of popular consent, as expressed through entirely free elections. No aid should ever contribute to the strength, permanency, or encouragement of a despotic government.

"We are the undisputed world leaders against totalitarianism, but we appear to have adopted a dual policy, namely, one for Communist nations and one for American despots. Democracy and freedom are inseparable, however.

"Specially here in this hemisphere, where American conduct is watched closely by the whole world to test our real intentions, the wealth of Americans must not be spent on those who enslave our brothers. It is in our best interests to help those who think and act like we do. Latin Americans do not need guns. They need, however, technical aid, loans, and encouragement in their democratic aspirations.

"To this effect, I would recommend, as a great contribution, the identical resolutions introduced in the Senate and the House by the distinguished legislators, Senator WAYNE MORSE, and Representative CHARLES O. PORTER, of Oregon. The resolutions make a specific reference to article 5(d) of the O.A.S. charter, which states, in part, that 'the solidarity of the American States and the high aims which are sought through it require the political organization of those states on the basis of the effective exercise of representative democracy.'

"United States aid, given only to democratic governments, will make us a better people and will make this a better world in which to live, that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from this earth."

"Tortures under Batista

"Tortures under the ruthless, bloodthirsty dictatorship of Batista are commonplace. His Fascist, pro-Communist regime has not even respected Catholic priests, even though that is the religion professed by the majority of Cubans. Witness the torture of Rev. Father Ramon O'Farrill, now a Miami exile, who was hit with the butt of a rifle squarely on an ear and his hearing impaired.

"Exhibit 11 is a clipping from the Chicago Daily Tribune, which tells of the shooting of a Catholic young man studying for the priesthood. His body was found riddled by 36 bullets (probably supplied by the Mutual Security Act). He was shot to death despite the plea from the Roman Catholic clergy, who tried to save his life. The papal nuncio and Cardinal Arteaga had been given assurances that his life would be saved, but the word of gangsters can never be trusted.

"There is a new case of torture, however. In the United States right now is a 50-year-old schoolteacher who knows what despotism means. After her unbelievable torture, her life was threatened because she dared to denounce Batista's regime of terror. Through a priest she knew, and the papal nuncio, she was able to obtain political asylum in a foreign embassy and leave Cuba. In an interview for the American Daily, a Spanish newspaper, she had this to say:

" 'Batista's police agents broke into my home. They were obsessed by the idea that I knew where arms were hidden. Other decent Cuban women have suffered before what I went through. That's why I told everything, in spite of the threats against my life if I spoke the truth about the terrible things that happened to me.

" 'I am 50 years old, and I have 2 daughters, 19 and 17, and a boy 15 years old. I am a teacher and a practicing Catholic. In the early morning of February 24, at exactly 5 o'clock, a group of men, armed with submachineguns, entered my home and made me put on my clothes in their presence. They took me to the 12th district police station. They robbed me of $25 in cash and an expensive gold watch.

" 'Taken before a captain by the name of Sosa, he hit me right in the face, throwing me to the floor. Nothing stopped them, not even my age or sex or the fact that I was a mother. What happened in that hell on earth for 3 long, horrible days still seems like a nightmare.

" 'I was savagely struck and whipped. They repeated every few minutes that they would kill me if I didn't tell them where the arms were. They pulled my hair and ears. Modesty prevents me from repeating the dirty remarks and insults that were thrown at me by young men who could have been my sons.

" 'Only my faith in God, my deep belief in divine grace, and my Catholic faith permitted me to endure stoically the pain and the affront. A Colombian citizen was savagely tortured in my presence and his ear torn off by blows. The image of the Saviour on the cross supplied me with spiritual light to stand the torture.

" 'While they were beating me, they kept shouting: "Talk, you Communist bitch." When I resented the remark and told them that they could only accuse me of being a Catholic, they hit me again and shouted: "All you Catholics are worse than the Communists."

" 'To hide the facts is to allow the occurrence of further crimes. If God chose me to live and denounce this infamy, I hope it will not be in vain. The whole truth must be told that everyone may know how low Cuba has sunk under Batista: They stuck a steel pipe through my vagina, while shouting: "Talk, you old bitch, we are going to perforate you".'

"Certainly, as you consider aid to the Government of Cuba, now ruled by gangster elements, you must keep in mind how that aid will be used against the people of Cuba and against their democratic aspirations."

"(By Rev. Father Ramon O'Farrill, who was brutally beaten in Habana)

"Aggressions against the Catholic Church

"On February 20 of this year a bulletin issued by the Cuban Army was published in all the newspapers which, like all its official dispatches, never reports the true facts on the people's struggle against the dictatorship. The said bulletin terms a good story my statements to the foreign press concerning the tortures I underwent during 4 days at the hands of Batista's repressive forces, and it calls rebellious propaganda the silence I kept for a year before releasing the facts.

"All the people of Cuba know, and especially those in Habana, how I was unmercifully beaten by policemen under the dreadful Captain Ventura (now a commandant). After the attack, I was taken to the police station, where I remained, hurt and incommunicado, 4 days, while Batista's henchmen negotiated my release. The one condition they demanded, complete silence of the church, was the same one asked previously when His Eminence Cardinal Arteaga was attacked my members of the police force.

"On the fourth day I was delivered by high police officers to members of the church, Msgr. Arcadio Marina and Raul del Valle, both of whom, under police threats, promised to keep silent and to get me out of the country without letting anyone, and especially Cuban Catholics, know that a priest had been beaten up.

"As a Catholic clergyman, I had to accept the discipline of my church. I was moved to an ecclesiastical residence in Canada, where I was held practically incommunicado for a year, under orders from the Batista police to the Catholic church. Later the bishop of Cienfuegos authorized my transfer to Miami, Fla.

"I challenge publicly the chief of staff of the Cuban Army to deny the following aggressions committed against the Catholic church, which remain as proofs of our long calvary:

"1. July 1953: Aggression to His Eminence Cardinal Arteaga by policemen who tried to seize from him the proofs in his possession of crimes committed by the armed forces.

"2. Catholic meeting at Guanajay stopped violently by the army with bullets. The leaders were insulted and taken to army headquarters.

"3. The office of the Catholic youth and the university Catholic home raided repeatedly and everyone taken to police headquarters.

"4. Attack on the premises of the Catholic young workers; several members beaten and imprisoned.

"5. June 1956. Assault on the Arroyo Arenas Church and destruction of its doors.

"6. Rev. Father Leon Lemus exiled from the country after his brother was assassinated.

"7. November 30, 1956. The cathedral at Santiago de Cuba machinegunned by the armed forces.

"8. The archbishopric at Santiago searched and the archbishop insulted.

"9. July 1957. The temporary priest at the Cathedral of Our Holy Church, Santiago, insulted.

"10. The Reverend Father Maximiliano Perez of Managua taken in custody several times, and his sister mistreated by police.

11. Rev. Father Manuel Martin, of Santa Isabel de las Lajas, detained during a mass (typical case of intrusion upon freedom of worship).

"12. Constant attacks against the church and priests, including defamations, scandals, and profanations, from the pages of the Government newspaper Time, in Cuba, owned by the Communist gangster, Rolando Masferrer, Batista's right-hand man.

"13. Rene Fraga, leader of Catholic Action and teacher, assassinated at Matanzas. The bishop marched at the front of the cortege until it was broken up by police bullets.

"14. Mass at Vedado parochial church, in suffrage for the soul of murdered student leader, halted.

"15. 1957. Two young fathers from Victoria de las Tunas, accused of taking in some Cubans whose lives were in danger, exiled from the country.

"16. Ramon Rodriguez, member of Catholic Youth, assassinated.

"17. 1957. Church at Jaguey Grande emptied to stop a mass in suffrage for the souls of students killed. The faithful then kneeled at the park outside.

"18. 1957. Church of San Francisco, Santiago, assaulted and robbed by gangsters under Masferrer (Batista's right-hand man).

"19. Rev. Father Jorge Bez Chabebe and Father Rivas of Catholic Action, detained.

"20. March 1958. Protest by the president of the diocesan council at Santiago of the disappearance of a member of the group Sacred Heart of Jesus.

"As it can be seen, Batista's dictatorship, like all other American dictatorships, has engaged in aggression and outrages against the Catholic Church because she is the great defender of the human rights and the democratic principles to which all free peoples are entitled."

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWELL. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, from what the gentleman from New York said about blood baths by these dictators, I assume then that he is equally opposed to the executions that have been taking place by Castro.

Mr. POWELL. I am not opposed to any executions that take place before courts of justice in the presence of a free press. And that is what is happening in Cuba now. I am opposed to the 20,000 casualties that took place under Batista, without the press being allowed there, and with censorship, and without any courts of justice.

Mr. SCHERER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the executions that have been taking place in the last few weeks since Castro has come into power have all been as the result of court trials?

Mr. POWELL. Every one of them has been. And it was pointed out by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PORTER], earlier in this session, we have American correspondents on the scene witnessing what has been taking place. They could not do that in the case of the Batista blood baths. These correspondents have not reported back to the contrary.

Mr. SCHERER. I am sorry that the gentleman reads the record differently from the way I do.

Mr. POWELL. I am going to Cuba this weekend, and if I find anything contrary to what I have said, I shall be glad to come back here and report what I have seen there, objectively.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to ask the gentleman this question. He said that Mr. Betancourt of Venezuela said that no assistance or no aid should be given to any country which does not have free elections.

Mr. POWELL. No; he said that there should be no admission of any country to the Organization of American States that does not have democratic elections.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman presume that Fidel Castro proposes to hold elections at any time in the near future?

Mr. POWELL. Eighteen months.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman think that this ought to go on for 18 months?

Mr. POWELL. I think he is better equipped to judge that situation than I am, but after 20 years of dictatorship, it may not be too long.

Mr. SPRINGER. The acid test of democracy in a country is where you have democratic elections.

Mr. POWELL. That is true. We kept Italy and Germany from having democratic elections for a long time until we felt that they were ready to have them.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not intend to discuss the question of Germany and Italy at this time. But certainly the acid test is whether or not Castro is going to have free elections.

Mr. POWELL. That is correct.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is he going to have them after he has eliminated all of his opposition, which seems to be the purpose of the terror campaign which he is now carrying on? That is my honest belief. We are going to have to fight to end what I call vigilante lynchings in the worst western style.

Mr. POWELL. You cannot call a proceeding, where someone is tried before a court, in the presence of a free press, a vigilante lynching. We are quite familiar with what lynchings mean here in the United States.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would the gentleman be willing to go before a court-martial in this country merely because we happen to have a free press present?

Mr. POWELL. Yes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the gentleman would demand a civilian trial in accordance with the Constitution. That is what they are entitled to have in Cuba, instead of being cleaned up by a bunch of vengeful rebels who have now taken over the government. And that is what is taking place down there now. I think anyone will concede that that is what the situation is in Cuba at this time. I am going to reserve my opinion on Fidel Castro as to whether or not he is just another adventurer of the Batista type or whether he is a genuine patriot working in the best interests of Cuba. I shall reserve my opinion on that.

If it is true that these people are guilty he can delay these trials for another 30 days and try them in civilian courts, where they should be tried. If they are found guilty, I am sure punishment will be meted out to them.

Mr. POWELL. I agree with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. POWELL was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWELL. I yield to my colleague from Oregon, who has done such wonderful work in South America.

Mr. PORTER. I believe the gentleman is to be commended for bringing this information to the attention of the House. I also appreciate the remarks that have been made showing an interest on the other side. I agree that we are all going to be watching the events in Cuba with some interest.

As for this 18 months thought, that seems to be a long period, but I believe that Herbert Matthews, who is certainly a man who knows the situation, has written that it would be reasonable in view of the great revolution that has taken place in Cuba, and that it is going to take that long to stabilize. I think it has this danger, but I think that Mr. Matthews' opinion is worth listening to.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a memorandum from the Department of State, which I should like to read about the mission to Haiti. A number of marines, an advance group of five officers and four noncommissioned officers, is expected to depart next week. Eventually the mission may number around 50 officers and enlisted men. They will be sent down in echelons, with the last group to arrive in Haiti about midsummer.

The purpose is to assist in training the Haitian Army to make it more efficient and responsible. The authority is, as the gentleman said, the naval mission agreement signed December 24, 1958, of which I have seen no notice in the press, however.

As to this formal handshake doctrine, we have had an air mission and a small naval mission in Haiti for years, since 1949. These were concerned with training only a small part of the forces, about 10 percent. The remainder of the army, that part engaged in customary ground force activities, was without any U.S. training assistance. The purpose of the training mission, composed of U.S. Marine Corps personnel, is to assist the country of Haiti to solve the problem of a disorganized, demoralized, and undisciplined soldiery. Repeated shakeups in the officer corps and dismissals of senior officers before and after Duvalier took office, have deprived the army of much of its experienced leadership. The United States became keenly aware of the problem as a result of the Talamas case last year. The U.S. Marine Corps mission, therefore, is being sent to help fill a need for technical military, not police, training assistance. It should not be interpreted as a U.S. endorsement of President Duvalier's Government.

I should hope not. I hope the decision will be reconsidered.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. POWELL. The gentleman from Oregon has supported Duvalier. When 54 U.S. Marines walk up and down the streets of Port-au-Prince, and the good people of Haiti see them there, they are going to draw only one conclusion, and that is that the United States is backing up Duvalier.

Mr. PORTER. I fear the gentleman is right.

Mr. SANTANGELO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SANTANGELO. I wish to commend the gentleman from New York, whose district adjoins mine in the city of New York. I know there are many people of Cuban extraction in our districts. It appears to me it is ironical that my colleague from west Harlem has more contacts with Castro than our State Department. Since he is going down to Cuba this coming Saturday, I wish to urge him to bring to the attention of the freedom fighters of Cuba that their friends in America feel that they are discrediting their fight for freedom by these killings, and that if they should delay and give proper trials, even if those people then should be executed in due course, they would gain additional respect from the doubters in our country, who would gain more faith in them. I urge that on the gentleman from New York.

Mr. POWELL. I agree with that. I shall so do.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWELL. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. I should like to ask my distinguished colleague whether I was correct in the inference I seemed to get from his remarks that the United States ought to pick and choose between dictators and democratic governments in carrying on relations in the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. POWELL. It is my feeling that military assistance should not be given by our Government to any land that has a dictator.

Mr. JUDD. Even though the geography of that country is perhaps such that it is vitally important, for example, to the protection of certain vital interests such as the Panama Canal?

Mr. POWELL. Panama has a democratic government, and we have a base there.

Mr. JUDD. But other countries could control the approaches to it. If hostile to us, great difficulties would be presented. Does not the gentleman feel that if we get into the business of defining and determining just who is and who is not a dictator, we are likely to be in a lot more trouble than we are in now perhaps?

Mr. POWELL. I do not think we will. I think that one thing Latin America wants us to do—and my contacts there are quite varied just as are the contacts of our colleague, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PORTER]—as I was saying, one thing that Latin America wants us to do is to define some kind of policy to keep them from believing that this country is an asylum for dicators and that we will support dictators with our arms.

Mr. MORRIS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWELL. I yield.

Mr. MORRIS of Oklahoma. I want to ask the gentleman, if he can, to tell us just what kind of trials these are. Are they trials by jury? Does the accused have the right to counsel?

Mr. POWELL. The accused has a right to counsel, which is usually one military and one civilian, as I get it from our own newspapermen on the scene.

Mr. MORRIS of Oklahoma. But they are not trials by jury?

Mr. POWELL. They are not trials by jury.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. POWELL. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. I do not have time to develop this now, but I will later with the consent of the House. Originally I had the same feeling as the gentleman about dictator governments. As late as last June we had hearings on the matter before the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The whole story made clear to most of us, I think, that when we got into the business playing God in the Western Hemisphere, trying to decide which is a dictatorship that we will not deal with, and which is a borderline case and so on, the complications and difficulties had been greater in the past and were likely to be greater in the future than they are at present. We have tried the gentleman's proposal a few times. That was the basic reason why in 1933 at the Montevideo Conference, I think it was, the whole group of Western Hemisphere states agreed on a policy of nonintervention in the internal affairs of other countries. We heard testimony that in 1945 the Foreign Minister of Uruguay made a proposal that whenever one of these revolutions comes along or a dictator government exists that denies human rights, it endangers peace for others, and therefore the Organization of American States should consider it together and decide on multilateral action—even multilateral intervention. All would decide and would take action as a body. We supported the proposal completely. It would enable corrective action to be taken by all and no one could accuse us of Yankee imperialism or intervention. But many of the Latin American countries themselves would not agree to it and the idea died. Dr. Ponce, President of Ecuador, who has been all through plenty of violent political episodes in his country which is now in its third period of constitutional government, said in a speech last summer:

To say, as John Foster Dulles, Secretary of State of the United States, just did, that North America would violate the basic doctrine of nonintervention in the Western Hemisphere if anything is done to condemn dictatorships or de facto regimes, is to clearly demonstrate recognition of the American reality.

President Ponce of Ecuador is saying that we should adhere to our basic policy of nonintervention as the best way to promote democracy and peace in the hemisphere.

Mr. POWELL. The gentleman knows we are intervening when we send arms and military men and intervening in support of dictatorships.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

MAXIMUM EMPLOYMENT AND PRODUCTION WITHOUT INFLATION: STRENGTHENING THE EMPLOYMENT ACT OF 1946

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentlemen from Wisconsin [Mr. REUSS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, our most imperative domestic task is to bring to realization the goals of the Employment Act of 1946: maximum employment and production, without inflation. In order to improve the machinery of the act for reaching these goals, I have today introduced H.R. 2561, which would clarify the President's responsibilities on monetary policy, and would bring to bear an informed public opinion on price and wage increases which threaten economic stability. An identical bill is being introduced in the other body by Senator JOSEPH CLARK, of Pennsylvania.

A glance at America's economic record for 1958 shows that we have not been achieving the goals of maximum employment, production and purchasing power.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND INFLATION

About 6 percent of the civilian labor force is still unemployed, although industrial activity has recovered substantially from the recession lows. In the first half of 1958, instead of achieving maximum production, we lost some $50 billion of potential product. In terms of current prices, we barely managed to attain the 1957 rate of output in the fourth quarter of 1958. And 1957 is itself an inadequate base. Much of the apparent increase in output in 1957 over 1956 was due to price inflation. Moreover, added industrial capacity since 1957 requires that we achieve a higher rate of activity if we are to use the existing idle capacity.

Despite the high level of unemployment throughout 1958 and the existence of idle industrial capacity, we were not able to maintain price stability. Following a trend established in 1956 and 1957, there continued, even in the recession months of early 1958, small but persistent increases in both wholesale and consumer prices. Although a relative stability in the indexes has been maintained in the past few months, the overall figures conceal the continued rise of certain components, particularly rises in the prices of manufactured goods.

If the administration's economic policies for 1959 are no wiser than those for 1958, 1959 may see an inadequate recovery, accompanied by further price increases. We must, therefore, examine the Employment Act of 1946 to determine whether its machinery is adequate to achieve its goals of "maximum employment, production, and purchasing power."

CONSTRUING AWAY THE ACT

Our recent mediocre economic performance is due to the narrow interpretation by the President of the powers the act gives him in order to reach those goals. As he construes the act, it does not require him to do anything very meaningful about either recession or inflation. Under the administration view, he retires completely from the important field of monetary policy, which he leaves to the Federal Reserve; and he refuses even to let the light of publicity fall on proposed wage and price increases which threaten economic stability. As a result of this unduly narrow view of the act's anti-inflationary machinery, the President is hesitant to do anything meaningful about unemployment and loss of production, for fear that action toward these goals will add to the inflation. His state of the Union message, for example, failed even to mention the 4 million currently unemployed.

H.R. 2561 would sharpen the administration's duties under the Employment Act of 1946 in two important particulars:

1. MONETARY POLICY

The President, in carrying out his duties under the Employment Act, would be required under H.R. 2561 to take monetary and credit policies into account to the same extent as all other policies affecting employment, production and purchasing power. This would not mean, of course, that the President would be issuing recommendations on each change in the rediscount rate, or would direct the daily operations of the Open Market Committee, any more than he concerns himself with the day-to-day conduct of the many Federal agencies which are formally under his direct supervision. The monetary and credit policies with which he would concern himself are the big questions: the general direction of monetary policy as expansionary or restrictive; emphasis on certain of the tools available to the Federal Reserve as more suitable than others in accomplishing overall objectives; or the need for new legislation to extend the authority of the Federal Reserve System over additional financial institutions, to impose direct controls over consumer credit, or to set different limits to reserve requirements.

If the Federal Reserve Board or other agency directly responsible for the execution of monetary and credit policies disagreed with the President's program and recommendations, it could of course go its independent way. But the President would be required to "report such disagreement to the Congress, together with a statement from the disagreeing agency of its reasons."

LACK OF A COORDINATED PROGRAM

As the act is now construed by the President, he is not required to have any monetary policy at all, much less one that is coordinated with expenditure, tax, and other governmental policies. This defeats the very purpose of the act, which was to centralize in the President responsibility for coming forward with a coherent and coordinated program. The administration is thus able to escape an accounting when things go wrong.

Moreover, even more serious than the absence of a fixed Presidential responsibility for monetary policy is the lack of a coordinated overall economic program. If monetary policy is left out of the President's duties under the Employment Act, a coordinated economic program is impossible. While it is true that the Federal Reserve System, like other branches of the Federal Government, has an acknowledged responsibility to respect the goals of the Employment Act, it cannot very well act in accordance with an overall program if such a program does not exist.

DOES NOT IMPAIR INDEPENDENCE

Monetary policy is a vital part of any comprehensive economic program. Although by itself it may have limited value for achieving growth or stability, it can be an important adjunct to both expenditure and tax policy directed toward these goals. Conversely, the use of monetary policy outside the framework of a general economic policy can hamper or even endanger the attainment of growth and stability. For example, in 1957, when the Federal Reserve was applying anti-inflationary credit stringency, the administration was proposing the largest peacetime spending budget in history; and far from recommending increased taxes, the administration was continuing the 1954 tax reduction, including accelerated depreciation and the granting of rapid tax amortization certificates which were feeding the capital goods inflationary boom.

Requiring the President to make appropriate recommendations to the Federal Reserve in no way destroys the latter's independence. If the Federal Reserve does not agree with the President's recommendations, it can do as it pleases, reporting its reasons through the President to the Congress. Since the Federal Reserve makes a point of being the servant of Congress, it hardly seems out of order to require it to state its reasons to Congress when it acts contrary to the recommendations of the President.

2. WAGE-PRICE POLICY

Under the second provision of H.R. 2561, the Council of Economic Advisers, "in order to bring to bear an informed public opinion upon price and wage increases which appear to seriously threaten economic stability," would have the power and duty "to request persons proposing such price or wage increases to justify them at a public hearing as not in fact constituting such a threat." Moreover, "in cases where the Council deems it advisable, it may issue an advisory statement upon such justification."

The experience of 1957 and 1958 shows that, despite much unemployment and underuse of resources, strong industries such as steel and automobiles were able to push through continuing wage and price increases. These increases have serious effects on economic stability, not only because of their direct effects on the price level, but because they have a pace-setting character which influences a much larger area of the economy. And they are relatively invulnerable to general monetary and fiscal controls.

A THIRD SEAT AT THE BARGAINING TABLE

H.R. 2561 is concerned only with price or wage increases "which appear to seriously threaten economic stability." This would require action by the Council of Economic Advisers only in very important or pace-setting cases. In such cases, the union proposing the wage increase or the corporation proposing the price increase would be invited to state their reasons, at a public hearing, why their proposed action does not in fact threaten economic stability. The mere knowledge on the part of management and labor that they may be invited to justify price or wage action before a public body should encourage more consideration for the public interest in price stability. In a sense, the public will acquire at least some representation at the wage-bargaining and price-setting table. If a hearing is held, public opinion can be relied upon to have some effect upon the positions of the parties involved. Finally, the Council of Economic Advisers is authorized to issue a public "advisory statement" upon the justification for the proposed wage or price increase in cases where it is able to evolve useful criteria upon which to base such a statement. If the Council is unsure of its footing, it will forego an "advisory statement," and content itself with whatever moderating effect public opinion by itself may create.

This provision of H.R. 2561 in no sense involves price or wage control, since the industry or union is free to go its own way, even after a hearing and even in the face of a contrary "advisory statement" by the Council.

EXHORTATIONS AND ADMONITIONS

The President has repeatedly over the last 2 years exhorted labor and industry to avoid inflationary wage and price increases. Most recently, in the 1959 state of the Union message, he said:

We must encourage the self-discipline, the restraint necessary to curb the wage-price spiral.

The trouble with these admonitions is that no one pays much attention to them. Since neither labor nor management is asked to state its reasons in a specific case for the proposed wage or price increase, the public has no way of appraising the justification for the proposed increase. And there is not even a beginning to the evolution of a set of wage-price criteria which can best contribute to economic stability.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2561 would strengthen the machinery for attaining the Employment Act's goals of maximum employment, production and purchasing power by tempering excessive wage-price increases on the cost-push side, and by achieving a responsible monetary policy coordinated with tax, spending and other economic policies, on the demand-pull side.

CIVIL RIGHTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ADDONIZIO] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. ADDONIZIO. Mr. Speaker, I firmly and earnestly believe that this 1st session of the 86th Congress has an unyielding duty to strengthen the effect of those civil rights which are guaranteed in the American Constitution.

The 1st session of the 85th Congress ended a stalemate of over 80 years by passing the Civil Rights Act of 1957. We must continue to move forward—irresistibly and with purpose—toward true equality for all people, everywhere in the United States.

Throughout the history of the United States, we have worked to achieve the goal which our Founding Fathers recognized in the expression "that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights." A review of the past 50 years reveals many gains in the direction of a more comprehensive realization of the rights which our Constitution promises to all of our citizens regardless of their race or religion. Court decisions going back nearly 40 years and culminating in the school case have opened many doors. Administrative actions by Presidents Roosevelt, Truman, and Eisenhower have likewise eliminated many discriminations.

The 85th Congress passed a Civil Rights Act which is designed to give greater effect to the right-to-vote provision of the 15th amendment. This law gives the Attorney General the authority to intervene where individuals or groups are being illegally denied their right to vote. The Attorney General is now empowered to seek civil injunctions to restrain public officials or private citizens from attempting to interefere with the exercise of voting rights.

The passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1957 represents a substantial advance. But much remains to be accomplished. Any halt by Congress in the quest of progressively expanding the realm of liberty and justice under law will betray the principles of democracy and offend the conscience of the Nation.

The courts have declared that our Constitution entitles all of our citizens, regardless of race or religion, to certain rights. Among them are the rights to attend a nonsegregated public school, to enjoy equal opportunity to use public beaches, public golf courses, public parks, and other public facilities like restaurants, trains, buses, and trolleys. These are some of the rights which the courts have ruled as being guaranteed by the 14th amendment. There are other vital rights embodied in the Constitution, such as the right to vote, the right to serve on a jury, the right to a fair trial, and the right to be a litigant and to enjoy unintimidated and uncoerced access to the courts of justice. The rights to freedom of association and to foster and propagate collective beliefs are also among the important liberties which are secured by the Constitution.

Despite significant and heart-warming gains, there is no question that the denial of these rights is often frequent and grievous. There is a dire need for more Federal legislation to give impetus to the States in complying with the law of the land on these constitutional guaranteed civil rights.

Mr. Speaker, there are some major shortcomings in the existing laws for the enforcement of civil rights—shortcomings which this first session of the 86th Congress must move expeditiously to remedy. The enforcement provisions of the 1957 act deal only with the right to vote. Under this law, the Attorney General is authorized to institute a civil action or other proper proceeding to prevent interference with the right of an individual to vote. But this power of the Attorney General to take enforcement measures under civil law does not apply to the many other civil rights guaranteed by our Constitution. It does not apply, for example, to the clause in the 14th amendment which prohibits the States from denying "equal protection of the laws" to any person. And it is this clause which has been the chief constitutional source for enforcing the rights of our minorities. This means that the Attorney General and the Department of Justice—the legal arm of the Federal Government—lack the statutory authority to use the most effective legal proceedings against violations of the constitutional rights of our people. Now is the time for Congress to extend the enforcement procedures already approved for voting rights to all of the civil rights embodied in the Constitution.

As you know, private persons have long been able to bring civil suits in cases where violations of their civil rights have occurred. Yet, except for breaches involving the right to vote, the Federal Government is limited to criminal prosecutions. Such criminal procedures are cumbersome, difficult, and unduly harsh in some instances. Criminal remedies at best come after the harm has been done. Local juries are often reluctant to convict State and local officials for civil rights offenses where criminal penalties would be imposed. Criminal prosecutions instituted by the Federal Government against State and local officials could stir up so much dissension and ill will that more than harm than good might result.

These delays and regrettable collisions in the courts between Federal and State officials can be greatly mitigated if Congress will authorize the Attorney General to apply to the civil courts for preventive relief in civil-rights cases. In such proceedings the facts can be determined, the rights of the parties promptly adjudicated, and future violations of the law prevented by proper order of the court, without necessity for bringing criminal charges against State and local law enforcement officers.

Mr. Speaker, there are other valid reasons why Congress should increase the power of the Federal Government to take civil action in cases where violations of civil rights are involved, rather than leave it entirely to individuals to seek their own remedies at civil law. These reasons involve the very essence of the ideal of equality before the law.

The forces of segregation are powerfully organized among the general populace and the political and legal officialdom of certain States. Many individuals whose rights are abridged lack the financial means to sustain the heavy expenses of litigation. Some victims of unlawful discrimination are unfamiliar with the complex legal implications and the elaborate procedures involved in undertaking the enforcement of their rights. And those inclined to seek remedial action may be restrained from doing so by the prospect of losing their jobs or of being subjected to other severe pressures and reprisals from segregationists within their communities.

In recent years the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has been in the vanguard of those who have fought for civil rights in our courts of justice. But now five States have adopted antibarratry laws which prohibit the support of lawsuits by persons or organizations not having a direct interest in the action. Another weapon used against the NAACP is the requirement by statute, legislative investigation, or court order that its membership lists be disclosed to the public. In places dominated by strong segregationist opinion, this practice has precipitated a sharp decline in the membership and revenue of the NAACP.

Such regulations hinder the actions of organizations like the NAACP which have provided legal counsel, financial aid, and moral support to advancing the cause of minority groups. This lack of equality before the law for many Americans is a compelling reason for strengthening the hand of the Attorney General in the enforcement of civil rights.

The enactment of legislation to give the Federal Government civil remedies in civil rights cases would not create any new civil rights; it would only strengthen the enforcement of existing rights under the Constitution. Such laws would not confer any essentially new and untried powers on the Federal Government. For over 60 years the Department of Justice has had experience in the use of civil procedures in antitrust litigation. The last Congress gave it this authority in cases where voting rights are violated. At this session the power of the Attorney General should be extended to enable him to seek injunctive remedies at civil law for violations of any and all constitutionally guaranteed civil rights.

The Supreme Court has ruled that desegregation of the public schools should proceed with "all deliberate speed." While this is a reasonable mandate, there must be no deliberate lagging. Congress has the legal right and the moral obligation to enact appropriate legislation to enforce equal protection of the laws for all Americans.

If the Department of Justice is given the authority which many of my colleagues and I support, the Federal Government could initiate legal action to compel recalcitrant local authorities to end segregation and racial discrimination in public schools. However, in addition, a more positive inducement should be provided for school districts confronted with the order to integrate. In the last Congress I, together with other Members of the House and Senate, sponsored legislation which, if enacted, would offer strong incentives to segregated school systems for complying with the law of the land. I urge favorable action on this legislation at this session.

According to this proposal the resources of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare would be used to advise and counsel school districts on their problems. Provision would be made whereby this Department can consult with community representatives, and, with their advice, formulate concrete plans for desegregation. Federal grants for the employment of additional teachers, teacher training, and the expansion of school facilities would be permitted for communities which take positive measures to end school segregation. Then if the local authorities refused to put these plans into effect, the Department of Justice could institute the proper procedures at civil law to enforce compliance.

This plan to encourage integration of the public schools, this proposal to implement the law of the land, would not interfere with the rights of States to provide for their own systems of education. The States would remain completely free to work out integrated school systems of their own choosing. The selection of teachers and the specification of curriculums, administrative regulations, and other educational policies would continue to be determined by the States. No decision of the Supreme Court has ever suggested otherwise. What has been clearly affirmed is the principle that a State violates the Constitution when it denies to a qualified Negro child his right to be admitted to a particular public school. The school decision is permanent. The legal conflict over integration of the public schools has been clearly and unmistakably settled.

There are other civil rights under the 14th amendment which the Attorney General should be empowered to enforce by civil procedures. In 1956 a Federal district court ruled that the school decision had destroyed the separate but equal doctrine. The Court ruled that "statutes and ordinances requiring segregation of the white and colored races on motorbuses of a common carrier violate the due process and equal protection of the law" clauses of the 14th amendment. The Supreme Court later upheld this decision. Court decisions have consistently ruled that racial segregation in public recreation facilities is a violation of the 14th amendment. The Federal district courts have ruled that segregation in public housing is a denial of equal protection of the laws.

The right of our racial minorities to use unsegregated public facilities has been declared by the courts to be the law of the land. Now it is incumbent on Congress to give the Attorney General the authority to vindicate these rights which the Constitution guarantees to all of our citizens regardless of their race or social and economic status. The moral conscience of the Nation cannot rest until all civil rights are made effective for all Americans.

PROPOSED OFFICE OF U.S. BUDGET IN THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced in the House today a bill to be known as the Budget Act of 1959.

There is no one question at the present time more important to the general welfare than the unbridled practice of the Bureau of the Budget continuing its unconstitutional encroachment upon the jurisdiction of the Congress.

Resentment to this conduct on the part of the present Bureau of the Budget as it is constituted in the executive branch, has generated widespread hostility among the responsible press and fiscal legislative authorities concerned with constitutional processes.

It is my earnest hope that the proper committee to which this bill is assigned will schedule the bill for immediate hearings. There will be no bill before such committee of greater importance to the fiscal stability of the Nation.

The result in effect of this bill will be, as it should be, a congressional budget. As a matter of legislative and historical background, prior to the adoption of the present executive budget concept in 1921, congressional consideration of budget requests was based on information contained in estimates from the individual departments.

This bill, in substance, would abolish the present Budget Bureau in the executive branch and substitute for it the Office of the U.S. Budget in the legislative branch.

Even though the bill requires the submission of a balanced budget, there would, of course, be no prohibition against the Congress enacting whatever appropriations or tax measures it deems necessary in the public interest.

The manner in which the present Bureau of the Budget has superimposed itself as a policymaking dictator over the entire Government, strikes at the very heart of our system of government, and simply can no longer be tolerated by a responsible legislature.

Mr. Speaker, there is hardly a Member of Congress who has served here any reasonable period of time, who cannot recite for you and give you chapter and verse of flagrant violations of the spirit, purpose, and intent of the Congress when the executive budget concept was born in 1921.

The Bureau of the Budget has tortured this concept almost out of existence and flouts such fundamental precepts of democracy and our constitutional philosophy of government, that this bill is now an immediate necessity.

I could recite a veritable library of details, statistics, incidents, and more particularly in the last 5 years, to justify this position. If I could bring the substance of these matters to the attention of every Member of this House, I venture to say, this bill would pass by unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker, I urge careful study of the essential features of this proposed "Budget Act of 1959." The bill embodies the following salient features:

First. It would create an Office of the United States Budget in the legislative branch of the Government.

Second. It would abolish the Bureau of the Budget and provide that the Commissioner-General of the Budget, in the legislative branch would prepare and submit the annual budget to Congress.

Third. It would require the Commissioner-General to submit a balanced budget—expenditure estimates could not exceed revenues as estimated and certified annually to the Commissioner-General by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House.

Fourth. To assist him in preparation of the budget, it would require the departments and agencies of Government to submit their budgetary requests to the Commissioner General. He would have authority to reduce or eliminate any item submitted by a department.

Fifth. The Commissioner General would not be permitted to include in the budget any appropriation estimate not submitted to him by the executive departments.

Sixth. The Commissioner General would be authorized to make such investigations and reports as might be ordered by either House of Congress or by the Committees on Appropriation of either House.

Seventh. While the bill would do away with the present Executive budget concept, it would not in any way prohibit the President from making recommendations to the Congress with respect to the budget and with respect to the fiscal operations and policies of the Government.

Eighth. It would abolish the present Bureau of the Budget and designate that office as an Office of Executive Management.

Ninth. The bill further provides that once Congress has appropriated, the head of the department, rather than the Director of the Budget, shall apportion and allocate the moneys. The Commissioner General would be required to monitor the apportionment of moneys to assure that they accorded with the intent of the Congress and to report instances of apportionments at variance with such intent.

Tenth. The bill devotes several pages to prescribing the conditions of employment, tenure, independence, and so forth of the Commissioner General so as to insulate him from pressures and to assure his complete independence of action in formulating and submitting the budget to the Congress.

INCHON OPERATION: DECISIVE BATTLE IN WORLD HISTORY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMPSON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, among the great privileges of being a Member of the Congress is the opportunity to enjoy notable programs in the Nation's Capital and, on occasion, to make known their lessons to the country by means of publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

One such event was a comprehensive, illustrated presentation on December 1, 1958, on the Inchon Operation of the Korean War at the Cosmos Club of Washington, D.C., by Brig. Gen. V. H. Krulak, U.S.M.C., now commandant of the Marine Corps Schools at Quantico, Va.

The Cosmos Club is composed of men distinguished in the fields of literature, arts, science, learned professions, and public service. The assembly on that occasion included many qualified as critics, significantly high officers of the armed services with war experience.

In addition to his specialized training as a soldier of the sea, General Krulak possesses the unique qualifications gained as a participant in the planning of the crucial amphibious operation and as an observer of its execution. Thus, his address, brilliantly delivered, made a profound impression, emphasizing again the urgent need for more of our experienced, professional officers to write military and naval history.

Because of the value of having General Krulak's contribution in the permanent annals of the Congress, especially to historians, editors, writers, and all others interested in studying historic achievement as represented by the Inchon victory, under leave accorded to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD, I quote its full text:

THE INCHON OPERATION

(Address by Brig. Gen. V. H. Krulak, U.S.M.C., to the Cosmos Club, Washington D.C.)

I. INTRODUCTION

The Cosmos Club deserves to be addressed by scientists as well as by historians—people whose knowledge is acquired through deep study; people who are quite without bias. I fear that I do not qualify in either particular. My information on Inchon comes not from deep study, but largely from personal observation, and I am certainly not without bias. So, I must ask you to discount what you hear accordingly.

Beginning at the threshold of recorded history, and continuing on through the ages, there has been a succession of battles—land battles, and sea battles—which have one distinguishing characteristic in common.

None of them could possibly have happened. Nevertheless, all of them did happen and, in each case, the history of the world was significantly influenced as a result.

The battle we are going to discuss this evening is one more of this unique group.

Inchon could not possibly have happened either. It was too complicated, too unconventional, too hazardous.

But it did happen; and it is my purpose tonight to recount something of how Inchon came about since its dramatic success is far overshadowed by the fact that it happened at all.

II. HOW DID INCHON COME ABOUT?

A battle, like a tree, develops from a seed, it is nourished, grows, and finally bears its fruit. The seed of Inchon was planted on the 25th of June, 1950 when the North Korean Peoples' Army drove south across the 38th parallel. That Army numbered about 100,000 men, half of whom were hard veterans of the Chinese Civil War. They were well equipped with Russian arms, and they were trained for offensive operations aimed specifically at the total subjugation of all Korea.

This Red Korean force was faced by a Republic of Korea Army of somewhat smaller size, one far less lavishly equipped—and, we must confess, in a lesser state of training.

Thus it was, that when the Red Korean Army poured across the 38th parallel it met with heroic but weak opposition, and it rolled rapidly southward down the main communication routes.

Two days later, the United Nations indicated North Korea as an aggressor. Our country responded promptly and attacked the advancing Red forces by air, using the Navy's Task Force 77 and the Far East Air Force. These forces swept the skies clear of Red planes, destroying at once the whole of the then existing 100 plane North Korean Air Force. But our actions really did little to stop the southward movement of the Communists.

On June 29, General MacArthur made the first of a series of prophetic statements—a statement which forecast accurately the design of the Korean conflict, and really planted the Inchon seed. He advised his superiors that air alone would not stop the Reds. He said that ground forces would be required; and, with the approval of higher authority, he flew into Korea one battalion of U.S. troops from the 8th Army in Japan.

Inchon was mentioned formally on the 4th of July—10 days after the aggression began—at a time when the valiant though outgunned ROK forces were being decimated; at a time when the United States had only one lightly armed battalion of soldiers on the Korean Peninsula.

The hard fact is that we were in full retreat—being defeated. Yet, in the midst of this grim news, General MacArthur, in a conference, made an electrifying observation—one which disclosed the breadth of his vision. He announced that the solution to the Korean problem would necessarily involve two steps; a stabilization of the front (we didn't even have a front); and a vigorous blow to cut the roads and railroads in the enemy's rear, and he placed his finger directly on Inchon as the decisive point for counteraction. Inchon, he pointed out, was the port of the capital city, Seoul. It was within a few miles of the main north-south rail line and the biggest airfield in Korea. It was the ideal target.

Six days later, at another conference in Tokyo, General MacArthur reaffirmed that the only chance of stopping the aggression would be to strike it in the rear and soon—all this at a time when our retreat was continuing at an ever increasing rate—when our very ability to remain on the Korean peninsula at all was in doubt.

At that time, General MacArthur spoke at length of the amphibious character of the counterstroke which he had in mind, and observed that what he would like more than anything else was a Marine division to do the job.

Lieutenant General Shepherd, who commanded all the Marines in the Pacific at the time, was present at that conference. It is evident now, in retrospect, that he was making history when he promptly volunteered the troops. He told General MacArthur that he had the division, and a supporting aircraft wing as well, and all that was needed was to bring them up to war strength. He did not annoy the General with the detail that the two units were only at about 30 percent of their war strength. Instead he urged General MacArthur to send a message requesting the services of the 1st

Marine Division and 1st Marine Aircraft Wing. MacArthur needed very little urging. There and then, he composed an eloquent message with General Shepherd's help. At the end of the conference MacArthur exuded enthusiasm and resolute confidence—all of this at a time which could be described in no more charitable terms than as one of growing disaster on the Korean peninsula.

MacArthur's idea of an amphibious operation at Inchon and his plea for the necessary troops and ships met with what might be called measured response in Washington, where thoughts turned more on how we were going to retain any foothold in Korea at all. He was advised that the ships could be made available, but only with difficulty, and at the cost of unbalancing other worldwide commitments. At the same time he was advised that there were not enough marines in the active Marine Corps to meet his requirements and still maintain a minimum response to commitments elsewhere. To provide the forces requested by MacArthur would require mobilization of the Marine Corps Reserve. But it's significant that he wasn't turned down. He just wasn't told "yes."

On the 15th of July, General MacArthur resubmitted his plea for a Marine division with its supporting aviation. He told the Joint Chiefs of Staff that he desired to launch his counterstroke as soon as possible, and in no case later than September. When he received no response, he registered a third and more urgent request on July 19; and all of this in a continuing atmosphere of pyramiding defeat and retreat by the hard-pressed ROK and U.S. forces in Korea.

The third plea bore fruit. On the very same day that it was received the President authorized the mobilization of the Marine Corps Reserve—128,000 men. At about the same time the Joint Chiefs of Staff notified General MacArthur that the troops he required for the Inchon operation could be provided—but, in November and December—not in September, because to do so then would cause an unjustifiable weakening of the Navy and Marine Corps forces in the Atlantic theater.

At about this time, General Shepherd came back on the scene. He was convinced that something of an offensive nature ought to be undertaken in Korea. While he was not sure that Inchon was necessarily the answer, he urged Admiral Radford—then commander in chief, Pacific—to press for a Marine division and air wing to be delivered at the time and place that General MacArthur wanted them.

So it was that on July 25, 1 month to the day after the aggression began, that General MacArthur finally received a green light to launch a counteroffensive in a battle which might be lost before the counteroffensive could ever be undertaken. He was going to get the troops he asked for. He was resolved, moreover, that his operation would take place on September 15—just 49 days away. During that brief time a Marine division and a Marine aircraft wing would have to be built up from a peacetime framework and moved 8,000 miles or more across the sea. Plans had to be prepared in intimate detail. Great quantities of supplies and equipment had to be assembled, loaded, and shipped. In short, while the seed had sprouted, it was far from being a tree—let alone bearing any sort of fruit.

To the harassed staffs in Tokyo—who could see the situation in Korea crumbling by the hour—this was all a great abstraction—completely unreal. But not so to General MacArthur. Somehow he believed it was actually going to happen.

III. WHAT IT TOOK TO GET READY

In reality all General MacArthur had at this time, in addition to his confidence, were two things—an idea and a decision. But before you can launch a complex enterprise such as the one he had in mind, you have to have a lot more than that; you need a plan, you have to have the forces, the forces have to be in the right place, and they have to know what they are going to do. He was far short of realizing any of these objectives.

Take the first problem—a plan. Here are a few disturbing characteristics of the Inchon area which faced the planners. Inchon is a crowded oriental city about the size of Richmond, Va.—a maze of tiny streets and alleys, and its waterfront is not a beach; it is a granite seawall. And all of our precepts counsel against undertaking a landing operation in a city.

The sea approaches to Inchon are tortuous in the extreme; rapid currents, shoals; and all navigation lights in Flying Fish Channel had been destroyed by the Communists during the preceding weeks. There were no really reliable charts, and there was an oppressive threat of enemy floating mines. There were scores of offshore islands which the enemy could use to attack an amphibious force and there was one island named "Wolmi-Do," which blocked a direct approach to the city.

The entire Korean coast in this area was fronted by an insidious brand of oozy mud. There was a tremendous tide range, extending up to as much as 33 feet. As an example, here are some American landing ships sitting high and dry on the mud at low tide. In short, the planners found that everything about Inchon was bad, except for the fact that the word itself was easy to spell.

As to the time available for planning, in World War II about 90 days was considered to be a good standard to plan for a major amphibious attack, less travel time. In contrast, General Smith, the commanding general of the First Marine Division, arrived to begin planning in Japan on August 22, only 17 days before the first troops would have to sail from Japan if they were to meet General MacArthur's September 15 deadline.

But why did it have to be September 15? Why not September 20 or October 1? The tide conditions provided the answer. The planners found that a tide of at least 23 feet would be required for small craft to land in Inchon Harbor and a tide of 29 feet for landing ships. The only date before midwinter when a tide this high would occur was September 15. Unfortunately, the hour of high tide could not have been much less desirable. It occurred at 7:19 in the evening. That meant that H-hour could not be earlier than 5 o'clock in the afternoon, leaving only 2 hours before darkness for the assault Marines to clean the enemy out of a city—a strange, hostile, oriental city.

Then there was a multitude of unanswered questions confronting the planners. There is a seawall in the inner Inchon Harbor. Although our forces had occupied the city for several years after World War II, nobody could be found who would state categorically whether or not troops could land direct from boats over that wall. As a result, prudence dictated that every boat which landed at that seawall had to be equipped with two scaling ladders. So a major ladder-construction program was begun immediately in Japan.

The next question was, How soft is the mud? Could a man walk across it? Can amphibian tractors crawl across it? Again, despite our long period of occupation, nobody would say for sure. The cautious decision had to be made. Don't risk crossing the mud by foot or by vehicle; wait until the tide is high enough to cross it by boat.

Another question. There is a causeway joining the offshore island of Wolmi-Do with Inchon proper. What was the nature of the causeway? Would it support tanks? Nobody knew. The decision—don't try to use the causeway for tanks.

These and a multitude of other planning questions faced the Navy and Marine Corps planners during their 24-hour-around-the-clock planning period—which did not really get under way until late August. The deeper they got into the problem, the more its difficulties came to light. Indeed, as late as August 23 General MacArthur did not have full assurance from the people who were supposed to execute the operation that it was a feasible undertaking. On this day Admiral Doyle, who was to command the amphibious task force—a most imperturbable individual—made a 2-hour presentation of all the factors to General MacArthur. His conclusion was simply this, "The best I can say, General, is that the operation is not impossible."

After the presentation General MacArthur spoke himself for 45 impassioned minutes, telling why Inchon was essential, despite its multiple disadvantages. His concluding words were these: "We shall land at Inchon and I shall crush them." That was it.

The basic plan which was being developed—even while these discussions were going on—was certainly an ambitious one. It provided for the First Marine Division to assault and seize the port of Inchon; then drive quickly inland to capture Kimpo Airfield for use by the First Marine Aircraft Wing; thereafter to cross the broad Han River, seize and capture the capital city of Seoul and the high ground to the north.

The Army 7th Infantry Division was to land behind the 1st Marine Division and to extend our penetration to the east and south, cutting all enemy communications and setting the stage for crushing the Red forces who were pressing our battered bridgehead around Pusan. Then, when those forces were sufficiently weakened, our troops in the Pusan perimeter would break out, drive to the north and the North Korean Army would be caught in a vise.

A succession of problems developed in preparing the detailed plans for getting the Marines ashore at Inchon. The first one had to do with the offshore island of Wolmi-Do. If it were bypassed, the Red forces on it could fire into the rear of our troops landing on the Inchon waterfront. If we landed there at the same time as the landing on the waterfront there still was no assurance that the enemy could not fire into the rear of the assaulting forces. So, it became evident that we had to land and capture Wolmi-Do completely, before the main landing. But it just wasn't possible to land there any time we chose, because at low tide the troops could not get across the mud. It was finally proposed that the Wolmi-Do landing take place at 6:30 in the morning on the early high tide. This was a brutal suggestion. It meant that the ships of the amphibious task force must make a night approach up the tortuous Flying Fish Channel, threading their way through shoals and islands, and dodging mines. This plan would obviously tip our hand, and give the enemy 12 hours of warning to strengthen his main defense at Inchon before the afternoon landing. Nevertheless, there seemed no better way to do it. Admiral Doyle quickly accepted the risk and planning proceeded accordingly—to land one battalion of Marines on Wolmi-Do on the morning high tide.

This difficult decision was followed by another one of equal brutality. If the Marines who landed on the evening high tide were to drive rapidly inland and were to have supplies for the 12 hours following, the necessary vehicles and supplies had to come in on the same tide as the assault troops. Usually landing ships are not beached until the assault forces have seized enough territory ashore to provide the ships with reasonable safety; but that just could not happen at this time. The landing ships had to come in on the high tide in a matter of minutes after the first troops were ashore. Moreover, they would have to navigate a complicated course, where the margin of error was perilously small. Again, Admiral Doyle saw the necessity for getting the supplies ashore the same evening the asault troops landed. He decided thereupon that eight landing ships would steam in and beach shortly after the assault. They would discharge their vehicles and cargo, and lie on the mud—vulnerable to enemy fire—until the next high tide would permit them to withdraw. The intrepid nature of this decision was to be dramatically demonstrated on D-day.

It became evident early in the planning that Inchon Harbor was too small to accommodate all of the power that had to be put ashore if a rapid advance inland was to be assured. Therefore, it was decided to land another Marine regiment immediately south of the city to drive quickly inland and make contact with the troops who had the unenviable task of assaulting the city itself.

To provide close air support for the men of the 1st Marine Division during the landing, Marine aircraft were to support the attack from two escort aircraft carriers and then as soon as our forces captured Kimpo Airfield, the Marine planes would land and operate from that shore base.

So much for the plan which was developed in the most intimate detail, over the brief period of about 12 days. It was issued on September 4, just 5 days before the slowest ships had to leave Japan for Korea.

As a plan it read very well, but it was still just a plan. Meanwhile, where were the troops who were actually going to execute the plan? What had they been doing since we left them in mid-August to talk about planning?

They were just about everywhere; and they were doing just about everything.

Back in Camp Pendleton in California, marines were converging from all points of the compass to build up the slender peacetime strength of the First Marine Division to its full war power. Reserves were arriving from everywhere. Regular units were coming from as far away as Quantico and Camp Lejeune in North Carolina. New equipment was being unpacked and tested. Training was going on in a round the clock fashion. The same thing was taking place at El Toro, Calif., 30 miles away where the First Marine Aircraft Wing was building its way back to full war strength by absorbing six Reserve fighter squadrons brought in from as many different places. During all this time Navy and Marine Corps officers were working around the clock preparing loading plans. And then embarking the troops in both fleet and commercial shipping, to get them to Japan as quickly as possible. September 15 was not far away. Some of the marines who marched aboard ship in early August had been engaged in peaceful civilian pursuits only a few weeks before. Still other marines were embarking in Hawaii, and in order to give the landing force as much undiluted experience as possible it was decided to take a Marine battalion which was afloat in the Mediterranean and sail it all the way to Inchon. This battalion received orders at Suda Bay in Crete to sail via Suez to the Far East. It was not even to see its parent unit until they both got to the Inchon beaches, in time to take part in the landing. As you can see here, the marines who were to land at Inchon came from locations half a world apart. It has often been observed that the ability to assemble these marines from all over the world—Regulars, Reserves, air and ground, with some confidence that they would all speak the same fighting language, testifies to the usefulness of rigid uniformity in training.

Another group of marines—a reinforced regiment and an aircraft group—had been fighting down in the Pusan perimeter almost continually since August 2. They too were to take part in the landing. General Smith was promised that the regiment would be relieved from its duties on September 4. That would give it just exactly 6 days to replace its casualties—which had been heavy—to reequip, to embark in ships, and for the men to learn what they were expected to do at Inchon.

But, as is often the case, the enemy plays a tune of his own. In this instance, on September 1st, he launched an all-out attack to destroy the Pusan perimeter. Instead of being relieved, the Marine regiment was rushed in to bolster the thin and wavering lines. It was not until September 5th that it was possible to relieve the Marines—heavily exhausted from the continued fighting. But time was so short, and so much needed to be done that while these Marines were actually counterattacking the North Koreans west of Pusan, they were also engaged in making embarkation plans for the Inchon landing. How they managed to do both has always been a source of continuing wonder.

The troops from the United States converged on Japan between August 9th and August 23d. Most of them came to Kobe, where they had to reload, from the commercial type ships which brought them across the Pacific, into 82 amphibious assault ships in a manner which suited the tactical plan. It was necessary for everyone to unload—to fall out and fall in again—and time was getting short. The troops worked round the clock, and round the clock again to do the vast job.

Some of the equipment was new; the Marines who were to use it had never seen it. It had to be unpacked, cleaned, checked and distributed—and this took time.

But the troubles had only begun. Typhoon Jane, with 90 mile winds, arrived to complicate an already complicated problem. Ships were adrift in Kobe harbor. On one ship the right man on the wrong valve produced 14 feet of water in a hold where precious communication equipment was stored. Another ship turned up with a fire in one hold with consequent damage to equipment. All these things could be cared for, but they cost time, and time was short.

And then a one line message from Washington sent every marine commander scurrying for his troops' service records. The message said that no marine could go to Korea if he had not reached his 18th birthday. There were a lot of these young men—and the units had to be sorted out and reorganized as a result. Time again.

Somehow, despite all of these complications the embarkation was completed, but it never could have been done without the exhausting effort by all hands, backed up by many years of Navy and Marine Corps amphibious know-how.

Meanwhile, as the loading was going on with all of its technical difficulties, we had a few troubles with ideas too. As late as September 8, it was proposed that an Army special unit sail to the Inchon area in a British frigate, transfer in the dark at sea to a Korean picket boat, transfer again to rubber boats, paddle 3 miles in the dark, land, move overland, and capture Kimpo airfield. Just how they were to paddle against a four-knot current, find the beach in the dark, find the airfield, seize it and then hold it we never found out. The idea had to be scotched—but it took time to do it.

Next, it was seriously proposed that after Wolmi-Do island was seized on the morning of September 15, an Army battalion should land, and with five Marine Corps tanks, drive across the causeway—some 20 miles down the main road to capture the river bank south of Seoul. Just what the Reds would be doing during this period wasn't stated. Again the idea had to be destroyed, but to do so took up valuable time.

But, despite the inexorable movement of the clock, everyone somehow got aboard; each marine knew what he was supposed to do; and the force got under way. Its movement was a vast job. Ships came from 4 ports and in 6 increments. There was absolutely no margin for safety. Everything had to work out if the force was to meet its H-hour.

With this in mind, you will understand why Admiral Doyle had trouble preserving his poise when he learned that a new storm—Typhoon Kezia—was headed directly across his track; this time with 100-knot winds.

What to do? There was no flexibility in the schedule. To turn the force around in the interest of preserving lives and ships was the cautious thing to do. But this meant canceling Inchon—because of the tide conditions we have discussed. He either made the September 15 date or none at all. Admiral Doyle, using some formula of his own, estimated that the typhoon would curve away, and that the worst blow would miss his force. It was still a dreadfully rough passage. Ships were buffeted around, and those fatigued marines who had been fighting in the Pusan perimeter only a few days before took the worst buffeting of all.

But if Admiral Doyle thought he had troubles with a mere 100-knot typhoon, he was due for a surprise. His flagship put into Sasebo en route, for just 30 minutes, to pick up General MacArthur and his party. At this point, I am sure that the Mount McKinley achieved the distinction of being the most flag-ridden flagship in the history of the U.S. Navy. It had 12 admirals and generals embarked to go to war; and more captains and colonels than you could count, plus innumerable correspondents, and photographers and other satellites—to the extent that you had to be a captain or a colonel to get a bunk, and two stripes or below couldn't even get a cot. I have said a lot concerning Admiral Doyle's poise, but this condition stretched it to the limit.

Meanwhile, the pre-D-day bombardment had begun on September 10. Task Force 77 planes and Marine planes pounded Inchon and Wolmi-Do throughout the daylight hours for 4 successive days. A task force of four cruisers and six destroyers directed several thousand shells into Inchon and Wolmi-Do. Any doubt that the enemy was there and alert was dispelled by the fact that the destroyers Gurke, Dehaven, and Collett were all hit by enemy shellfire. The Collett was hit five times.

These bombarding ships reported seeing and destroying many floating mines, which added nothing whatever to the feeling of contentment aboard the amphibious ships as they steamed blacked out up Flying Fish Channel during the night of September 14. Luck was with the task force, however; not a ship struck a mine—although there were plenty of them floating around to strike.

And now, everything was in readiness. The combined efforts of thousands of people—in the face of almost unbelievable difficulty—had brought a force off the Inchon beaches. No matter what transpired after the marines landed it would, in many respects, be an anticlimax to the miraculous fact that they were there at all.

It was an eerie sight as dawn began to break on the morning of September 15. There wasn't much maneuver room for the ships and, as a result, cruisers and destroyers were firing furiously at the beach from positions right among transport ships. At about 6 o'clock, as soon as they could see, Marine planes began diving out of the overcast; dropping bombs and firing rockets at Wolmi-Do.

General MacArthur came up to the bridge of the Mount McKinley. He seemed grim as he looked at the boats and amphibian tractors chugging toward the Wolmi-Do beach in the half light. I am sure he realized that his great gamble was about to face its test.

The landing on Wolmi-Do had been planned for 0630. At 0633 the first marine hit the beach, just 3 minutes behind a schedule that had only been a dream a few weeks before.

The assaulting troops met light resistance. The defenders had been badly shaken by the naval and air bombardment. Even so, many had to be dug out in the conventional manner by flamethrower, grenade, and bayonet.

The assaulting forces drove steadily up the steep slopes of Radio Hill. By 0655, that ubiquitous Marine who seems always to be there with his personal little American flag, planted it on the top of the hill. You could see the little flag plainly from the bridge of the Mount McKinley—which was that close to the island.

When he saw it, General MacArthur's face lit up like a neon sign. He said, "That's it. Let's go down and have a cup of coffee."

There was actually a lot of fighting on Wolmi-Do; but by 1115 we controlled the whole of the island and the exit to the causeway connecting Wolmi-Do and Inchon.

Before noon, the little island was declared secured, with 108 enemy killed and 136 captured, for a loss of 17 wounded Marines.

The Reds of course had been alerted by the morning's attack, but they were given little undisturbed opportunity to do anything about it. The landing was set for 5:30 p.m. and, beginning at 2:30 in the afternoon, the fire support ships and Navy and Marine attack aircraft kept up a drum-fire of explosives on the whole area. Meanwhile, planes ranged deep inland to attack any reinforcements that might try to move into Inchon.

The weather, which had never been on our side in the entire undertaking, began to close in as the afternoon wore on. Rain squalls, and low clouds combined with the smoke from the city to make it darker and darker by the minute. By 5 p.m., as the boats and amphibians moved toward their assigned beaches, they found the greatest difficulty in keeping their way because the visibility was almost nil.

On the Inchon waterfront itself the first marine hit the beach at 5:31 p.m., just a minute behind schedule. They were lucky to have the ladders, because without them they could not have negotiated the seawall. Throwing grenades ahead of them the assault marines scrambled up and were met immediately by heavy fire from their flanks. The Reds were ready. It was not quite the same as Wolmi-Do in the morning.

The marines inched slowly into the burning city, and very soon began to find that the combination of heavy resistance, smoke, rain, and darkness made the job a most complicated one. Nevertheless, in less than an hour the advancing elements had reached their first objective at a cost of 8 killed and 28 wounded.

The highest ground in the city was Observatory Hill, and its capture was attended by all manner of difficulty. It began when the company commander of the troops designated to seize the hill was delayed in getting ashore because of a boat breakdown. When he finally did get ashore, he found his troops engaged in a bitter fight and it was not until well after dark that the hill was finally captured.

Meanwhile, the daring plan to drive landing ships ashore immediately behind the assault troops was proceeding on the rapidly flooding tide. As the first landing ships wormed their way around Wolmi-Do and toward their berths, only an hour after the first marine had landed, they found themselves under fire by enemy mortars and machineguns. They entered the battle, along with the marines in front of them on the beach, and for the first 30 minutes after they landed there was an exciting situation with the landing ships firing over the heads of the assault marines. Unloading of their vehicles and equipment began immediately and the ships soon were able to provide a haven for Marine wounded who were beginning to flow back from the frontlines.

Meanwhile, on Blue Beach south of the city, the weather had caused a wealth of confusion. From the very first the landing ships and the amphibian vehicles which they carried were beset by trouble. They had no real knowldege of the speed which the current would be flowing. This is a very important thing to know when you are riding in an amphibian vehicle that can make only 6 knots—if the current is flowing at 3 or 4 knots. Battened down, riding very low in the water, the amphibian has very poor visibility, and the unit commanders could not even see the shoreline as they plunged ahead. All they could discern was a rolling cloud of smoke and rain as you see it here. The compasses in the amphibians and in the landing craft which were supposed to guide them were, as usual, something less than accurate. And finally, just as the ship-to-shore movement was about to begin, mortar fire began to fall among the amphibians.

Confusion reigned. As one wave of amphibians headed through the murk it encountered another wave on a converging course. It appeared that both waves were headed in the wrong direction. They adjusted their courses by guess after a little consultation—as the mortar fire continued to fall. How it happened, one could never estimate, but somehow the assaulting elements actually hit the beach exactly at 5:30 p.m. on schedule, and reasonably close to their designated landing points. Troops moved rapidly inland, meeting only light opposition in the immediate beach area. However, as they plunged ahead into the dusk they soon began to encounter intermittent resistance. Ultimately several sharp night attacks were required to dislodge the Reds from their defensive positions. By midnight the tired troops were well over a mile inland and were finally permitted to dig in for the night—a short one.

The following morning at dawn, both forces resumed the attack, and advanced steadily through the day, encountering light resistance, except for a Red tank attack which was a 100-percent failure due to the sharpshooting of the 1st Marine Aircraft Wing. The tanks you see here were all knocked out like sitting ducks. You can see the dead Reds, shot down as they tried to abandon the leading tank. By dark, the Marines had driven further inland, and had a strong foothold ashore.

The advance resumed on the following morning—D plus 2 and quickly developed a dramatic situation. Apparently unaware of our strength, a Red tank-infantry column drove directly into the lines of the advancing Marines and a pitched meeting battle occurred at close quarters.

It was exciting for a while, but in a matter of 30 minutes, some 200 Red infantrymen were dead or captured and their tanks all smoking hulks.

Just about this time, General MacArthur chose to come ashore to inspect the front. Unaware of the hot battle in progress, the general's motorcade drove close up behind the action.

A young Marine officer ran up to him in a state of great agitation and said, "General, you can't come up here."

"Why"? MacArthur asked.

"We've just knocked out 5 Red tanks right over the top of this hill," the officer said.

MacArthur replied, "That was the proper thing to do," and walked up on the hill.

The next morning the advancing Marines, now endowed with a tremendous momentum, plunged ahead to capture the big Kimpo airfield. By nightfall, they had seized the field, although they had to defend it against counterattacks from three sides which continued throughout the night.

The next day our planes began to land on the field, and from then on the Marines had air support from their own shore-based aircraft.

The landing was solidly established. Nobody was going to drive the forces back now, and the effect of their presence was evident at once. Our hard-pressed forces in the Pusan area were able to launch an attack of their own. The Reds, with their supply line cut at Inchon, quickly gave ground, and soon began to disintegrate. In a week, the North Korean invasion was an invasion no longer—it was a headlong, pell-mell, disorganized retreat. The roads were littered with supplies and equipment, and North Korean soldiers stood in line to surrender. They had lost their stomach for fighting.

It was all because of Inchon—a decisive blow that broke the back of the Red Korean Army. Had the Chinese Communist volunteers not entered the battle soon thereafter, the whole thing would have been over. But they did—and that's another stirring story.

You will recall my earlier comment that Inchon couldn't happen. In retrospect, reflecting on the 2-month period we have just reviewed, it may be a little easier to see how it did.

When something of this decisive nature takes place, one usually need not look far for the personality or the circumstance, the driving influence or the character behind it; for the essential ingredient which transmutes a melancholy failure into a resounding success. In this respect, Inchon is no different than many of its counterparts throughout history. The vital ingredient is there.

Not being a historian, I feel I may take the liberty of trying to isolate that ingredient for you. There are certainly many candidates for the distinguished position. The vigor of the Marine Corps Reserve which made the 1st Marine Division and 1st Marine Aircraft Wing combat realities in such a brief time was certainly a powerful factor in making Inchon possible at all; the importance of the long years of close professional association between the Navy and Marine officers who planned the details of the attack also cannot be overstated; the personal courage and resolution of Admiral Doyle; the intrepidity of the ship captains who took the shoals and the mines in their stride. These and many more all contributed greatly to the dramatic success of Inchon.

But my choice for the ingredient that converted Inchon from a vision into a reality centers upon two men whose contribution seems to have transcended all else. These men and their conduct during this fateful period, demonstrated once again that nothing is really impossible if you believe in your cause and if you believe in yourself. Who were they? I just happen to have their pictures here now—General of the Army Douglas MacArthur and "Corporal Joe Doaks" of the U.S. Marine Corps.

CUBA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, during the past 2 years nothing in the diplomatic field has distressed me more than what has happened in Cuba during that time. For 19 months during the war I was stationed at Guantanamo Naval Base in Oriente Province on the eastern end of Cuba. I came to know many fine Cuban people. They are warm-hearted and generous. A Cuban interested in your welfare is one of the most charming and gracious people in the world. Through that experience I came to have a great admiration for Cuba and the Cuban people.

First I wish it known that I have not approved of what has happened under the Batista regime. But as far as Cuba is concerned that is history. The issue now is what will happen in Cuba with the taking over of all authority by Fidel Castro. It does appear we are entering a new era.

Whether he is going to turn out to be another little man on horseback and whether he will be another dictator simulating a democracy remains yet to be seen. I am going to reserve my judgment until I see further what happens in the next few days and months. But the things which have taken place in the last few days do not augur very well for either democratic procedure or the possibility of Cuba coming out of this unfortunate situation which it has been in during the past 2 years.

As of this morning there were 180 executions. Never before, as far as I know, has there ever been a blood bath such as this, upon the succession of a dictator in Cuba.

Some 4 years ago, Fidel Castro, the man who is now dictator in Cuba, tried an uprising on the south coast of Cuba and it was put down with the death of about 12 people. He was put in prison and remained there for about a year. It was only through the intervention of the man he denounces today, Batista, that he was freed. Batista offered him exile and allowed him to go abroad with his own life. Fidel Castro does not return today that same kind of mercy. He is returning vengeance a thousandfold. He has certainly shown none of the broad enlightenment of a man who says he has been fighting for 2 years for the freedom of his people.

Some of these executions indicate, as far as the press tells the story, of people who were in possession of police authority and under direct orders.

Whether these men are guilty of atrocities I think could very well await a time when reason is more calm and emotions under better control—and above all in civilian courts where real justice can be had. Certainly these men are just as much entitled to civilian trials as any other citizen under the Cuban Constitution. Instead of that the first act of this so-called liberator has been to set aside the constitution, set aside the laws, set aside the legislature, set aside the civilian courts which afford the only protection an individual or a minority has under these strained circumstances. Is this the action of a genuine statesman and liberator looking after justice and decency for his country?

I have here an Associated Press account as of today stating that these are in the nature of the Nuremberg trials. At this point I have several requests to make. I would like to insert, with unanimous consent, in the RECORD an editorial from the Decatur (Ill.) Herald of Tuesday, January 13, entitled "Unhappy Legacy of Nuremberg" as applied to this situation.

The editorial follows:

UNHAPPY LEGACY OF NUREMBURG

The provisional government of Cuba must use stern measures to enforce its authority and establish law and order in the island.

Thus far about 50 supporters of the ousted dictator, Batista have been put to death and an estimated 3,000 are awaiting trial. Fidel Castro has said that those Cubans who were executed after being found guilty in secret military trials were criminals who had killed large numbers of their countrymen, presumably Castro's followers.

The provisional government, headed by a former Cuban court judge, is attempting to justify—and dignify—the military trials by asserting that the procedures will be in the same manner as war criminals were tried in Germany.

Thus, the precedent of Nuremburg is invoked by successful revolutionists in Cuba.

That is embarrassing to the United States, which took a leading role with the victorious Allies a dozen years ago in bringing to trial the top Nazi leaders on charges that they plotted aggressive warfare, and that in World War II those Nazis imposed war and inhuman acts on the peoples of the world. Several of those top Nazi leaders were found guilty and put to death.

The late Supreme Court Justice Robert Jackson, chief prosecutor at Nuremburg, argued successfully that individuals should be punished for the crime of plotting aggressive war. But the Nuremburg verdicts were sustained and justified in U.S. public opinion chiefly because the Nazi leaders had been guilty of inhuman acts, in addition to planning aggressive war.

Many Americans were unhappy over the Nuremburg proceedings, fearful that the trials of the Nazi leaders would be cited by victors in some future war as a precedent for indicting and putting to death the leaders of the army and government of the defeated nation.

But even if the Nuremburg trials were legal and the judgments justified, the precedent does not apply to a succesful revolution in Cuba.

And may I say that the Decatur Herald is a newspaper of the character of the Washington Post, so this is not a reactionary newspaper writing this editorial.

As further evidence of the indignant, horrified sentiment in this country at what has been taking place in the last week in Cuba I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Post of January 13, 1959, entitled "Drumhead Justice":

DRUMHEAD JUSTICE

Senator WAYNE MORSE speaks for a good many citizens of the United States in urging that Fidel Castro's troops call a halt to the execution of war criminals until emotions are cooler. The wave of killings has reportedly taken up to 200 lives already, and hundreds more are said to face secret tribunals empowered to mete out rebel justice. This is dismaying and disheartening news. Hopes were high that Fidel Castro's government would set an example that would contrast, with the crimes of the Batista dictatorship, and not imitate some of its worst methods.

No doubt many of those executed fully deserved punishment for their depredations under the old regime. The respected Cuban magazine Bohemia makes the shocking estimation that 20,000 Cubans had been killed during Fulgencio Batista's reign by terror in the past six years. And equally clear, military officers enjoy no immunity for their atrocities merely because they have worn a uniform. But there is a difference between an open trial fairly conducted in a less impassioned moment and drumhead justice dispensed by hot-headed rebel troops. Capital punishment in such a situation too readily becomes lynching. Terror has a way of passing beyond control as the appetite for vengeance increases with use; Fidel Castro would ease many grave misgivings if he silenced the firing squads immediately.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to include in the the RECORD at this time an article by Constantine Brown in last night's Evening Star entitled "Castro's Blood Bath for Cuba":

CASTRO'S BLOOD BATH FOR CUBA—MORSE CITED AS FIRST SENATOR TO PROTEST MASS EXECUTION OF BATISTA OFFICIALS

(By Constantine Brown)

Senator WAYNE MORSE, of Oregon, has the distinction of being the first Senator to raise his voice publicly against the blood bath which has been going on in the new democratic Cuba, where government officials under the regime of ousted President Batista have been murdered in batches.

It is also a strange reflection on modern political ethics that our Government not only rushed to recognize the Castro regime but has not raised its powerful voice against the recent wholesale massacres.

Modern diplomacy apparently requires that governments even formed by murderers be taken to our bosom. It is a quite different frame of mind from that at the turn of the century. When the palace guard in Belgrade murdered King Alexander Obrenovitch and his wife, Draga Machin, all the Western governments withdrew their diplomatic representatives from the Serbian capital. And when the Okrana (the secret police of Czarist Russia) organized a pogrom in the Ukraine, also at the turn of the century, we withdrew our minister from St. Petersburg for about 7 months.

In more recent times we refused to recognize the bloody Communist regime in Russia for 16 years and President Roosevelt recalled our ambassador to Nazi Germany, Hugh Wilson, because of Hitler's ruthless persecution of the Jews, and left only a chargé d'affaires in Berlin until December 1941, when Germany declared war on us.

It may be that in those days when the administrations were not scared of complications we were more justly called the leader of the free world than we are today. We stood for principles and did not merely talk of how nice they are.

No sooner had a Communist-inspired military junta murdered and mutilated the bodies of King Faisal of Iraq and his advisers than we rushed to recognize the regime of murderers. It was explained in Washington that it was necessary to obtain the friendship of the new regime in order to forestall its going completely to either Nasser's United Arab Republic or the Kremlin. According to the latest reports from Baghdad, our rushing did not do much good for ourselves and our remaining friends in the Middle East.

Similarly, we rushed to recognize the new Cuban regime created by Fidel Castro. Off-the-record explanations in Washington are that we did so because the Cuban rebels replaced the dastardly dictatorship of Batista.

Fidel Castro used to have a well-established reputation as a strong Communist sympathizer who organized the 1948 Bogota demonstrations against Gen. George C. Marshall. His brother Raoul was described as an outright Communist who had studied in Moscow the MVD techniques of guerrilla warfare against the forces of the capitalist dictators. This appeared to be the information available to the highest official quarters in Washington before Castro started his rebellion and before it seemed that he might succeed. Now all of a sudden he has been declared by the State Department to be lily white. There was nothing really tangible to go by, it was said, to show that Fidel had a hand in the anti-American uprisings in Bogota in 1948 or that Raoul had done anything more than have a good time in the Soviet Union.

The recent wholesale execution of Batista agents, of many members of the regular armed forces of the previous regime, of many other individuals whose greatest guilt was that in order to make a living they had become members of the regular police force, and others against whom the rabble which joined the rebels had scores to settle follows clearly the Russian Communist pattern.

The Communist Party which has been banned in Cuba has not only been permitted to reappear on the political scene but in the 12-man group appointed by Castro's "yes" man, Provisional President Urrutia, to supervise labor conditions and new legislation, 5 members are Communists (either Cuban or imported from Venezuela).

While the policy that we must learn to live with Communist governments which are in the eyes of our policymakers uncommitted to international communism is being argued, there is one thing that cannot be debated: That the American Government must never remain indifferent when wholesale massacres and executions without trials (except kangaroo courts) are taking place in a country whose regime we have rushed to recognize.

And, Mr. Speaker, I want to insert an editorial from last night's Evening Star entitled "Trials—But What Kind?"

TRIALS—BUT WHAT KIND?

Fidel Castro's appearance in a filmed interview on the television show, Face the Nation, does not dispel the impression that his Cuban followers are more interested in vengeance than justice in dealing with alleged supporters of the deposed Batista.

Mr. Castro says "we would never punish anybody without a trial." The real question, however, is concerned with the kind of trials now being held in Cuba. Judging from news reports, they are not the kind which should receive the blessing of the man whose devotion to democracy is such that he scores the United States for preaching democracy while forgetting about "the democratic feeling of the people in Latin America."

A late report tells of 71 Cubans being lined up before a common grave and shot to death. This has not been satisfactorily confirmed. There appears to be no reason, however, to doubt the authenticity of an Associated Press report from Santiago which describes the execution of four alleged criminals. These accused were brought before a three-man summary court at 10:30 Sunday night. At 3 a.m., after denials of guilt or contentions by the prisoners that they were carrying out orders, the four were found guilty of "murder, torture, and crimes against the fatherland." At dawn, they were shot. The AP story carries an ominous footnote to the effect that this trial is expected to set the pattern for many other prisoners who are being held in Oriente Province.

One should not be too squeamish, perhaps, about some of the excesses which inevitably accompany revolutions. At the same time, neither is one obliged to believe that a proceeding in which four men are brought before a summary "court" in the middle of the night and condemned to death after a 4½-hour hearing is a "trial" within the meaning of any civilized definition of that word.

Mr. Castro told his television audience that his 26th of July movement now is in a secure position. If this is true, and it seems to be, there is no excuse for what Senator MORSE correctly calls the blood bath being staged in Cuba today. We hope the suspension of executions, first announced and then denied, will become a reality.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman may make the insertions indicated.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. I could find a hundred such editorials, Mr. Speaker, in newspapers throughout the country similar to these.

I know many in this House wonder what is the basis of many of these revolutions in Cuba? Having lived in Oriente Province I think I can give you same idea of the background of these forcible changes in government. Oriente Province is the largest landed province in Cuba located on the easternmost tip. It is the poorest province. There is not much arable land. It has a large rural population and the greatest unemployment by far of any province in Cuba. In short, the people there live under the very poorest circumstances both as to diet and housing.

Almost every revolution has had its inception in Oriente Province because of these economic factors which have become chronic. As long as these economic and social conditions continue in Oriente Province, I am sure that in this area there will continue to be the origin of revolutions.

The reason Castro landed at Oriente Province was because of this constant seething emotionalism which is there at all times. I would predict that within a year or two, unless something is done about the economic conditions there, this same revolutionary emotionalism will come to the surface again. Fidel Castro was the sort of culmination of this unrest and revolutionary spirit in this largest area of Cuba. In the beginning Castro had little support outside Oriente Province, but there he did have strong support because of the conditions which I have pointed out above.

The question of intervention has been raised by my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. POWELL] on the floor of the House a few minutes ago. I would like to point out to him what I consider an outstanding example of the effect of intervention in one of the countries of the Western Hemisphere where a dictator was in control.

I would like to take up now the Braden episode, if I may. Exponents of more positive U.S. intervention in Latin American affairs in the interests of democratic government down there should recall the unfortunate Braden affair in Argentina a little more than a decade ago. World War II was reaching its climax at the time and there was reason to believe that Argentina's President Juan Peron was too sympathetic with the Axis Powers. In the face of this apparent pro-Fascist orientation, the United States sent a new Ambassador to Buenos Aires in the person of Spruille Braden, a vigorous and outspoken emissary who had represented President Franklin D. Roosevelt at several inter-American conferences. Roosevelt had died the month before, but Braden went to Argentina in May of 1945 under the succeeding Truman administration. Braden lasted only 5 months. He was recalled in October of 1945 after Peron had made him the personification of U.S. interference in Argentine affairs. Peron then campaigned for reelection in 1946 using the slogan, "Peron or Braden," and similar anti-U.S. propaganda. It was not until 10 years later that revolution caught up with Peron. Thus the failure of the Braden mission emphasizes the danger of overzealous U.S. attempts to change the character of the government in any foreign nation, regardless of motive. It is my considered opinion that the action of intervention by Ambassador Braden continued Peron in power at least 3 years beyond what he would have been had Mr. Braden not actively intervened in Argentine affairs.

Mr. Speaker, I would like now to come to the question of free and open elections in Cuba. The acid test of whether or not Fidel Castro is a dictator and whether or not Fidel Castro is another adventurer of the Batista type depends on whether or not he is willing to have free elections. Last fall he refused to cooperate with any of the election machinery for candidates in Cuba's general election on November 3. In fact, he threatened to kill all of the nominees who took part in that election unless they withdrew by October 30. In a radio-broadcast he said rebel soldiers would shoot candidates wherever found. In addition, he said those captured in rebel territory would face summary trial and death penalties.

Mr. Speaker, I insert in the RECORD at this point an article from the New York Times of Tuesday, October 14, 1958, titled "Castro in Threat To Slay Nominees":

CASTRO IN THREAT TO SLAY NOMINEES—CUBAN REBEL LEADER WARNS THEM TO WITHDRAW FROM ELECTIONS BY OCTOBER 30

HABANA, October 13.—Fidel Castro, the rebel leader, threatened today to kill all candidates in Cuba's November 3 general election unless they withdraw by October 30.

A radio broadcast from Senor Castro's mountain headquarters said rebel soldiers would shoot candidates wherever found. Those captured in rebel territory will face summary trial and the death penalty, the broadcast said.

It warned of imprisonment in cases not calling for execution.

Senor Castro, who has waged guerrilla warfare for 23 months in an attempt to overthrow President Fulgencio Batista, was reported to have said that any participation in "the electoral farce" would be a crime of high treason against the interest of the country and the revolution.

President Batista has said that "only God can prevent" the balloting.

SKIRMISH AT SANTIAGO

HABANA, October 13.—Rebels and Government troops fought a skirmish yesterday on the outskirts of Santiago de Cuba, the capital of Oriente Province, according to travelers arriving here today.

They said firing in the suburbs of Siboney, Boniato, Songo, and Cristo had been seen from Santiago rooftops. No details were available because of strict censorship.

Rebel advances toward Santiago, a stronghold of the Cuban Army, have been reported for several weeks. One traveler said rebels had entered a country club outside Santiago to see the world series on television.

He said about 150 rebels had moved into position near the club to watch for army patrols. They mounted 8 machineguns on the roof and placed 20 men on the club grounds, while 8 to 10 others saw the world series for a few minutes at a time. After the game, the rebels moved on.

An encounter was reported at Santa Rita, just east of Bayamo Field, the headquarters of Government troops opposing the rebel stronghold in the Sierra Maestra. No details were available.

Raul Castro, a brother of Fidel Castro, was reported to have ordered coffeegrowers in eastern Oriente to raise the 3-cent-a-pound wage of coffee bean collectors to 4½ cents.

Another rebel leader, Maj. Camilo Cienfuegas, was said to have forced grocers in northern Camaguey Province to sell goods at prices fixed by the Ministry of Commerce.

Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of man who says now that we can put off free elections for 18 months. He nowhere has indicated that he is willing to allow elections of a free and open type called for in the Cuban Constitution. Every indication at the present time is that this man is using a reign of terror and that he is attempting to kill off those who would be opposed to him should elections be held.

If an election were to be held today or within the next 30 to 60 days, it seems to me that would be a fair determination of what the Cuban people think ought to be done.

Mr. Speaker, in view of this situation I want to say that the people of this country are going to be very much concerned, as is the editorial opinion of this country, unless these executions cease and unless these people who are charged with crime receive a fair and open trial from a court of justice, and by that I am talking about a civilian court of justice; I am not talking about a court-martial drumhead.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. As the gentleman knows, there have been reports for months that Communists may have achieved a dominant position in the Castro movement. I have been unwilling to believe such reports and will not unless the evidence should become overwhelming and incontrovertible. But I must say that this pattern of wholesale executions follows consistently the pattern the Communists have uniformly followed in other countries where they have gained power. They never allow any real opponent to go into exile and live. He might come back. They are completely logical and, therefore, without the scruples of civilized society—such bourgeois ideas as courts of justice.

I remember my introduction to the pattern in south China 30 years ago. During the warlord period, when a new warlord came in as a conqueror, the elders of a city would send a delegation of the gentry out to receive him with welcome banners.

If he were later forced to retire by another warlord, the new master would be similarly received. The people had no choice except to accept and try to get along with whoever had superior power. No other principle was involved.

When the Communists came up into central China from the south in 1927 or 1928 and captured the city of Kianfu on the Kan River in Kiangsi Province, near where I was working, the Chinese people went out, following the traditional custom, to welcome them. Later the Generalissimo's forces were built up, and he drove the Communists out. The local people came out and received his troops in the usual manner followed by the Chinese through the centuries.

In 1930 the last major civil war broke out, and the Generalissimo had to move his best troops out of the Province of Kiangsi to fight the civil war in the north. When the Communists reentered evacuated Kianfu, they executed 50 percent of the crowds who came out of the city to meet them. The Kan River literally ran red with blood. They were getting a lesson across to everybody in China. It told all Chinese that Communists do not operate like warlords. When anyone welcomes or proclaims his support for the Communist cause, he does not withdraw that support or vacillate, unless he wants to lose his head. The Reds wanted all in China to understand right at the start that there was no middle ground; this was no game. If people accepted communism, they could not smile upon or play footsie with the other side.

This is the pattern of ruthless massacre that Communists follow all around the world when they come to power. And it disturbs me profoundly to witness something that appears very close to it in Cuba. It is bound to alienate sympathy for this new regime, which I think every one of us hopes will do a better job than has been done and will give better opportunity for the Cuban people to improve their lot and develop a genuinely democratic government.

Why do the Communists dare to outrage world opinion, as is inevitable wherever and whenever they do this kind of thing? Because they know that memories are short. People soon forget. If even a superkiller like Mikoyan will come to the United States, smile and talk about trade, plenty of businessmen right here will forget all about the past and bid against each other for the privilege of building up the strength of their enemy so that it will be able to destroy them that much earlier and more completely. The Communists take time to study their intended victims in order to take them in more easily. Ruthlessness in eliminating their enemies has paid off for the Communists; we wine and dine ours.

Mr. Speaker, I hope and pray that the new regime in Cuba does not come under the control of the Communists, who understandably are trying to capture it; because if it does come under Red control, it bodes ill for Cuba and for everybody else in the hemisphere.

Mr. SPRINGER. May I say to the gentleman I hope sincerely that there will be something come out of this government which will be good for the people of Cuba and that they get good democratic government. There is nothing I could hope for more. But, such words as purification as have been used here—that these executions must take place in order to purify the government, are almost the same words used by Communist China in 1949. I am going to reserve my judgment on that point until I see that there is Communist infiltration, but I think it is something for us to be alert to.

THE SITUATION IN CUBA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, I want to develop further the earlier discussion with my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. POWELL]. In responding to any attack on our Government's foreign policy, as he has attacked our policy in Cuba, I think the first thing to do is to clear what that policy has been. The policy that our Government has followed, we do not claim to have followed it faultlessly, has been the policy of strict nonintervention in the internal affairs of any other American country. That policy was first adopted by the American States in 1933 in Montevideo and then made formal in the Bogotá Charter in 1948. Sometimes it requires that we take no action when all our sympathies would move us in one direction or another. Yet this policy has paid off and steady, forward progress has been made under it. When we have departed from it in Argentina, for example, and thrown our support behind the democratic forces opposing the dictator Peron, we enabled him to whip up anti-Americanism, and use it to get elected, and that as much as anything else put him into power. Our intervention injured the cause of democracy rather than served it.

When we were holding hearings on this issue last year we had the testimony of an ambassador here in Washington of one of the major Latin-American powers.

He said:

> There are certain problems, certain discrepancies which arise from time to time in the contact between our country and yours, but I want you to know that the principles which are guiding the policies of the United States in its relations with my country and with Latin America are sound.
> If the United States should ever fall into the error of trying to classify governments, of trying to distinguish between governments on the basis of the form that they have, it would be the greatest setback that could possibly happen here in the Americas.

We have had this nonintervention policy for 25 years. We have departed from it a few times, such as in the Argentine episode, and we will doubtless be urged to depart from it again. But look at its results. The newspaper last night had a story about the only dictator left in South America, in Paraguay. That is the fewest there has been in the last 100 years. By resolutely sticking to a policy of friendship and nonintervention, democracy has grown more rapidly and more solidly in the Western Hemisphere than at any time before.

This policy is admittedly difficult, and nobody will ever be wholly happy with it. The governments that are in want us to give more aid to help them stay in. The ones who are out and are trying to get in want us to shut off aid to the existing government, and give it to them. But, by nonintervention, we have the best chance of promoting the forces of freedom and of democracy.

Now let us look at Cuba in terms of that overall policy. Cuba's history has always been very closely tied to that of the United States, largely because of its physical proximity. The relations between our two peoples have long been close and cordial. Cuba's closest point is 90 miles from the United States, and large numbers of tourists and business people exchange visits every year.

The United States Government recognized and dealt with the Batista government as the constituted government of Cuba. Our position was not at all unique there. It was exactly the same position that all other countries in the hemisphere were following. They were maintaining relations with the Cuban Government, without exception. The 1948 Bogotá Charter specifically states that establishment or maintenance of diplomatic relations with other nations of the hemisphere carries no implication of approval of the acts of any other government.

Our relations with all American nations are based on scrupulous respect for their sovereignty. The Department of State consistently took the position with respect to the Cuban troubles that the resolution of their internal political problem was a matter for the Cuban people themselves and themselves alone.

On the other hand, the U.S. Government in its own interest decided in March of 1958, that the grant or the sale of arms to the Batista government should be suspended as long as the political tensions remained high in Cuba. Such suspension was instituted on March 14, I am advised, not March 22 as the gentleman from New York [Mr. POWELL] stated.

I have served on the Committee on Foreign Affairs all these years during which we have developed the foreign aid program. As the gentleman from New York correctly said, a government, in order to get foreign aid, has to make certain commitments that the weapons will not be used for other than the common purposes agreed upon, in this case, the common defense of the hemisphere. We have tried to get them all to stick to that, but we have not had perfect success. France used some of our materiel against rebels in Algeria, which was in violation of her agreement with us. Several other countries have been in violation. In each case we clamped down on them just as quickly as we could, but we could not send the Marines or an army to try to prevent the violation. When the Batista government began to use military assistance that we had given to Cuba for certain defined and agreed-upon missions having to do with the defense of the hemisphere, for the suppression of the internal revolt, we unilaterally suspended any further military assistance to his government. We informed it that we would continue that policy as long as the Cuban Government itself continued to alienate public opinion at home and abroad by failing to seek a political solution satisfactory to the people of Cuba, and insisting exclusively on repression and force of arms.

Our Ambassador informed the Cuban Government of our position on several occasions. The U.S. Government, of course, also sought to prevent arms contraband traffic when that was being attempted by each side, particularly by the Castro supporters, in violation of our Federal laws.

With respect to this matter of violence, during the last 2 years Cuba has been involved in a civil war of increasing violence, culminating in the overthrow of the Batista regime. As usual, there was something to be said on both sides. For instance, a year ago this month the Batista government took what was generally conceded to be, according to widespread editorial opinion, an important first step in trying to bring about a climate suitable for the preparation of elections scheduled for last June. It lifted the suspension of constitutional guaranties which had been in effect six times since 1951 in all but one of the six provinces. When it lifted the suspension of the constitutional guaranties, the Castro military opposition to the government reacted by stepping up its sabotage and terrorism all over the place. There was reason to believe that the opposition wanted the government to reimpose the suspension of constitutional guaranties in order to give it that much more of a weapon to whip up public opinion against the government.

No government in power, whether legitimate or otherwise, is likely to continue full constitutional rights and privileges if those privileges are taken advantage of to increase the disorder and the efforts to overthrow the government. So the Batista government again suspended constitutional guaranties in March, 2 months later. We did not like it, but we are not in control of Cuba and we had to stick to our policy of nonintervention. But it was at this point that we did suspend our military aid.

Any such situation, of course, breeds violence and reprisals on both sides. There have long been reports that the Cuban police and other Government agents tortured and killed thousands of their fellow citizens. The Government employed other harsh, repressive measures to discourage or put down the revolt. The opposition also resorted to violence to achieve its ends—and that seems to have grown since the success of the movement. There were instances of assassination by the Castro forces and widespread terroristic practices, including the bombing of theaters and schools as a weapon in the conflict, designed to intimidate the public and the Government.

Something has been said about the United States as an alleged haven for dictators. The facts are these: All over Latin America the granting of asylum in embassies to political exiles is an established tradition. The United States normally does not grant such asylum in its embassies. Instead the United States has traditionally granted asylum by opening its doors to exiles from Latin America and other parts of the world who meet the requirements set out in our immigration laws. Several thousand Cuban opponents to the Batista Government in recent years found a haven in the United States during their period of exile from Cuba. It might be said at this point that some of these Cuban exiles behaved badly while they had sanctuary in the United States. The newspapers have carried many accounts over the past 2 years of their illegal activities of various kinds in this country, and of seizures by our authorities of arms which certain of these exiles had attempted to smuggle from the United States.

It would probably be well to look carefully at any proposed changes in our immigration laws to exclude dictators since the term would be difficult to define. But in any case Batista did not seek asylum here. He could apply for admission now only under our regular immigration laws.

Mr. Speaker, I hope we will consider these complicated problems from the long range point of view, not explode at either side right now. We should use our good offices wherever we can in line with the policy of all the governments of the Western Hemisphere—nonintervention, while sympathetically doing all we can to bring to an end what is being called a blood bath, so that the people of Cuba can have order with restoration of individual freedom and courts of justice, and can go ahead to improve the lot of their people.

The question has been raised of economic aid for the new Cuban Government, and I want to say something about that. The U.S. attitude on this matter was stated in our note of January 7 in which recognition of the new Cuban Government was granted. This note expressed the sincere good will of the U.S. Government and people toward the people and Government of Cuba. While I understand no request for economic aid has been received from the new Government of Cuba, my colleague from New York who seems to be in closer touch, has suggested that they need large amounts of aid urgently. They tell me downtown that any request received will be considered sympathetically and carefully by our Government, with a view to seeing what can be done to aid the Cuban Government in taking care of its economic problems in the light of prevailing conditions.

I understand the Cuban authorities are at this moment assessing the economic situation and I would not expect that they would wish to discuss their needs, if any, with us until they have completed the study of their situation.

Mr. Speaker, if we hold this door open for economic assistance and cooperation whenever they qualify so that we are justified in giving such assistance, I hope that will be a stabilizing factor. It may influence the hotheads which are present in every revolutionary movement to calm down, give security to the people, and resume internal economic activities as well as trade with the rest of the world.

Mr. SCHWENGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield just for a statement and a question?

Mr. JUDD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SCHWENGEL. First, I want to say that I am indeed gratified that we have a man of the gentleman's caliber to talk to us on these important subjects that relate to our foreign affairs and our problems.

I am thankful the gentleman is taking the floor today to give us the benefit of this enlightened statement on these problems as he understands them, and which I know is based upon a great deal of study and devotion and, certainly, not without a great deal of experience, probably more experience than any other Member has had in the House of Representatives. We are fortunate to have people like the gentleman from Minnesota who are students in these matters and who give us the benefit of their thinking, and on occasion afford us an opportunity of becoming better posted on this subject ourselves.

Mr. JUDD. I thank the gentleman, and only wish his kind comments were more fully deserved.

Mr. SCHWENGEL. What I have to say to you, sir, is certainly true about the members of our loyal opposition and many of the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and many other Members of the House who have a like devotion and desire and interest to solve this very difficult problem on many fronts.

Now, I have a question I would like to ask the gentleman to see if you agree with me that our program in foreign affairs is, or should be, a program to develop and create an atmosphere where liberty and freedom can grow and expand, and if that happens, the outlook for peace and understanding is more hopeful than otherwise. Is that a true statement?

Mr. JUDD. It is. That has been the historic position of the United States Government and it is the present position. Any other position by any Government of the United States under whatever party would be rejected by the American people. I hope and I certainly believe that the American people will always insist that their Government stand only for policies that will promote freedom under law, provide greater opportunity for people to better their living conditions and encourage better relations throughout the world and therefore peace.

Mr. SCHWENGEL. I thank the gentleman. One further question. Is it not true too, that as we develop these atmospheres and, if and when, we help in the establishing of free governments and governments of the people, we have to recognize that this government of the people has to develop by stages, which is characteristic of the development of our way of life here; and also that we ought to teach our people to understand that we need to be patient in the development of this type of thing. Where foreign nations want and desire these things, they need a degree of patience and understanding.

Mr. JUDD. Yes, indeed. Sometimes we get impatient over the failure of other countries to come along as rapidly as we would like. While about a third of the people in the world have lost their political independence to the Communists since the last World War, about a third of the people in the world have gained their political independence. These newly freed countries are trying to move in some cases, so to speak, from about the 2d grade to the 12th grade all in one jump. The problems are gigantic. I oftentimes try to remember our own country at a time when we were already more than 30 years old as a nation, right at the end of the War of 1812. Conditions were so bad in this country, there was so much graft and corruption and division between the different parts of the country that the people of New England, you will recall, met at Hartford, Conn., and solemnly voted to secede from the Union. Many were ready to give it up as a bad job, because it did not seem possible to get the Thirteen Colonies working together as one Union. It was probably only the word of Jackson's victory at New Orleans which came just then that pulled them together and gave them the will to keep trying. So, whenever we are inclined to be impatient because of some of these difficulties, or even excesses elsewhere, and there is a demand for a sudden change in our basic policy, I recall with gratitude how patient some other people were with our country while we were going through our growing pains. I trust that we will keep our foreign policy on an even keel through these difficult days.

CUBA

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, I have been very much interested this afternoon in the discussions on foreign relations and affairs as they relate to Cuba.

The Castro government has been in power for about a week. This House has been organized about the same length of time. It seems to me we have discussed more the affairs of Cuba than we have the affairs relating to our own Nation since our organization. I believe there are times when we are a little too hasty in taking positions on matters as serious as those in Cuba, upon which we are only informed by what we read in the papers or see and hear on the television and radio. Perhaps sometimes we should restrain ourselves from taking those positions, pro or con, relating to these new governments and their action. It is more of interest to us that we do those things that are necessary for our own country and that Congress begin to look after our own people.

I am always interested when we get into situations such as this, to hear everyone begin to talk about fair trials. Everyone begins to talk about the fact that they should have jury trials, that they should have the right to present their evidence. Here again I stand on the floor of this House, not having been able yet to convince my colleagues that American soldiers serving overseas in the uniform of the United States, following their flag wherever it may go, are denied constitutional rights that have been guaranteed to them. I hope that in this, the 86th Congress, we will be able to rally the forces which will write legislation to assure, not the men of the revolution of Cuba or the defenders of Batista or any other dictator or any other revolutionists their rights to proper trial and the right of trial by jury, but I hope that this Congress will enact laws to see that American servicemen, serving their country abroad, the right guaranteed by the Constitution, and that we will pass some legislation which will amend and correct the iniquitous status of forces agreement.

A BILL TO CLARIFY THE PRIVILEGES OF D.C. TRANSIT MONOPOLY AND TO RESTORE THE RIGHTS OF SMALL BUSINESSES IN COMPETITIVE FIELDS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to a most distressing, unfair, and unusual situation in the District of Columbia, involving approximately 100 small operators in the sightseeing industry who are in danger of being forced out of business by the D.C. Transit System, Inc.

This state of affairs is the result of special privileges accorded to the D.C. Transit System, Inc., under Public Law 757, 84th Congress. Public Law 757 grants the corporation a franchise to operate a mass transportation system in the District of Columbia and surrounding area. Section 6 of said law authorizes the corporation to engage in charter and sightseeing services subject to compliance with applicable laws, rules, and regulations of the District of Columbia. Sections 8 and 9 grant special benefits, including exemption from District of Columbia taxes, such as motor fuel tax, excise taxes, sales tax, mileage tax, and personal property taxes.

Aside from the privileges given to the D.C. Transit System by the Congress, the corporation possesses the substantial advantage of being able to reach into its $25 million annual revenue for underwriting its losses in sideline businesses, and of being able to use mass transit facilities—personnel, equipment, garage, and maintenance—in the operation of enterprises such as sightseeing, charter, limousine, and Government contract services. The president of the D.C. Transit System has said:

> It is not only taxes but our maintenance is lower. We can't help it. Our ability to do lower cost maintenance—that is the basic difference between us. (House Small Business Committee hearings, p. 11.)

I am informed that one company, the Gray Line, Inc., has lost about $250,000 in business to the D.C. Transit System, Inc., and that, subsequent to the hearings of the House Small Business Committee, four members of the Washington

Sightseeing Operators Association have lost hotel and motel concession to D.C. Transit. The following letter from the association sets forth the losses of its members.

WASHINGTON SIGHTSEEING
OPERATORS ASSOCIATION, INC.,
Washington, D.C., January 2, 1958.

Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN, House Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN PATMAN: Since the close of the hearings of the House Small Business Committee, four members of our association have lost sightseeing concessions to the D.C. Transit System, Inc.

The concessions involved are the Ainsworth Motel, the Park Silver Motor Hotel, the Commodore Hotel, and the Franklin Park Hotel. They were operated by Eugene George, Frank P. Enfante, Paul A. Swan, and the writer, respectively.

In the case of Paul A. Swan, on October 1, 1958, the Commodore Hotel management informed him that, effective October 15, 1958, his company, Federal Sightseeing Tours, could no longer have the sightseeing concession at that hotel. Mr. Swan's successor, of course, was the D.C. Transit System.

Mr. Swan paid the Commodore Hotel $75 per month for the sightseeing concession. His gross revenue was about $6,000 annually. He has been told that the D.C. Transit System is paying the hotel considerably more, in the form of a percentage. In fact, the manager of the Commodore Hotel informed him that he could not possibly meet D.C. Transit's proposition.

This is the second time since the spring of 1958 that Mr. Swan has lost a hotel concession to D.C. Transit. This put him out of business. His testimony at the House Small Business Committee hearing on May 12, 1958, describes his loss of the concessions at the Stratford Hotel.

Where are the good motives and high principles articulated by Mr. O. Roy Chalk, president, D.C. Transit System, Inc., during the hearings of the House Small Business Committee and to the press, in statements such as, "I have no desire to put small businesses out of business—will be delighted to help them" (House Small Business Committee hearings, p. 9), "I wouldn't hurt anyone, particularly small businessmen" (Washington Star, May 14, 1958), "I am not out to put anybody out of business" (Washington Star, Aug. 4, 1958)?

We cannot conceal our feeling of indignation when we compare our situation with that of Mr. Chalk, the owner of the D.C. Transit System, Inc., a corporation doing $25 million annually. He has been reduced to fretting in an 83-foot yacht called Blue Horizons (formerly named New Horizons), because an inquisitive 85th Congress questioned his business practices, and the officials of the District of Columbia will not grant him his every wish.

Thus, Mr. Chalk keeps imploring the Congress for more subsidies. They help finance his competition with taxpaying businessmen and pay the rent for a $1,000-per-month suite at the Mayflower Hotel, vacation trips, dinners at plush restaurants, and numerous other luxuries amounting to $69,000, all of which he charged to the D.C. Transit System, Inc. Of course, such subsidies, borne by the taxpayers, including myself and all other D.C. Transit competitors, do make it easier for Mr. Chalk to cope with the high cost of living high.

It is only a matter of time before we will all be out of business, unless the Congress provides adequate protection for us against the competition of the D.C. Transit System, Inc. The enactment of your bill, H.R. 13767, seems to be our only hope.

Sincerely,

RAYMOND WARRENNER,
Secretary.

Up to now, the D.C. Transit System has declared total dividends of $690,000 in its 29 months of operations; $290,000 was paid in December 1957; $100,000 was declared on September 2, 1958; another $100,000 dividend was disclosed on November 22, 1958; and $200,000 was declared in December 1958. The $690,000 represents a return of 138 percent on the $500,000 equity capital invested by TCA Investment Corp. The stock of D.C. Transit System, Inc., is held by TCA Investment Corp., a wholly owned subsidiary of Trans-Caribbean Airways, a corporation of which Mr. and Mrs. O. Roy Chalk own more than 70 percent of the shares—House Small Business Committee hearings, page 146.

On May 12, 16, and 19, 1958, the House Small Business Committee held public hearings regarding the complaints of D.C. Transit's competitors. This was done upon the request of Hon. JOHN L. MCMILLAN, chairman, House District Committee. I submitted a report to Chairman MCMILLAN with the following letter of transmittal, dated July 31, 1958:

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

JULY 31, 1958.

Hon. JOHN L. MCMILLAN,
Chairman, Committee on the District of Columbia, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am pleased to transmit to you herewith a report by me covering those hearings which our committee recently concluded dealing with the complaints of small and independent sightseeing companies in the District of Columbia.

You will recall, Mr. Chairman, our discussions and conferences concerning this matter at the conclusion of which you expressed to me a desire and a request that our committee conduct these hearings in order to develop information respecting those factors that appeared to be operating to the prejudice of the small business members of that industry.

In view of the fact that the adjournment of Congress is imminent, I have prepared this report which I trust will be of value to you in connection with your consideration of the situation.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to emphasize that the competitive situation confronting the small and independent sightseeing companies operating in the District of Columbia is serious and, unless remedied immediately, must inevitably lead to their extinction.

I do not believe that the D.C. Transit System, Inc., which was granted a monopoly in mass transportation in the District of Columbia and, among other benefits, a subsidy in the form of tax exemption by the Congress, should be permitted to utilize any part of its revenues of $25 million annually, derived from bus and trolley riders, and the advantages inherent in its ability to use mass transit facilities, such as equipment, garages, maintenance, and personnel, in competition with any taxpaying businessmen whether in charter and sightseeing, limousine, helicopter, or other industries.

In addition, to date, Mr. Chalk has requested a subsidy on school fares, a rate increase, an increase in rate base, and extension or elimination of his obligation to remove streetcar tracks (estimated cost $10 million). These concessions would provide Mr. Chalk with still larger revenues for competition with taxpaying businessmen.

I cannot believe that the Congress, in granting the franchise to D.C. Transit System, Inc., (Public Law 757, 84th Cong.), realized the consequences which that franchise, as interpreted and applied to date, was bound to exert upon the small business members of the sightseeing industry here in Washington. As you know, the franchise grants sweeping and unique benefits, including tax exemptions, to the Transit System. These advantages have been applied and utilized as an effective competitive weapon which can result in the D.C. Transit System acquiring a monopoly in the sightseeing field in this area. I am confident that the Members of Congress, at the time they voted for this franchise, understood and believed that the benefits thereby conferred would be used to promote the advancement of the mass transportation system under private enterprise in the District of Columbia. Certainly, the Members had little, if any, reason to anticipate that their beneficence would be converted into destroying private enterprise in the sightseeing industry.

In view of all the foregoing, I urge that you consider this matter at the earliest possible date in order that the Congress may be given the opportunity of acting thereon prior to adjournment.

Sincerely yours,

WRIGHT PATMAN,
Chairman, Select Committee on Small Business.

We must not permit such injustice to exist in our Nation's Capital. Indeed, if any one of us had a similar situation in our own districts, we would take quick action to correct the inequities. The D.C. Transit System interprets its franchise as if the Congress had offered it a bounty to exterminate competitive enterprises.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION IS REQUIRED TO SUPPLEMENT THE PARTIAL RELIEF WHICH CAN BE PROVIDED BY THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AUTHORITIES

A. Tax exemption: The Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia have adopted the view that the D.C. Transit operations in the charter and sightseeing field are entitled to the statutory tax exemptions. They hold that when Congress enacted section 6 of the Franchise Act, which authorized such activities, it meant to exempt those activities from the various taxes specified in sections 8 and 9. This view is based on the opinion of Corporation Counsel of May 6, 1958, adopted by the Board of Commissioners on the same date.

President McLaughlin, however, was frank to admit that, at best, the act was ambiguous in this respect. As he stated—record, page 24:

> This statute was pretty vague in many respects.

In my opinion, the statute, properly construed, was not ambiguous to this extent. I am confident that Congress did not intend to exempt charter, Government contract, and sightseeing operations from normal taxation and that the statute does not so extend the exemptions. Section 6 specifically provides that charter and sightseeing activities are to be carried on subject to the applicable laws of the District of Columbia. These laws must by definition include the taxation and revenue laws of the District. I believe that with this plain, though economical, language, Congress specifically declared that the activities authorized by section 6 were to be taxed, and explicitly ruled out extension of the exemptions in sections 8 and 9. In my view, the Corporation Counsel and the Board of Commissioners misinterpreted the statute and misconstrued the intent of Congress when they held that the tax exemptions of sections 8 and 9 reached these collateral enterprises.

The interpretation of the District authorities, moreover, implies that Congress intended here to abandon policies which have long been fundamental to the body of national economic legislation; that is to say, the policy in preserving competition and fostering and protecting small and independent businessmen such as the businessmen engaged in charter and sightseeing operations in the Washington metropolitan area. To have granted a large company such as D.C. Transit a tax concession in its competition with small and independent businessmen, especially where this corporation was able to draw on resources built up in a legal monopoly, would have been totally inconsistent with this long tradition. There is no evidence that Congress was so motivated. In adopting the Franchise Act, it was concerned with establishing a successful transit enterprise within the District. The important tax concessions of sections 8 and 9 were extended for this purpose alone. Congress did not intend thereby to set D.C. Transit on the road of monopolization in fields extraneous to mass transportation.

The Board of Commissioners and the Corporation Counsel determined that the tax exemption of sections 8 and 9 extended to charter and sightseeing activities authorized by section 6 on the single ground that sections 8 and 9 spoke in terms of "The Corporation." They reasoned that since the charter and sightseeing activities were carried on by "The Corporation," the tax exemptions extended to the entirety of the corporate activities, including the nonfranchise operations. This liberal construction, however, conflicts with both a previous determination of the Corporation Counsel and with well settled rules of interpretation of such matters.

As to the first, Corporation Counsel has already determined that the tax exemptions in sections 8 and 9 do not extend to all activities carried on by the corporation. In his opinion dated January 17, 1957, he ruled that the company was liable for the payment of taxes in connection with the purchase of limousines in spite of the fact that those limousines were purchased by the corporation. This was ratified by the Public Utilities Commission in In the Matter of the Net Operating Income of D.C. Transit System, Inc. (PUC No. 3592), November 27, 1957. Hence, the District authorities have already determined that the use of the words "The Corporation" in sections 8 and 9 would not impliedly extend the tax exemptions of those sections to all corporate activities.

Furthermore, even if the District officials believed that the Franchise Act was ambiguous in respect to charter and sightseeing activities, they should have construed the ambiguity in favor of the tax. It is, of course, within the power of Congress to grant tax exemption. It is also within the power of Congress to make such tax exemptions irrevocable by way of contract. But it has long been a fundamental canon of construction in respect to such immunities that they are to be strictly construed and that no exemption may be claimed unless it is expressly and unconditionally granted in specific terms. As the Supreme Court stated in the early case of Minot v. Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad Co. (85 U.S. 206, 225–226 (1874)):

> • • • The power of taxation is an attribute of sovereignty, and is essential to every independent government. As this court has said, the whole community is interested in retaining it undiminished, and has "a right to insist that its abandonment ought not to be presumed in a case in which the deliberate purpose of the State to abandon it does not appear." Bk. v. Billings (4 Pet. 561). If the point were not already adjudged it would admit of grave consideration, whether the legislature of a State can surrender this power, and make its action in this respect binding upon its successors, any more than it can surrender its police power or its right of eminent domain. But the point being adjudged, the surrender when claimed must be shown by clear, unambiguous language, which will admit of no reasonable construction consistent with the reservation of the power. If a doubt arise as to the intent of the legislature, that doubt must be solved in favor of the State.

The broad construction of tax exemptions has been rejected in innumerable cases. The statement of the Court in Seton Hall College v. South Orange (242 U.S. 100 (1916)), is directly in point:

> To all claims of contract exemption from taxation, must be applied the well-settled rule that, as the power to tax is an exercise of the sovereign authority of the State, essential to its existence, the fact of its surrender in favor of a corporation or an individual must be shown in language which cannot be otherwise reasonably construed, and all doubts which arise as to the intent to make such contract are to be resolved in favor of the State. Hoge v. Richmond & D.R. Co. (99 U.S. 348, 354, 25 L. Ed. 303, 304); New Orleans City & Lake R. Co. v. New Orleans (143 U.S. 192, 195, 36 L. Ed. 121, 122, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 406); Wilmington & W.R. Co. v. Alsbrook (146 U.S. 279, 294, 36 L. ed. 972, 978, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 72); Phoenix F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Tennessee (161 U.S. 174, 179, 40 L. Ed. 660, 662, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 471); Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Adams (180 U.S. 1, 22, 45 L. Ed. 395, 407, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240).

This rule of strict construction is doubly applicable in this case in view of the fact that the claim for tax exemption is based on a franchise between the company and the United States, for it is the universal rule that such franchises must be limited to their terms. As stated in Broad River Power Co. v. State of South Carolina (281 U.S. 537, 548 (1930)):

> The very fact that legislative acts of this character are commonly prepared by those interested in the benefits to be derived from them, and that the public interest requires that they should be in such unequivocal form that the legislative mind may be impressed with their character and import so that privileges may be intelligently granted or purposely withheld, has firmly established the rule that they must be strictly construed, and that any ambiguity or doubts as to their meaning and purpose must be resolved in favor of the public interest. (See Blair v. Chicago, supra (p. 471 of 201 U.S. 26 S. Ct. 427, 50 L. Ed. 801). Northwestern Fertilizer Company v. Hyde Park, supra (p. 666 of 97 U.S. 24 L. Ed. 1036). "The rule is a wise one; it serves to defeat any purpose concealed by the skillful use of terms, to accomplish something not apparent on the face of the act, and thus sanctions only open dealing with legislative bodies." Slidell v. Grandjean, supra (p. 438 of 111 U.S., 4 S. Ct. 475, 487, 28 L. Ed. 321).

Where, as here, a tax exemption is provided as part of a franchise or corporate authorization, the exemption is limited to the property and operations contemplated by the franchise or authorization. In this case, D.C. Transit was enfranchised for the single purpose of insuring a successful and efficient mass transportation system in the District of Columbia. Thus the contractual tax exemptions must be interpreted as extending only to property and operations used exclusively for that purpose. As stated in Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee (104 U.S. 493, 497 (1882)):

> The doctrine declared in them [i.e., certain cited cases] that the exemption, in cases like the one in the charter before us, extends only to the property necessary for the business of the company, is founded in the wisest reasons of public policy. It would lead to infinite mischief if a corporation, simply by investing its funds in property not required for the purposes of its creation, could extend its immunity from taxation, and thus escape the common burden of government.

The opinion of the Corporation Counsel of the District of Columbia disagrees with these rules of construction. Under its view, the tax exemption provided by Congress can, under certain circumstances, be exploited to provide for a dollar-for-dollar subsidy out of District of Columbia tax revenues for deficit competition by D.C. Transit against independent small businessmen. Unless relief through reinterpretation is forthcoming Congress should act to make clear its original intention in this matter.

Under dates of July 10 and July 14, Mr. Roy Chalk, president, D.C. Transit System, Inc., informed the District of Columbia Public Utilities Commission of his desire to make the following concessions in order to solve the problems of his competitors in charter and sightseeing:

First. To pay voluntarily from July 1, 1958, forward, the District of Columbia motor-fuel tax on all of our sightseeing operations.

Second. To work out, if possible, an agreement with the staff of your Commission, as to a set of rules for the allocation of all appropriate items to our sightseeing, charter (including Government contracts) and limousine operations; and Third. To exclude all sightseeing, charter—including Government contracts—and limousine operations, profits and/or losses, for purposes of all present and future rate proceedings or determinations.

Concession No. 1 does not mention other District of Columbia taxes from which D.C. Transit is exempt. Further, the complainants assert that—

> The offer that the D.C. Transit System made to the PUC to pay motor fuel tax on sightseeing and charter, excluding Government contract services which bring the corporation about $200,000 gross revenue, does not solve the basic inequities in this situation. This concession has no effect on D.C. Transit's singular ability to use mass transit revenue and resources to underwrite its losses in sightseeing, charter, and related services.

As for concessions Nos. 2 and 3, the newspapers have reported that interpretations of them resulted in frequent verbal skirmishes between attorneys for D.C. Transit and the Public Utilities Commission during rate hearings in July–August 1958. D.C. Transit's competitors maintain that interpretations of those concessions by D.C. Transit officials at PUC rate hearings prove that the concessions are ineffectual. They declare that—

The Public Utilities Commission's separation of expenses of the mass transit system from those of sightseeing and related services, on D.C. Transit's books, will not resolve the problem. Such segregation on the books of a large corporation has inherent difficulties; allocation of costs and assets, as any businessman knows, is a matter of judgment. Mere accounting separation will not even up the terms of the competitive struggle. There are innumerable examples of where allocation would default, such as what percentage of storage costs of vehicles might be allocated, and what percentage of depreciation costs might be allocated.

The following are excerpts of letters, addressed to the House Small Business Committee by two D.C. Transit competitors, in reply to certain assertions made by Mr. Chalk in a supplemental statement he submitted to the committee under date of July 18, 1958:

ROBERTS & MCINNIS,
Washington, D. C., July 28, 1958.

HON. WRIGHT PATMAN,
Chairman, Small Business Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As counsel for Safeway Trails, Inc., * * * we are concerned with the assertions of Mr. Chalk as follows:

(1) "After studying all of the pertinent facts, we at D.C. Transit concluded that we would be entitled to the full rate increase requested by us in the PUC rate case even after the allocation and exclusion requested by the PUC staff. In addition, we noted that our rate of return was so far below the amount authorized by the Congress that it was of no consequence whether or not we allocated the above-described operations, even if such operations were incurring the losses alleged by the staff of the PUC." (Quotation from Mr. Chalk's supplemental statement, July 18.)

Our reply: Exhibit B, to which this statement is related, was a letter dated July 10 and addressed to the committee. It purported to make voluntary concessions which would alleviate unfair competition with other motor carriers operating in the Washington area. In this connection, Mr. Chalk, supposedly with the authority of his corporation, volunteered from July 1, 1958, to pay District of Columbia motor vehicle fuel tax on sightseeing operations; to work out with the District of Columbia Public Utilities Commission a set of accounting rules for the allocation of all appropriate items of the sightseeing operations; and to exclude all sightseeing operations profits and/or losses for purposes of all present or future rate proceedings or determinations. Subsequently, under date of July 14 (exhibit D of Mr. Chalk's communication), he agreed to amend his July 10 letter so as to extend to charter (including Government contracts) and limousine operations, the principle of allocation of expenses. On July 14, however, as a result of embarrassing lack of coordination between Mr. Chalk and Mr. James B. Flannigan, vice president and controller of D.C. Transit System, Inc., the latter presented to the Public Utilities Commission in the District of Columbia increased fare case a communication in ostensible compliance with an earlier mandate that the accounts be correctly allocated, in which he insisted that such allocation was being prepared only by order of the Commission; that he personally disapproved of it; and that he considered that the huge losses encountered in the promotion of sightseeing, charter, and governmental operations business were justified in the interests of creating a glamorous public relationship with the normal city transit bus operation. Subsequently, Mr. Flannigan, who clearly is the operating head of Mr. Chalk's Washington properties, modified his position in purported compliance with the Chalk agreement, but the allocation studies which he submitted to the District of Columbia Commission made it very clear that the compliance was in theory only and that the D.C. Transit Co. intended to negotiate with the staff of the Commission an arrangement under which a very large part of the losses and extravagances of the extracurricular services of D.C. Transit would remain buried in the subsidized accounts of the company. Illustratively, he proposed that only 50 percent of the promotional exepnses assignable to or identified with charter operations would be deducted from the operating expenses of the city service. With respect to Government contract operations in which D.C. Transit competes with other qualified and licensed operators in the District of Columbia, Mr. Flannigan proposed that none of the costs attributable to depreciation, general overhead, or management, or solicitation of the Government contract business through officers, employees, and retained organizations, should be excluded from the operating expenses of the mass transportation operation. The data which he submitted, supposedly in accordance with the agreement of full allocation and exclusion of the special services, in no sense were commensurate with the costs that totally separate and competitive operations would encounter. This was the D.C. Transit compliance with representations made by Mr. Chalk to the committee. It is quite understandable that Mr. Flannigan could testify under oath to the District of Columbia Public Utilities Commission that the changes as a result of his allocation of charter, etc., services were not significant.

(2) "As the result of my two letters to the PUC, it is clear that the so-called issue of subsidy is no longer a realistic issue. After I filed my letters of July 10 and 14 in the present PUC rate case, the PUC ruled on July 15, 1958, that the question of subsidy is no longer an issue in the present D.C. Transit rate case before the PUC. Over the objections of counsel for Gray Line and our other competitors, the PUC has now conclusively ruled that in view of my concessions, the matter of the alleged subsidy was not an issue in that proceeding or in any future transit rate case." (Quotation from Mr. Chalk's supplemental statement, July 18.)

Our reply: The statement is not only untrue, it is ridiculous. The congressional legislation makes the question of subsidy an imperative part of every rate case involving the D.C. Transit Co. The Commission did not rule that the question of subsidy or even the question of competition of subsidy upon inflated operating bases was to be excluded from the case and, in fact, it has been the subject and will be the subject of intensive cross-examination and substantial affirmative evidence. It is to be noted in this connection that Mr. Chalk concedes the hypocritical character of his concession. On the same page, he says:

"Because I am so certain that there is no subsidy in fact and because I am so certain that the PUC will so find, I have agreed to make the concessions which I have described in my letters to PUC Chairman George E. C. Hayes of July 10 and 14 (exhibits B and D enclosed herewith)."

If Mr. Chalk was advised and assumed that the inclusion of the deficits in the special services operations were inconsequential or unimportant, it is clear that his concession of absolute allocation was fictional.

(3) At page 32 (of Mr. Chalk's supplemental statement, July 18), after saying that PUC staff member Falk has shown a loss of $200,000 in the 1957 transit sightseeing operations of D.C. Transit, the letter stated:

"If, moreover, the charges for such labor and equipment are charged to sightseeing, then the equivalent amount of such expenses should be withdrawn from the mass transit charges, thereby increasing mass transit profits accordingly. If, therefore, it is said that sightseeing operations resulted in a loss, it necessarily must follow that our other net profit was understated proportionately by the absorption in sightseeing operations of costs which otherwise would have been charged to mass transit operations."

This is plain gobbledygook. Obviously, if the correct accounting with full allocation to the special services is maintained, the operating expenses of the mass transportation services would be less, the increase in rates required of the public would be less, and the loss reflected in the company's demand for increased schoolchildren fares would be substantially less. The difficulty lies in the fact that the basic book records maintained by D.C. Transit erroneously bury the special service losses and it requires persistent accounting detective work to untangle the basic errors. The alternative would be a mandatory, if not statutory, provision that prohibits the inappropriate accounting.

(4) "Finally, as I pointed out above, the overall result of sightseeing sales promotion has been to increase gross passenger revenues through the inducement to more persons to ride our streetcars and buses. All of the upward turn in passenger revenues should be attributed to our sales promotion work in the sightseeing business." (Quotation from Mr. Chalk's supplemental statement, July 18.)

Our reply: This is a plainly dishonest statement. It is not necessary to in any sense depreciate the superiority of Madison Avenue approach which Mr. Chalk has applied to our District of Columbia transit situation in order to reach a conclusion that unlimited advertising and promotion of a competitive non-mass-transportation service at the expense of the mass-transportation public must be restricted. If the airline owners of the D.C. Transit System are willing to expend their own capital (apart from Federal subsidy for airlines) in efficient promotion of the sightseeing business, and if this relationship can be policed under a private ownership subsidy policy, there could be no valid objection from their competitors. However, basic commonsense indicates restriction on monopolistic access to the public purse or to the pocketbooks of the mass transportation riders.

The seriousness of the fundamental issue before this committee is acknowledged. Every major city in the country is confronted with the necessity of a solution of the transportation problem involved in preventing further decay of the central city area because of the departure to the suburbs. Some seek solution in governmentally owned operations. In the District of Columbia, Congress has at least tentatively imposed a system of semiautomatic rate increases and public subsidy. In the meantime, the engineers have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in reaching technical solutions which require the use of long-distance buses, suburban buses, and even new rail transit systems. Any conclusion of this committee which would destroy other existing transit and transportation facilities prior to their use in the composite system and at the public expense would be very unfortunate.

WILLIAM A. ROBERTS,
Counsel for Safeway Trails, Inc.

THE GRAY LINE,
Washington, D.C., July 23, 1958.

Hon. WRIGHT PATMAN,
Chairman, House Small Business Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PATMAN: Mr. Chalk seems to imply he has remedied the inequity of this situation by his letters of July 10 and July 14, 1958. He claims too much. Those letters do not propose anything like competitive equality. * * *

Mr. Chalk states that in those letters he has agreed to allocate sightseeing, charter, and limousine losses out of his corporate expenses for purposes of rate proceedings before the Public Utilities Commission. This kind of assurance might easily be misunderstood by the committee. It would have no effect on D.C. Transit's singular ability to use its mass transit revenues and resources to underwrite its competitive losses in charter and sightseeing. Furthermore, in spite of the fact that the committee's own hearings demonstrated that Mr. Chalk's charter and sightseeing losses were not less than $193,000 (hearings, transcript, p. 87), he has recently submitted a schedule, purportedly pursuant to this agreement to allocate, which shaves those losses down to $30,000 and dramatically illustrates the pitfalls of D.C. Transit's own self-serving allocations in these matters.

In short, it is spectacularly not true that Mr. Chalk's letters of July 10 and 14 to the Public Utilities Commission rendered academic and moot the basic issues in the committee investigation or answer completely all of the matters as to which the public hearings were presumably called to investigate (p. 20). The complaints which the committee heard in its investigation were leveled at D.C. Transit's ability to use its revenues and resources to compete at a loss with the independent charter and sightseeing companies in the area, a circumstance which unless remedied will inevitably lead to a monopoly of a once competitive industry. The Commission, on the other hand, is concerned with the quite different issue of transit rate levels. Hence, regardless of the state of the record, the Commission could not issue relief in that proceeding which will have any effect on the circumstances of D.C. Transit's incipient monopoly powers at issue in the complaints presented here. Mr. Chalk would still be able to throw tax-exempt transit moneys into charter and sightseeing. He would still be able to use his common carrier buses and garages in those fields. He would still attempt to include the lion's share of his charter and sightseeing losses in his transit expenses by careful accounting misallocations. And he could still engage in predatory competitive practices against independent competitors such as paying excessive commissions, engaging in unjustified advertising, retaliating against complainants with street hawkers and other tactics which the record of the proceeding indicates he has used in the past.

We think Mr Chalk is not confused. He understands the complaints perfectly and it is a situation he deplores as indicated by his complaint to the CAB against his airline competitors' rate reductions—except, of course, where he is the sole beneficiary.

Mr. Chalk's letter of July 18 implies that Mr. Chalk is not earning the rate of return on his investment which Congress, he says, authorized (p. 17). The record shows that Mr. Chalk's total personal investment in the D.C. Transit Co. (whose revenues exceed $25 million per year) was only $500,000 (e.g., hearings, transcript, p. 35). For this he received 100 percent of the common stock. For the fiscal year ending August 31, 1957, that company earned $589,488, after income taxes, and had available for dividends on Mr. Chalk's stocks no less than 118 percent of his investment (hearings, p. 39).

Mr. Chalk suggests again that Public Utilities Commission rate regulation would be an effective answer to the complaints against him. Mr. Hayes, Chairman of that Commission, has already stated that such regulation would not be wholly effective (hearings, p. 51).

The facts—that is, D.C. Transit's tax exemption, its excessive profits on Mr. Chalk's investment, its totally unjustified losses in charter and sightseeing, its ability to use transit resources and revenues to cover those losses, and the likelihood that unless a remedy is forthcoming the independent charter and sightseeing companies of the area will be bankrupt—are on the record. For 2 years now, the Gray Line has been competing in the face of this dangerous, incipient monopoly. Every day brings it and the other independent sightseeing companies of Washington closer to bankruptcy. These matters have been aired with the committee. We hope that the time has come for remedies, and that attention will be focused on corrective legislation, Department of Justice Antitrust Division action—as Mr. Chalk himself recommends—and effective Public Utilities Commission regulation, all geared to an equalization of opportunity in the charter and sightseeing industries of metropolitan Washington.

B. SEGREGATION OF EXTRANEOUS OPERATIONS

Congress should limit D.C. Transit's power to intertwine extraneous activities in with its monopoly transit operations. The company received major concessions from Congress because it expressed its readiness to concentrate on the overwhelmingly important problem of providing the residents of the District of Columbia with mass transit services. In this commitment the public and the Federal Government have a vital interest. D.C. Transit has engaged in an aggressive campaign of unfair competition which can lead to a monopolization of charter and sightseeing industries. In addition, the company has applied for authority in the corporate name to engage in scheduled limousine service to New York City and scheduled helicopter service in the Washington metropolitan area. Finally, it has announced plans to build shopping centers, office buildings, and other real estate developments in the District of Columbia. All these have been or will be conducted by the D.C. Transit Corp. and will be financed and operated with the assets and personnel of a company which came to Congress representing itself as a transit enterprise.

The company personnel is already spread thin over a variety of affiliated enterprises. Even Mr. Chalk admitted that he lost sight of the distinction between D.C. Transit and its airline parent occasionally—hearings, page 146. The advertising of the companies carries the names of both concerns. The transit trolleys and buses promote the sightseeing operations. The Trans-Caribbean name is spread on the sides of those trolleys and buses. The New York tieline is used in transit, sightseeing, charter, and rental limousine operations—hearings, page 136. Trans-Caribbean personnel sell Trans-Caribbean tickets in the sightseeing headquarters owned by the transit company, and, in respect to the D.C. Transit sales department personnel, Mr. Chalk admitted that they worked in a variety of fields—hearings, page 135:

It would be hard to allocate which portion of a man's salary should be chargeable to charter or sightseeing business. I just want to make that clear. There isn't a clear line.

Congress did not contemplate such a conglomerate, diffused, and complex corporate enterprise when it enfranchised the company in 1956. Concern at that time was directed to the District mass transportation system. D.C. Transit, in applying for that franchise, held itself out as a company which would concentrate on the problem of transit service. It is now apparent that transit operations are to be only a part of an empire which will also include a scheduled airline, an interstate limousine service, a helicopter system, a diesel and engine sales agency, real estate holdings, charter sightseeing and limousine operations, and street construction. Moreover, D.C. Transit seeks to extend its tax exempt monopoly from the District of Columbia into nearby Maryland and National and Chantilly Airports in Virginia, in competition with the existing taxpaying enterprises operating in those areas at present. The following letter of complaint has been addressed to me by the WMA Transit Co.:

WASHINGTON, D.C., January 14, 1959.

Re D.C. Transit's proposed expansion into suburban areas.

Hon. WRIGHT PATMAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: O. Roy Chalk again seeks to use the advantages Congress has given him in the D.C. Transit Franchise Act to the detriment of the taxpaying public and small business concerns of the metropolitan area of the District of Columbia. Yesterday, Mr. Chalk announced that he is planning to extend the routes of his monopolistic D.C. Transit Co. into the suburban areas of the States of Maryland and Virginia. By doing so, he would be depriving companies local to these areas of the predominant portion of their income, and, in fact, ultimately could cause their bankruptcy. The method of such destruction of competitors is the utilization of the tax advantages the Congress of the United States has given the D.C. Transit Co.

Last year, Mr. Chalk and the D.C. Transit Co. were scored by Hon. WRIGHT PATMAN for extending their operations in the charter and sightseeing fields by conducting these operations at a loss in order to eliminate competition. This, too, was made possible by the tax advantages that D.C. Transit Co. enjoys. Any loss incurred in the sightseeing and charter operations was chargeable against the very, very profitable local business of D.C. Transit Co. and thus enabled that company to avoid the payment of taxes which would otherwise have been paid to the District of Columbia. It is common knowledge that in a period of 2½ years Mr. Chalk has had returned 138 percent of his investment in D.C. Transit Co.

In expanding into suburban areas of the States of Maryland and Virginia, D.C. Transit Co. again would be competing with local carriers to their detriment. However, it is not only the local carriers which would suffer by this all-encompassing expansion of D.C. Transit Co. Assuming that D.C. Transit Co. would purchase its gasoline within the District of Columbia where it is exempt from the payment of gasoline taxes, the State of Maryland could be deprived of approximately $70,000 per year of revenue obtained from said taxes. By losing this revenue, the road programs of construction and repair of the State of Maryland would have to suffer unless the general taxpaying public were to make up the difference. This would be only the first step of many inasmuch as many small businesses, both in the transportation business and out of the transportation business, would suffer from the unfair competition. In fact, the only company which would prosper would be the monopoly, D.C. Transit Co.

It is my hope that your championing of the cause of the small businessman, the taxpaying public, and the surrounding States to the District of Columbia, will be successful in the curbing of the ever-growing and ever-prosperous D.C. Transit Co.

Sincerely yours,

D. JAY HYMAN,
EARL M. FOREMAN,
Counsel, WMA Transit Co.

These new circumstances and considerations compel a reconsideration of the terms and conditions properly to be attached to the monopoly transit franchise within the District. Nor is Congress forestalled from taking proper action to protect the interests of the public. The Franchise Act is for a term of 20 years. It may be repealed at any time for nonuse. If it is revoked after 7 years, the corporation waives any claim for damages. These provisions do not mean that Congress is barred from enacting effective and necessary regulatory legislation at any time before or after the seventh year affecting D.C. Transit's operations. D.C. Transit is not, by virtue of the Franchise Act, in a special position in respect to police power legislation. Franchised companies are not immune. The police power is never and cannot be bargained away by a franchise. If the general welfare of the community requires regulation which affects the methods of operation of holders of franchises, they may not complain. The welfare of the community always is paramount. The Supreme Court of the United States has so held on numerous occasions. In Chicago & Alton Railroad Company v. Tranbarger (238 U.S. 67, 76–77 (1915)), the Court enunciated the principle in the following language:

> But a more satisfactory answer to the argument under the contract clause, and one which at the same time refutes the contention of plaintiff in error under the due-process clause, is that the statute in question was passed under the police power of the State for the general benefit of the community at large and for the purpose of preventing unnecessary and widespread injury to property.
> It is established by repeated decisions of this Court that neither of these provisions of the Federal Constitution has the effect of overriding the power of the State to establish all regulations reasonably necessary to secure the health, safety, or general welfare of the community; that this power can neither be abdicated nor bargained away, and is inalienable even by express grant; and that all contract and property rights are held subject to its fair exercise. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Goldsboro (232 U.S. 548, 558, 58 L. Ed. 721, 726, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 364), and cases cited. And it is also settled that the police power embraces regulations designed to promote the public convenience or the general welfare and prosperity, as well as those in the safety. Lake Shore & M.S.R. Co. v. Ohio (173 U.S. 285, 292, 43 L. Ed. 702, 704, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 465); Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Illinois (200 U.S. 561, 592, 50 L. Ed. 596, 609, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175); Bacon v. Walker (204 U.S. 311, 317, 51 L. Ed. 499, 502, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289).

This doctrine has been applied to the extent of permitting subsequent legislation which outlawed a particular activity or business for the general welfare notwithstanding the legislature had previously granted a franchise to a company to enage in that business.

Stone v. State of Mississippi (101 U.S. 814 (1880)) (legislature conferred a franchise on a private corporation to conduct a lottery business; subsequently adopted State constitution prohibited lotteries); Boston Beer Co. v. Commonwealth of Massachusetts (97 U.S. 25 (1878)) (private corporation chartered by legislature to manufacture malt liquor; legislature subsequently enacted prohibition law).

It always permits regulations of the mode or manner of doing business by the holder of a franchise when that seems advisable to the legislative body.

Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co. v. City of Goldsboro (232 U.S. 548 (1914)) (railroad company franchised by legislature to operate tracks through area which later became a city; subsequent city ordinance regulated operations on tracks within city and prohibited certain practices); Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Village of Hyde Park (97 U.S. 659 (1878)) (private corporation franchise by legislature to operate fertilizer works at specified place; subsequent village ordinance outlawed operation as a nuisance).

In this case, D.C. Transit's activities must be regulated. It is engaging in unfair competition against small and independent businessmen in the charter and sightseeing fields. It is doing this through a substantial tax concession and is using the resources, equipment, personnel, and financial power of the Transit System. It has announced similar plans to invade other competitive areas and threatens again to exploit its special transit concessions and advantages and to exercise power in these fields as well.

It is imperative that Congress condition and erect necessary safeguards around entry into extraneous and collateral fields by an enfranchised transit monopoly which has the responsibility to conduct mass transportation in the metropolitan area of Washington. Specifically, if Congress should permit D.C. Transit to engage in outside operations at all, it should at least be on a basis of complete corporate and operational separation. It should condition D.C. Transit's right to engage in such enterprises by providing that in each instance of operations outside the transit bus and trolley fields, D.C. Transit would be required to set up and establish a separate division, using separate and distinct facilities, personnel, finances, so that transit equipment, personnel, and finances would be limited to transit operations.

Such a statutory prohibition under the Congress' police power would not entail any special problems in the case of such activities as real estate enterprises, helicopter service, and interstate limousine operations. However, D.C. Transit has argued that its charter and sightseeing bus operations were a special case. It took the position that they were an integral part of transit service, and that to require D.C. Transit to operate in these fields with separate buses and personnel would seriously injure the mass transportation system.

This contention as it was phrased at the House Small Business Committee hearing was not supported by the facts. The charter and sightseeing bus operations of D.C. Transit have clearly not contributed to the financial success of the corporation. In fact, the contrary is true. As operated to date, these charter and sightseeing operations have been a very substantial drain on D.C. Transit's resources. They have lost 50 cents for every dollar of revenue they have produced. It is obvious that to the extent that D.C. Transit has dedicated its transit buses and operators to charter and sightseeing work, it has drained finances of the company and substantially prejudiced the financial integrity of the transit operations.

Secondly, the facts do not bear out the contention that D.C. Transit employs its buses in charter and sightseeing work in order to increase utilization.

The tour sightseeing schedules of D.C. Transit, as reported in the attachments to the letter of J. H. Flanagan, vice president and comptroller, to the House Small Business Committee, May 28, 1958, indicate that each sightseeing trip by D.C. Transit either begins before 10 a.m. or extends past 4 p.m., and hence pulls buses from transit operations during peak rush hours. Mr. Chalk's position could only be successfully advanced if the buses were used in charter and sightseeing work exclusively between the hours of 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. The record does not support this.

Accordingly, the charter and sightseeing operations actually remove transit buses from the mass transportation system during the peak hours and hence these operations do not contribute, as Mr. Chalk suggested, to maximum utilization of equipment and personnel.

It appears that charter and sightseeing operations could be segregated from the transit activities as easily as the other activities proposed by D.C. Transit in competitive fields, such as helicopter service, real estate activities, and interstate limousine operations. It further appears that such segregation would not have an adverse effect on the financial health of the transit operations; if anything, it would help it, in view of the company's losses in these enterprises. It is imperative that Congress require such segregation.

Segregation is necessary, not only to avoid unfair competition by D.C. Transit against small and independent businessmen in competitive fields, but also in order to avoid misuse and exploitation of the special privileges granted for transit purposes. D.C. Transit should be compelled to concentrate on mass transportation. Congress granted its franchise privileges because of a crisis in this field. It did not contemplate, and should now move to forestall, the development of D.C. Transit into a conglomerate hydra extending its powers out from a transportation monopoly into extraneous competitive industries.

In my view, the problem of placing the D.C. Transit System, Inc., and its competitors on a basis which will be fair, reasonable, and just is of concern to the Congress. It is an economic problem that affects directly the welfare of numerous small businessmen and their employees.

Therefore, I am introducing today H.R. 2316, a bill which will effectuate the intent of Congress in passing the Franchise Act by requiring that the facilities, equipment, and personnel employed by D.C. Transit in the mass transit system for which it was granted a monopoly, and tax exemptions shall not be employed in any sideline enterprise in competition with the nonsubsidized and taxpaying companies. The bill does not breach the franchise; it merely regulates the conduct of those operations in a manner so obviously needed to prohibit the unfair competitive situation which has arisen and which clearly was never contemplated by the Congress.

The bill is as follows:

A bill to insure effective regulation of D.C. Transit System, Inc., and fair and equal competition between D.C. Transit System, Inc., and its competitors

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all assets, including the real, fixed, personal, rolling, or quick assets of D.C. Transit System, Inc., used or usable, and all personnel employed in providing the service of mass transportation of passengers for hire, as provided in section 1 of the Act of July 24, 1956 (70 Stat. 598), shall be used and employed exclusively in such mass transportation service, and shall not be used or employed in whole or in part in any other service in competition with the service of any other company. The Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized and directed to promulgate such rules, orders, and regulations as shall be necessary to implement this Act.

SINGLE-PACKAGE FARM PROGRAM BILL

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Montana [Mr. METCALF] may address the House for 5 minutes, and to revise and extend his remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. Speaker, like Topsy, our national farm policy just grew. It has been described as consisting of a series of disconnected, inconsistent and improvised measures.

As a result of the piecemeal approach, we have seen farm program costs skyrocket and surpluses mount while the farmer's income fell. There have been economic and political attacks, which could have been avoided by taking the time to consider the whole program on a long-range basis. The Eisenhower-Benson flexible—actually, collapsible—price support program has fed upon our failure to present a bold new farm program.

We will never have an adequate farm family income improvement and protection program until we consider each part in relation to every other part. I am today introducing a bill aimed at such a program.

This single-package approach to our farm problem has five major points. They are:

First. Income protection for farm families. This includes replacing the existing Federal farm price support program with an income parity program. It would provide 100 percent of parity income protection for the family farm production of all farm commodities by means of workable combinations of parity income supplement payments and price support loans, purchase agreements and purchases. Other sections expand and liberalize the Federal crop insurance program and provide supplemental programs for low income family farmers.

Second. A national security and safety reserve of food, fiber, and biological oils.

Third. Expanded human use and demand for farm commodities. It includes a food stamp plan, three half pints of milk free to each American school child each day, an international food and raw materials reserve bank, and extension and expansion of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act.

Fourth. A program enabling farmers, working together, to keep market supplies in line with augmented demand, thus making farm price and income supports essentially cost free to the U.S. Treasury in years of full employment. The bill would establish a voluntary national all-commodity marketing quota and conservation acreage reserve program; make improved marketing order legislation available to producers of all farm commodities; provide improved marketing-quota legislation for the basic commodities, wheat, corn, cotton, peanuts, and rice; establish a national single-commodity marketing quota and stabilization program available to producers of any commodity when needed; provide marketing premium payments on sales of hogs and cattle at desirable weights, and establish an REA-type program of loans and technical assistance to enable farmers to construct, acquire, and operate farmer-owned and controlled facilities for assembling, processing, marketing, and storing farm commodities and products.

Fifth. A comprehensive family farm yardstick credit program.

The program would be administered by a 20-man Federal Farm Income Improvement Board, 12 elected by farmers, 8 appointed by the President to represent industry, labor, and consumers.

I make no claim that this bill is the sole answer to our farm problem. It is an attempt to draft a farm program, each part of which is related to every other part. It is a draft for discussion. I will appreciate any constructive criticism and suggestions.

ORGANIZATIONS OF THE BLIND

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHLEY] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing three bills which affect the welfare of our needy aged, blind, and disabled.

The first of these measures amends the Social Security Act to provide insurance against the costs of hospital, nursing home and surgical services for persons eligible for old-age and survivors insurance benefits.

No one can deny that after a quarter of a decade of practical experience and much partisan criticism, our social security program has emerged as an American institution that is here to stay. Despite our general enthusiasm for the program, however, it has fallen short of expectations in some respects and there remains considerable room for improvement. To my mind the most glaring shortcoming of our social security system lies in the failure of the program to push forward into the vital area of health protection and insurance of medical costs for the aged. While workers in industry and government have made substantial progress through group insurance plans against the contingency of surgery or hospitalization, the opportunity available to older persons in our society for taking out health insurance is so limited, and the premium rates so prohibitively high, that our older citizens are left virtually unprotected at a time when their health needs make this type of protection vitally necessary.

Although the 85th Congress did not include in its 1958 amendments the provision of insurance against the cost of hospital, nursing home, and surgical care for our older citizens, it did direct the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to undertake a comprehensive study of alternative methods for meeting the health problems of the aged. A report of his findings to the Congress is due by February, and I earnestly trust it will pave the way for this much needed measure to breach the medical and health gap in our social security program.

The second bill which I am introducing is designed to secure the self-respect and personal dignity of needy persons receiving economic help under the public assistance provisions of the Social Security Act.

As the law is currently administered in accordance with the regulations and requirements of the separate States, many citizens are subject to undue harassment and intimidation in complying with means tests and residence requirements. Indeed, arbitrary restrictions governing eligibility often require an outrageous intrusion on the personal privacy and dignity of the applicants.

My bill stipulates that such assistance "shall be administered promptly, humanely, and with due regard for the preservation of family life and that the assistance law shall be liberally construed" so as to assure our needy citizens that they will be treated humanely under the Public Assistance Act.

I hope that this body will enact this measure to provide more liberal minimum standards and to guarantee the personal privacy and dignity to which all Americans, however poor, are rightfully entitled.

The third measure I am introducing today, Mr. Speaker, is designed to secure the right of blind individuals to self-expression through organizations of the blind. Although Federal and State administrative officers insist that this right already exists, they have at times been extremely uncooperative and, in fact, often exerted undue influence against these organizations.

So much so, that whether this right exists in fact is open to serious question. My bill would encourage Federal and State agencies, administering Federal funds for blind aid and rehabilitation, to consult with these organizations in formulating administrative policies. I commend it to your serious consideration.

HOW A LIBERAL CONGRESS CAN BECOME BOGGED DOWN IN SPECIAL-INTEREST LEGISLATION—SUCH AS THE FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS ACT

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, we have a wonderful new Congress with many new and able Members who expect to draft and pass constructive legislation and do many important things that need to be done in the public interest.

I hope that I will be pardoned for my boldness in pointing out to the new Members of the House some perhaps unexpected ways in which able and determined Members, as well as entire committees of the Congress, can, however, become bogged down trying to unravel the meaning of special-interest legislation, and thus be diverted from the constructive public-interest matters with which they had expected to deal.

CLASSIC EXAMPLE OF HOW NOT TO LEGISLATE

For this purpose I would like to call attention to a piece of legislation which occupied the attention and the efforts of Members of both the Senate and the House throughout the entire 2 years of the last Congress. This legislation was a bill which was to be known, if it had passed, as the Financial Institutions Act of 1957. I have called it much more aptly the big bankers' bonus bill. I use this as my example now for two reasons: First, it is a classical example of how the legislative processes can be misused and abused, and it is on this point that our main lesson is to be learned. The fact is, of course, that the provisions of the legislation were also bad, extremely bad, but this fact is secondary. Many bad bills are introduced in every Congress; there is nothing new about that. The legislative process has long since accommodated itself to receiving and rejecting bad proposals. Safeguards have been built up by which, as a normal matter, the contents and the meaning of a bill are made known, at least to the legislative body. The big bankers' bonus bill demonstrates, however, that these safeguards are not foolproof. They can be bypassed when skillful planning and a great deal of preliminary work are put into the project. The country's universities and colleges will be making a case study of the remarkable history of the big bankers' bonus bill for many years to come.

BIG BANKERS' BONUS BILL MAY COME BACK TO LIFE

The second reason for mentioning this legislation is that there are some new signs which strongly suggest that the sponsors of this legislation have not entirely given up. There has been a new outbreak of propaganda within the last day or so, appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and elsewhere, which would have the unwary believe that the big bankers' bonus bill was really a very fine bill, and it failed of passage in the last Congress only because a few misunderstanding Members of the House—perhaps only one or two—took an unfair advantage to defeat the will of a massive banker's lobby composed of the American Bankers Association, the State Bankers Associations, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, plus the not inconsiderable artistry and influence of the Wall Street investment houses, the life insurance companies and the huge consumer finance corporations. These telltale signs suggest that a renewed drive is under way to have the new Congress grapple with this same legislation.

Here again, however, it should be said that we need have no fears about any of the objectionable features of this legislation—and there are many objectionable features—if these are put forward singly so that the committees and two Houses may consider and act on each on its own merits. In this way none of the objectionable features of the legislation would get very far, and, indeed, I doubt whether there is any Member of the House who would introduce bills to enact these objectionable features. And with the objectionable features out of this massive 252-page bill, I doubt that there would be anything left that would give anyone any reason for wishing to pass it—certainly not the massive banker's lobby that originated the bill.

REWRITE OF BANKING LAWS INCLUDED IN A CODIFICATION THAT DOES NOT CODIFY

This financial institutions bill originated in the other body. It was initially described by its official sponsors as a bill which would codify all the banking and other statutes dealing with financial institutions, remove obsolete provisions and modernize the laws in certain technical and noncontroversial respects. Originally the emphasis was on the codification, and there was hardly a suggestion that the bill contained any substantive changes in the banking laws at all. Later, as it began to be discovered that the bill contained quite considerable substantive changes in law, the sponsors' statements began to concede that the bill did contain some changes in law, but these changes were said to be few and noncontroversial. In fact, the sponsors said that these changes had all received the favorable consideration of the banking committees at previous times.

Actually, the idea that the bill was to provide a needed codification of all the laws on financial institutions, which were said never to have been codified, proved to be ill considered. In the first place, all of these laws are very nicely codified in the official United States Code. Furthermore, the United States Code provides several distinctive advantages which a new code could not provide, in that, first, it is available to lawyers the country over; second, it is authoritative and kept up to date; and third, it is accepted as authoritative by the courts of the land.

A second thing wrong with the label under which the financial institutions bill was first packaged, moreover, was that, whatever else the bill may have been, it was, in no sense, a codification. Although the sponsors claimed that it codified all of the statutes dealing with financial institutions, in reality the bill dealt with only seven classes of institutions. According to a compilation which the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress prepared for me, there are approximately 25 other classes of financial institutions governed by Federal laws which the bill overlooked. In the second place, the bill provided neither a system of cross-references nor a system of annotations; and on this point alone it failed completely as a code. Lawyers would still have to go to the United States Code to find out what the law is.

DELEGATING CONGRESSIONAL FUNCTIONS TO BANKERS PROVED TO BE DANGEROUS

As to the few substantive changes in law—changes in the nature or the practical application of the law—the staff of the House Banking Committee ultimately came up with a list of 117 of these; and there is no assurance today that all of them were found. In fact, one chapter of the bill which would have repealed more than 200 sections of law was not reviewed to make sure that the bill would elsewhere reenact the substance of these sections.

Some of the changes in law that were discovered and clearly established proved, however, to be fantastic, as will be pointed out later.

The most important lesson to be learned from the history of the big bankers' bonus bill is that the functions of a committee of Congress should not be delegated to private citizens—and certainly not to private citizens who have a large and direct financial interest in the subject matter for which the legislative processes are delegated to them. Probably most people would assume this to be true without testing it; but the bill in question provides a factual experiment with this highly novel, if not unprecedented, procedure.

The bill was drafted by an advisory committee, mostly bankers, who were appointed by the acting chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency for this purpose. This advisory committee, known as the Cravens Committee, not only drafted the bill, but it reviewed and passed upon recommendations and suggestions that were solicited from the Federal agencies; and the Cravens Committee, or subcommittees thereof, held close-door hearings around the country, although how they selected their witnesses and what the witnesses testified to, we do not know. The official hearing records of the Banking Committees show the activities of the Cravens Committee, but not the hearings record of the Cravens Committee itself.

The Cravens Committee consisted of 27 individuals, 20 of whom were active bankers, that is, presidents, vice presidents, or board members of commercial banks. The Committee was divided into subcommittees to draft the different sections of the bill. All of the members of the subcommittee that drafted those sections dealing with the banks were bankers. Now, of course, it is impossible for me to deal here with all of the revisions of the banking laws which this bill would have brought about. It would have been a superhuman task for the Banking Committees to deal with all of them in any one session of Congress. I will make only two points:

BANKERS' LOBBY HAS NOT EXPLAINED HOW IT WISHES THE LAWS CHANGED, NOR WHY

First, many millions of words have been written about this bill. The articles, the commentators' analyses, and so on, which have appeared in the banking magazines and all kinds of trade journals are uncountable. But in all this publicity there has never been, to my knowledge, any discussion of the specific changes in law that are wanted, nor any discussion of why they are wanted. All of these writings merely allude to what a fine bill it is and deal at some length with how horrible the people are who have tried to discover and analyze the contents of the bill.

THE NEW PROPAGANDA OVERLOOKS CONSUMER AND FARMERS OPPOSITION TO THE BILL—CONTAINS OTHER ERRORS

My second point is that the new propaganda which is now appearing gives the impression that only labor has opposed the bill.

For the Members' interest I will offer for the RECORD several interesting documents:

In order that the Members may know the AFL–CIO point of view, I will offer an article from the Industrial Union Department Digest of spring 1958.

In addition, I would like to call the Members' attention to the statement of the National Farmers Union, given to the House Committee on Banking and Currency. This gives most persuasive reasons why farmers were opposed to the bill.

Then, for the consumer point of view, I will insert a legislative letter from the Cooperative League of the United States of America, of July 1, 1958, addressed to the 150 legislative representatives of the member co-ops. This warns consumers bluntly to watch your pocketbooks.

Then there will follow an article by Bernard D. Nossiter, a distinguished economist and business analyst for the Washington Post and Times Herald. This appeared in the Washington Post on July 5, 1958. Much of it appears to be based on an interview with the official author of the bill, and it contains statements attributed to him which make important additions to the body literature on this legislation.

Finally, the recent propaganda statements have taken the position that a section of the bill which dealt with the national banks selling insurance really would have made no change in existing law, because Mr. Ray M. Gidney, President Eisenhower's Controller of the Currency, has said so. On this point I will include in the RECORD part of the testimony of Hon. EMANUEL CELLER, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, under whose supervision the United States Code is prepared. As will be seen, this careful analysis makes a convincing case that Mr. Gidney was dead wrong.

The following articles and statements are only illustrative. They do not even touch upon the great majority of the objectionable changes in law which this bill would have brought about, and about which protests were received after the contents of the bill began to be revealed. Nor do they suggest all of the interests who objected. Actually, most of the bankers themselves, and not a few of the State banker associations, began to learn what was in the bill only in the later days of its examination by the House Committee on Banking and Currency. This is clear from the fact that many of the small and medium-sized bankers, who had been actively supporting the bill, wrote in saying so, and saying that, after learning, they were opposed both to the bill and to the methods which were being used to try to push it through Congress.

BACK DOOR SWINDLE

When a clever confidence operator swindles a few thousand people out of their hard-earned cash—say several hundred thousand dollars, or even a million—he is clapped into prison to dampen his enthusiasm for other people's money.

When a confidence game runs into hundreds of millions and is perpetrated by respectable bankers, it becomes a matter for remedial legislation. We don't even call it a swindle.

There is today pending before Congress a bill whose sponsors say has only the purpose of bringing under one cover all laws which relate to commercial banking. It passed the Senate in the 1st session of the present Congress. Virtually no one questioned that it provided genuine codification of the banking laws until it reached the House of Representatives.

But until Representative WRIGHT PATMAN, Democrat, Texas, discovered that it contained some very peculiar provisions, there appeared to be every prospect that it would slide through the House untouched. PATMAN is a member of the House Banking and Currency Committee with a long-time interest in banking.

He discovered that this bill, called the Financial Institutions Act (S. 1451), went much further than codification of the laws. During many months of hearings he called this to the attention of BRENT SPENCE, Democrat, Kentucky, chairman of the committee. But only after the hearings were over was the committee staff put to work digging out the substantive changes from existing law which the bill contained. Their report revealed that at least 117 substantive changes had been written into the Nation's banking laws without notice being taken of that fact—in the Senate.

Here appeared to be a misrepresentation of great magnitude—one that had slipped in by the back door. The bill had been represented by its sponsors as nothing really new. Now it was disclosed to contain a whole flock of new laws of far-reaching importance.

USURY LAWS

Outstanding among the basic changes in banking laws which this measure proposed was the repeal of the usury laws. Any repeal or weakening of usury laws strikes directly at labor. Protection against usury is of tremendous importance to all consumers, as well as to small business and farmers. Taking the lid off of interest rates at the consumer level means increased cost to buyers of automobiles, furniture, refrigerators, TV sets—in short, everything consumers purchase on time payments, including vacation travel.

It also means increased cost of farm machinery, office machines, and all kinds of equipment which farmers and small business people purchase on time.

This hits the little man in front and in back. He pays more for consumer durable goods. The market for his products shrinks as a result of decreased consumer purchasing power, whether that market is trucks that must be sold or vegetables carried in those trucks.

Seldom has there been so flagrant a hocuspocus about any bit of legislation. When the history of pernicious lawmaking is written, the financial institutions bill of 1957 will go down in the book as a towering example of how badly our legislative system sometimes works—up to a certain point, at least. While there is little hope that the bill will be thrown out, there remains some hope that it can be amended to eliminate its worst features.

Take a glance at its legislative history.

If the sponsors of the banking laws were correct in saying that this is merely a codification bill, it would be quite unimportant—merely a housekeeping matter. It has been found highly satisfactory to the banking industry. Everyone in the Eisenhower administration concerned with banking has pronounced it exemplary. It slid through the Senate as routine business— nothing new in it.

LOBBY OPERATION

But why, if it is merely a "recodification," did the American Bankers Association and the United States Chamber of Commerce put on a long, intensive lobbying operation to assure the passage of this bill? During the last year measures of enormous importance have come before Congress. Yet the financial institutions bill has never lost priority position on the calendar.

And it was only after hearings were closed in the House that the Banking and Currency Committee staff discovered that this bill had altered the law in 117 places. This staff report was dated March 7, 1958. It is too late now to question witnesses about all these changes.

In commenting upon this bill Representative PATMAN has said:

"The history of this bill violated all the rules of good procedure which democratic legislatures have learned over the last 3 or 4 hundred years. Not the least such violation concerns the usual rule against putting substantive amendments to law into a general recodification. If the bill accomplishes nothing else, it proves the soundness of that rule. It dramatizes the point that when changes in law are mixed into a codification bill, these changes are likely to be enacted without sufficient public understanding of what is being done, and without sufficient understanding by the legislative body itself."

This was not an easy bill to understand. One has to look sharply at several clauses, and then consider them all together, to catch on to the very tricky game the bankers are playing. In any case, it appears to have been entirely too subtle for the newspaper reporters who have largely ignored the bill and its implications.

Take the business of knocking out the usury laws, for example. Section 35(a), title I, would do that. Congressman PATMAN calls this section, which would actually promote usury, the Ebenezer Scrooge amendment, after the famous miser in Charles Dickens' Christmas Carol.

The history of the Ebenezer Scrooge amendment is quite intriguing. The event which appears to have triggered the Financial Institutions bill was a decision in the United States Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit entitled W. E. Daniel and E. A. Dillard v. the First National Bank of Birmingham (227 Fed. 2d 353). This decision in November 1955, followed by a supplemental decision in the same court the following January, electrified the banking world. However, the bankers didn't rush to the press. They kept their concern very quietly to themselves.

Some of them had been reaping unconscionable profits on what they thought was a loophole in the usury law. Upon the advice of their shrewdest lawyers, they had been charging interest on certain types of credit in excess of what the law allows. But it turned out that the loophole wasn't there. Billions (yes, billions) of dollars were involved.

CONDITIONAL SALES CONTRACT

The biggest bank in Alabama was found to be violating the usury law. Arguments in defense of an alleged loophole, contained in a brief filed by the Alabama Bankers Association were slapped down by the courts.

What was this dreamed-up loophole?

The bankers had invented a new kind of credit paper since the Federal usury law was passed and since most of the State laws were passed. This is called the "conditional sales contract." The usury laws mention such things as "loans," "discounts," "extensions of credit" and so forth, and they also contain a phrase—"other evidences of indebtedness." But they do not mention the conditional sales contract.

So the bankers got to thinking, or at least hoping, that when credit is extended by means of the conditional sales contract the usury laws could be ignored. Their lawyers gave them support for going on this theory. And the penalty for ignoring the law was rather slight. Indeed, there is none unless the individual who has been overcharged discovers the fact and brings suit. In that case, the court can order a refund of double the amount of excess interest paid.

In the Daniel case, a couple of truck drivers were buying the vehicles they drove from a trucking company. The court held they had been required to pay usurious interest. The decision destroyed the imagined loophole of the conditional sales contract. In effect, said the court, usury by any other name is still usury.

So what were the banks to do? In every city in this Nation there were national banks holding conditional sales contracts similar to those which had been declared illegal. These had been purchased from auto dealers and merchants of other goods and services.

At the end of December last, commercial banks held more than $6 billion in automobile paper alone. Some $4 billion of this had been purchased from dealers. The interest on this purchased paper, most of which was in the form of conditional sales contracts, amounted to hundreds of millions of dollars annually. After the Daniel decision this became "hot" money. What could the bankers do about this very touchy situation, which might result in a deluge of lawsuits if customers wised up?

The answer to their dilemma appeared to be to keep very, very quiet until they could get the law changed. And this they proceeded to attempt. But they haven't quite gotten there yet.

If the American Bankers Association had asked outright for a repeal of the usury laws, there is little question that Congress would have turned them down flatly. So they thought up a pretty good scheme. They would ask for a codification of the banking laws—no substantive changes, of course.

The person they picked to engineer this job through Congress was Senator A. WILLIS ROBERTSON, Democrat, of Virginia, who became acting chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee just as this legislation was brought forward. During the summer of 1956, ROBERTSON discovered that the banking laws of the United States never had been codified. He appears to have overlooked the fact that the United States Code consulted by every practicing lawyer codified the banking and credit laws, that a new edition is issued every 6 years, with supplements annually, and that this code for many years has satisfied the law profession.

Nevertheless, Senator ROBERTSON's assumption that the banking laws had never been codified was considered conclusive proof that codification was required instantly.

In August 1956 the Virginia Senator announced the appointment of an advisory committee, which was to work up the so-called codification. Senator ROBERTSON was very proud of his advisory group. On this 27-man committee, 22 were bankers. Each was either a president, vice president, or board chairman of his bank.

Rather naively Senator ROBERTSON remarked at hearings on his bill:

"During the past 24 years I have attended a lot of hearings in Washington, and I do not remember any in which as much concentrated wealth was represented as we have here this morning. For instance, the bankers alone represent over $250 billion of liquid assets. It necessarily follows that a lot of people in this country ought to be interested in their views on how to make their money safer, or how to make it more plentiful, or how to let those that have not got it, and I think they ought to have it, get it."

If there is any doubt as to why the bankers suddenly became interested in codifying the laws that govern their operations, it is made clear in the testimony before the Senate committee of the chairman of the advisory committee, Kenneth Cravens, a St. Louis banker, who, incidentally, did not put the usury amendment into the draft of the bill submitted to the subcommittee. It was only when the Senate committee itself reported the official bill that this bit of legislation came to light, although the committee gave no reason for its existence. In fact, no one has yet claimed fathership of this clause.

If we turn to the Senate hearings, however, we find mention of the amendment in the testimony of Cravens. He said it was his understanding that the purpose of the amendment was to overturn a ruling of the Supreme Court in National Bank v. Johnson (104 U.S. 271). He approved that purpose, but without giving a hint as to what the ruling was, or what the consequence of overrulings it would be. More recently the Federal Reserve Board also has stated that the amendment would reverse the principle held in National Bank v. Johnson.

STATE LAWS

Now what is the principle evoked in this ruling of the Supreme Court of more than 77 years' standing?

First we should note that there are two kinds of commercial banks: national banks which are chartered by the Federal Government, and State banks which are chartered by the States. The Federal usury law names a maximum rate of interest at 7 percent. However, many States set no maximum for the kind of credit extended under conditional sales contracts. But the Federal statute applies to national banks only when there is no State law which names a different maximum rate. Hence, it aims to give protection only when the State law does not do so.

But the Alabama State laws did not apply to the conditional sales contracts involved in the Daniel case; so the Federal usury law did apply.

Now section 35 of the bankers' bill reverses the principle of National Bank v. Johnson. The new approach is essentially this: If State law sets no maximum for a particular kind of credit transaction, there will be no Federal law either. The practical effect is to repeal the Federal law in many cases. The laws of most States permit the banks to buy usurious paper from automobile dealers, furniture dealers, applicance dealers, loan sharks, and others, even though their laws do not permit the banks to make usurious loans directly to consumers.

Many bankers are too dignified or respectable to look across the counter at their customers and tell them that they are going to charge an interest rate of 15 percent or even more. Yet instances have been brought to light where 60 percent has been charged by dealers. And the bankers have no objection if the dealer, or someone else, drives such a bargain.

SMALL STATE PROTECTION

Unfortunately only a handful of States have modernized their laws to establish firm consumer protection against exorbitant interest charges through the relatively new device of the conditional sales contract. The others still permit bankers to extend credit through the back door through dealers and loan sharks acting as their agents.

The bankers say that strict enforcement of the Federal laws would place national banks at a disadvantage with State banks. They demand what they call parity treatment. Even the Federal agencies which are supposed to be most directly responsible for this bill approve the parity idea. The assumption appears to be that customers would prefer to go across the street to a State bank that would charge them higher rates of interest than are permitted to national banks.

The bill, nevertheless, seems inconsistent regarding its desire to create parity for State banks. Section 51, title I, says that the States cannot require any license of a national bank to do business in their territory. It says that State banking authorities may not examine national banks. It even goes further, declaring that States cannot have laws which interfere with the citizens of the State doing business with national banks. In other words, it places national banks beyond the reach of State law.

It is illuminating to note that when the bankers were writing these exemptions for themselves they included the new terms—such as conditional sales contract and installment consumer paper—which they did not recognize in the sections where they were dealing with what are supposed to be prohibitions and limitations.

It is also extremely enlightening to note who will enforce the State laws. The answer is only a Federal official—the Comptroller of the Currency—so far as national banks are concerned. Section 3 sets up the Comptroller as supervisor of the national banks, and section 51 prohibits the States even from taking steps to find out whether or not there is compliance with their laws.

It is as if the Soviet Government said to one of its satellite countries:

"We are not going to interfere with your country. We are going to be democratic, and depend upon the laws your legislature passes. But we shall enforce them for you, just so you won't be bothered. Indeed, we are not going to let you find out whether they are being enforced."

Furthermore, section 49 of the bankers' bill says that reports which the Comptroller makes when his agents examine the national banks are to be privileged. They are going to have immunity from subpena of any court.

There is another section of the bill which makes certain that the General Accounting Office will have no authority to audit the Comptroller of the Currency. It is based upon the strange practice which allows the Comptroller's office to operate upon fees which it collects from the banks. The Comptroller does not have to come to Congress for appropriations. And the bankers' bill declares that the fees he collects from them "shall not be construed to be Government funds or appropriated moneys."

PATMAN is today questioning whether there is any justification for giving the national banks immunity from State laws. They are 100 percent private, profitmaking business, He says:

"If the Federal Government can give national banks immunity from State law, it can give drug stores, automobile dealers, farmers, or any other business such exemption."

Nor does he see any reason why the Office of the Comptroller should be exempted from audit by the General Accounting Office as though it were owned by the private banks. He believes the Office of the Comptroller should be under budget control and audit review, as any other Federal office, and not operate under secrecy.

ROAD BLOCK

The few points reviewed here are enough to stamp the financial institutions bill as an extremely tricky piece of legislation. Obviously it is not what it is claimed to be—merely a codification of present laws. It is sufficiently something other than represented to be called a first-class swindle—one that could cost the public hundreds of millions of dollars. Nor would the reader escape its effects upon the cost of everything he buys.

But it is also something more. In the never-ending battle to protect the public against the growing power of great economic concentration this bill would place blocks in the way of true banking reform—reform which would amend the usury laws in the interest of the public, reforms which would bring the operations of the Comptroller of the Currency under Federal supervision, reform which would check the growing tendency of private bankers to swallow the Federal Reserve System.

The financial institutions bill should have a much more thorough public examination than either the Senate or House Banking and Currency Committees have afforded. Amendments now are being considered by the House committee. Some will be made. Eventually the House and Senate committees will go into conference on the measure. There is still a chance that its worst features may be eliminated.

STATEMENT OF NATIONAL FARMERS UNION BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, FEBRUARY 5, 1958

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, my name is Richard Shipman. I am legislative assistant, Division of Legislative Services, National Farmers Union. As representative of Mr. James G. Patton, president of National Farmers Union, and 300,000 farm families of our organization, I wish to express appreciation for the opportunity to appear before your committee.

We think all farmers have a proper interest in this legislation. We think farmers have a proper interest in all legislation that would change the regulations and limitations placed on banking. It is our money the banks are handling; in the areas of the country, anyway, farmers are the bank depositors.

Furthermore, we depend upon bank credit, both for carrying on the business of farming, and, as other consumers, for financing automobiles and other consumer goods.

From my own personal experience, I can assure you that farmers are vitally affected by the banks and banking policy. I lived through the depression years, the period when the banks were going bust, and through the bank holiday, on a farm in Montana.

In his first inaugural address, President Roosevelt said:

"The moneychangers have fled from their high seats in the temple of our civilization."

We do not know whether that statement was ever completely true. But from what we have seen of this financial institutions bill, it certainly puts the moneychangers back in the temple, and in higher seats than ever before.

Some serious sleepers have been inserted in this bill since we testified on it before the Senate committee. We have not had time to analyze them, nor to get expert assistance in analyzing them. But one provision of the bill which we have looked into makes us sure that your committee will want to stop, look, and listen, and call some more witnesses before you make your report to the House.

Actually, we don't really need a study-project to find out that roosters don't lay eggs.

As it stands this is a bad bill. It was written to promote a high and usurious interest rate policy. Those who want to live easy on high interest are trying mighty hard to rush it through to quick passage. This indicates that more careful study might be in order.

This bill has received little or no attention in the public press. It has not been mentioned in any of the President's messages to Congress. It has not been mentioned as a topic in any other official program.

It was originally described in the Senate as merely a recodification of existing law—that is, a bill where you take all of the laws that have already been passed on this subject and already on the law books and put them together in a single place.

Farmers Union put up a flag of caution to the Senate committee. However, these and similar warnings did not receive widespread publicity.

The speeches that were made in the Senate, when the Senate passed this bill, left the impression that it is merely a recodification, excepting only 2 or 3 changes which were debated on the floor of the Senate. It is no wonder then that the general public has been unaware of this bill.

Further study reveals, on the contrary, however, that the bill contains many important changes from existing law.

The record of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency shows that the bill was written by a committee of private citizens. There were 27 of these citizens. Twenty-one are bankers and finance company representatives. There were no farmers or farmer representatives on the advisory committee.

The chairman of this committee of private citizens testified before this committee last week that the bill contains many major changes in law. This chairman, Mr. Kenton R. Cravens, testified before this committee on January 21, 1958, and answered the questions by Congressman MULTER as follows:

"Mr. MULTER. Both bills, then, we can say, do contain major revisions of existing law?

"Mr. CRAVENS. Oh, yes.

"Mr. MULTER. And some of them are quite important?

"Mr. CRAVENS. I think so."—(P. 242, transcript of hearings before House Banking and Currency Committee.)

Since the bill does contain quite important changes in existing law, we can certainly assume that these changes are going to either strengthen or weaken banking regulation from the standpoint of farmers, and from many other standpoints. Presumably the committee of bankers was pleased with the changes. But what will be their effects on others in our economy?

Monetary and credit policy; banking policy and laws; are not just the concern of bankers. These matters are vital to our entire economy. Banking is everybody's business because we are all vitally affected.

No farm organization was told that there were to be major, quite important changes in the banking laws. They were not invited to have representatives on this private committee to help draft these changes in the Nation's banking laws.

Whenever a farm bill is to be considered, all proposals receive wide public attention. They are analyzed and reported in the newspapers. Then the chamber of commerce, the NAM, the bankers, and everybody else has an opportunity to make his recommendations. Banking legislation is technical, we have no doubt, but so is farm legislation.

Let me point out at least one provision in the financial institutions bill which gives concrete evidence to our fears that it will hurt farmers. This is the provision in section 35 of title I which, in effect, repeals the Federal usury law. Unless I am mighty wrong the farmers I know are going to be greatly surprised and disappointed, too, when they learn about this part of the bill.

Section 35 repeats the present law which sets out the general rule as to the maximum rate of interest a national bank can charge on a loan, discount, or other evidence of debt. But then the bill adds some new language which provides an exception to the rule. This new language is as follows:

"The purchase of obligations or evidences of indebtedness from the actual owner thereof shall not, for the purposes of this section, be deemed a loan or discount if such purchase would not, under the law of the State in which the purchasing bank is located, be deemed a loan or extension of credit subject to the interest or usury statutes of such State."

In other words, this exception repeals the Federal usury law insofar as it relates to a national bank buying loan-shark paper. And this means you might just as well repeal the whole law. If you are going to let the banks lend money out the back door at exorbitant rates, then there is no logic to require them to lend much through the front door at reasonable rates. The banker is not going to compete with the loan shark across the street, or with the tractor dealers, or the automobile dealer, when he knows he is going to buy the loans which these people make. This will result in farmers being saddled with much more exorbitant interest rates than they are already having to pay in most places.

If the law against receiving stolen property were to be repealed, so that you created a legal market for stolen property, it would result in a great deal more property being stolen.

Now what reason or excuse has been given for repealing the Federal usury law?

The only excuse that has been given is that the people who recommend repealing the Federal usury law think the right thing to do is to let the State laws take care of this problem. In other words, this is a responsibility which they want to turn over to the States. The Comptroller of the Currency, Mr. Gidney, makes this argument several times in his testimony before this committee last year. At page 221 of part I of your hearings, Mr. Gidney said:

"We think the States are alert to their responsibilities in that field. And if a State bank of commerce can purchase a set of contracts, then our national banks of commerce ought to be able to do the same."

Then a little later at page 224 of your hearings, Mr. Gidney said:

"As to consumer credit, I don't know the laws of many States on that, but I do know the New York State law, which I believe is that it may be 1 percent a month on the unpaid balance, which really works out to be 12 percent."

In plain words, the Comptroller of the Currency is recommending repealing the Federal usury law to fall back on State laws for protection of consumers of credit when he doesn't even know what the State laws are.

This illustrates the reason why my organization feels that we cannot trust the judgment of the administrative agencies to protect the proper interest of farmers.

So the argument which has been made for repealing the Federal usury law is that we ought to let State laws take care of the problem. Then if the States take the same attitude and say that we will shift the responsibility back to the Federal Government, then there will be no law whatever.

We are asking you, the Federal Government, to do the right thing by the farmers on this matter. We think that the Federal usury law should be strengthened and improved so as to give farmers and all borrowers greater protection. We ask you to strengthen the law, not to repeal it.

Jean Jacques Rousseau once said:

"Good laws lead to the making of better ones; bad ones bring about worse."

Let's don't go backward. Let's make our banking system more civilized and enlightened—not less so.

We oppose passage of the bill as now written. We hope your committee will extend these hearings so that we can study the other sleepers in the bill that we have not had time to analyze. We urge you to call in some consumer representatives before you. You should hear the expert testimony of bona fide representatives of small business. We urge you to invite some consumer union economists to analyze this bill and give you their recommendations.

Don't rush this bill through to passage. Let's be sure what all its implications are and debate them fully.

THE COOPERATIVE LEAGUE OF THE U.S.A. LEGISLATIVE MEMO NO. 16, JULY 1, 1958

BANKERS' BILL MAY COME TO LIFE—WATCH YOUR POCKETBOOKS

The Senate passed a bill (S. 1451) last year that was strictly for the bankers. In fact, 20 of the 27 members of an advisory committee that worked with a Senate Banking subcommittee to draw up the bill were bankers. Title VII, until amended by Senator SPARKMAN and others, would have crippled credit unions. Title I, in effect, repeals the Federal usury law.

While most of us were led to believe that the bill was dead for this session, word has leaked out that bankers have been working quietly with members of the House Banking Committee. The reported strategy is for the committee to accept all the rectifying amendments, report the bill out about the middle of July, and get it passed. In conference, where bankers' friends would predominate, the remedial amendments would be dropped and the bankers' bill would prevail.

There are a number of objections to the bill. The gimmick to open a loophole in the usury law would allow national banks to buy or discount consumer loan paper wherever this is legal under the State law. National banks could buy conditional sales contracts which are loaded with high interest. They would make their loans through all kinds of dealers, rather than directly to the consumer.

Today national banks serve as a yardstick. Other loan firms which are not subject to the Federal usury law must meet the competition of the national banks. S. 1451 would destroy this yardstick. Interest rates could skyrocket. Consumer purchasing power would be cut.

The Supreme Court of Kansas recently granted an injunction against the Nation's largest credit company which was charged with violating the usury law of the State. It was found the company was charging 72 percent per year for financing automobiles—making more profit than both the manufacturer and the dealer combined. State legislatures are influenced by Federal law. If the usury law is weakened, some States may follow suit. Not all States have usury laws now.

Other objections to the bill: Minority stockholders in national banks would lose their voting power through elimination of cumulative voting requirements. Banks could still operate branches but Federal Savings and Loan Associations could not. Single loan ceilings for National banks would be raised to dangerously high levels.

Friends in the House have a number of good amendments ready to incorporate in the bill. It is possible, however, that these (1) may not be incorporated or (2) may be cut out in conference. Rather than risk passage of a bad bill, it may be wise to write your Congressman to the effect that no bill is better than a bad one. An effort to write better legislation under more favorable circumstances should be made later.

The fact that the bankers' bill is a bad one needs wide publicity. If consumers strongly show their opposition, the bill will not pass.

[From the Washington Post and Times Herald, July 5, 1958]

BILL CALLED PERIL TO USURY LAW

(By Bernard D. Nossiter)

A bill that could crack legal barriers against excessive interest charges on installment loans has touched off a backstage congressional furor.

At issue is the Financial Institutions Act, a lengthy and technical reworking of banking laws which passed the Senate in March 1957.

Its chief foe is a perennial banker's gadfly, Representative WRIGHT PATMAN, Democrat of Texas. He has charged the measure is loaded with hidden booby traps that could cost consumers, small businessmen and farmers billions of dollars. To the despair of leading bankers and the bill's congressional backers, PATMAN, aided by Representative ABRAHAM J. MULTER, Democrat of New York, is forcing the House Banking Committee to examine the 252-page measure line by line in drawn-out executive sessions.

The bill's self-styled patron is Senator A. WILLIS ROBERTSON, Democrat of Virginia. Without naming PATMAN, he has accused critics of misrepresentation. He recently denied the bill is an invitation to usury because, "What kind of people do they think are in the banking business."

PASSED BY SENATE

He successfully piloted the bill through the Senate, describing it as a device to remove obsolete provisions from the statutes and to add new authority where needed to meet modern-day conditions.

At the floor debate, he continued: "What simplifies the matter for Members of the Senate is the fact that the greater part of the bill is existing law or is to repeal obsolete provisions."

Lately, he termed relatively minor a previously undiscussed section that PATMAN calls the "Ebenezer Scrooge amendment." To complaints that it opens the way for exorbitant interest rates, on consumer credit, ROBERTSON answered: "Will most of the people who buy automobiles be nitwits or morons? Do we have to assume a guardianship over those who buy on the installment plan?"

The bill was apparently languishing in the House Banking Committee until early in May. Then, Senator JOHN BRICKER, Republican of Ohio, urged Ohio bankers to redouble your efforts to bring it out and denounced a filibuster by a small antibusiness minority.

Chairman BRENT SPENCE, Democrat, Kentucky, of the House committee, a bill supporter, complained it had been filibustered and filibustered by dilatory tactics of offering amendments and amendments in the closed, markup sessions. With a heavy calendar of work before his group, he said it will be difficult to get the bill reported out this year. In which case, it would have to start all over again through both Houses next year.

PATMAN ADMITS TACTICS

PATMAN readily concedes his delaying tactics. He said it sailed through the Senate under "false colors" disguised as a simple recodification bill.

Biggest fight is over one sentence in section 35(a) which deals with usury or exorbitant interest. The law now limits national banks—those chartered by the Comptroller of the Currency—to a maximum 7 percent interest charge on loans unless the State in which they are located allows State-chartered banks more. A never-reversed 1881 court decision held that the 7 percent limit also applies to debt paper that national banks buy from other lenders—the process called discounting—if the States freed such discounted obligations from their usury laws.

But the modern growth of installment credit led to the invention of a new kind of debt instrument—the conditional sales contract. Most consumer credit and much small business equipment buying is financed this way. Unlike a simple loan with goods as security, the lender keeps title to the automobile, machinery, and other commodities until the last payment is made. These conditional sales contracts are not subject to usury laws in many States. National banks bought this paper without worrying about the interest rate charged.

APPEALS COURT RULING

In 1955, however, a court of appeals ruled that, except in special cases, these contracts were loans. If the State did not so regard them, the decision continued, no national bank could touch any that charged more than 7 percent.

A year later, ROBERTSON, as acting chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, began shaping his bill. Federal banking agencies and a 27-man citizens committee that included 20 bankers helped him.

The disputed 35 (a) sentence that emerged says any loan or discount that isn't regarded as a loan by a State is freed from the Federal usury law.

This week, ROBERTSON said the sentence overturns the 1881 ruling and the unexpected and strained 1955 holding. He argued that it merely provides parity for National banks with State banks. If the latter can discount conditional sales contracts or other debts without looking at interest rates he contended that it was unfair to bar national banks from handling the paper.

PATMAN argued that it would permit national banks to finance indirectly usurious loans that they are prohibited from financing directly.

ARGUMENTS CONTINUE

ROBERTSON aids insist the provision makes little difference to borrowers. In States that don't regulate consumer credit, a finance company can charge what it can get; if it needs capital, it can discount this paper at a State bank, anyway.

But Patman's technicians argue that since national banks have about half of the banking system's assets, the 1955 ruling cuts off a major source of refinancing for overcharged consumer credit.

Moreover, adoption of 35(a), it is claimed, will discourage States from following the lead of those who have set limits on installment charges. Finally, PATMAN has pointed to another section of the Robertson bill that prohibits State banking examiners from inspecting national banks. This, he has argued, will weaken State installment credit laws because the Comptroller's Federal examiners have other concerns than compliance with State rules.

An Indiana banking official, George O. Nichols, vice chairman of the State's department of financial institutions, testified before the House committee that his inspection of both State and National banks each year has turned back many thousands of dollars to overcharged installment buyers.

But ROBERTSON retorts that the Comptroller's check will be a safeguard and that anyway federally chartered banks need not submit to State examination under existing law.

No one is sure how much or what rates are involved in the hassle. In May, outstanding consumer installment credit was almost $33 billion, however. And a Federal Reserve Board study of auto financing in 1955 showed that 96 percent of the paper held by commercial banks carried a 7-percent or higher interest charge. However, in one State that does limit conditional sales contract, the top rate allowed is 36 percent.

The bill has also set off these squabbles:

PATMAN contends that the banker advisory committee wrote the bill "in the back room," and a parallel chamber of commerce banking group polished it in the "back, back room." ROBERTSON answers that the advisers made only suggestions, and that he and Banking Committee counsel, Donald L. Rogers, drafted the language. The Senator is proud of the patriotic citizens who collaborated with him. He introduced them at one committee session this way: "I do not remember any hearing in which as much concentrated wealth was represented * * * the bankers alone represent over $250 billion of liquid assets. It necessarily follows that a lot of people in this country ought to be interested in their views."

PATMAN objects to a section exempting national bank examinations from court subpenas or inquiry by anybody except congressional committees without the comptroller's assent. He charges this will make more difficult discovery of fraud or improper use of funds. ROBERTSON and company answer that banks are subject to regular Federal examination by several agencies, that publication of an examiner's finding on a particular loan could unfairly hurt a shaky borrower.

Are 77 banks now selling insurance illegally? A 1916 law permitted banks in towns under 5,000 to sell policies. PATMAN says it was repealed in 1918, although the United States Code did not say so until 1952. But the House Banking Committee clerk, Robert L. Cardon, has written a memorandum to demonstrate that the "repeal" resulted because the 1916 law put some quotation marks in the wrong place, that Congress never intended to repeal the authority and the 1918 law dealt with entirely different matters.

After several weeks of laborious executive sessions, the House committee has removed several sections that drew PATMAN'S fire. But he fears that if the committee reports out any bill, even a good one, the House will adopt it. In the conference committee that will follow to resolve differences between the two versions, he is afraid he will be swamped and that the offensive sections will be restored. ROBERTSON recently told a reporter that PATMAN may not be so wrong at least about this.

STATEMENT OF REPRESENTATIVE EMANUEL CELLER, CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, BEFORE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, ON S. 1451 AND H.R. 7026, EXISTING LAW DOES NOT AUTHORIZE NATIONAL BANKS TO SELL INSURANCE

Mr. Chairman, section 45 of title I of S. 1451 would authorize national banks located in communities of fewer than 5,000 inhabitants to act as insurance agents and real estate brokers. Doubting the wisdom of a provision by which national banks would be permitted to commingle the business of banking with that of insurance and real estate brokerage, I consulted Senate Report No. 121, which accompanies the bill. Concerning section 45, Senate Report No. 121 makes the sole assertion:

"This section," it says, "continued the provisions of title 12, United States Code, section 92, governing the insurance agent and real estate broker activities of national banks in communities of not more than 5,000 inhabitants" (p. 19).

In other words, the Senate report presents section 45 as a mere continuation or codification of existing law. Curious as to the precise language of relevant existing law, I consulted title 12 of the current 1952 edition of the United States Code. Section 92 is not to be found in this title of the code. Instead, there is a compiler's note stating that the provisions of section 92, which had been added in 1916, were omitted in certain amendments made in 1918, and that therefore this section had been omitted from the code.

I have studied the matter further, and it now appears that what was presented to Congress as a mere continuation or codification amounts, in reality, to a proposal to revive a former, but long dead provision in favor of national banks located in small communities; that this provision was first enacted in 1916; was repealed in 1918, and has never thereafter been reenacted. For 40 years, in other words, to and including the present moment, there has been no such provision in the law.

I shall outline the basis for this conclusion:

Authority to national banks in small communities to act as insurance agents and real estate brokers was provided for the first and only time by Public Law 270 of the 64th Congress (39 Stat. 752, 3), approved September 7, 1916. The passage which created this privilege is part of a lengthy amendment to section 5202 of the Revised Statutes, set out within quotation marks following the words:

"Section 5202 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows."

As so amended, R.S. 5202 contained the following four major provisions:

(a) It prohibited national banks from incurring indebtedness in excess of capital stock paid in and remaining undiminished by losses, with five enumerated exceptions;

(b) It subjected transactions of Federal Reserve Banks in bills receivable to regulation by the Federal Reserve Board;

(c) It granted national banks in small communities authority to act as insurance agents and real estate brokers, the provision which is the subject of this discussion; and

(d) It provided for acceptance by member banks of drafts and bills of exchange drawn on them.

The authority to act as insurance agents and real estate brokers which is now the subject of section 45 of S. 1451 thus became and was a part of section 5202 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

So much for the enactment of the authority of national banks to act as insurance agents and brokers. The repeal of this authority is found in Public Law 121 of the 65th Congress (40 Stat. 506, 512), approved April 5, 1918. Section 20 of that enactment begins with the words:

"Section 5202 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows."

There follows, within quotation marks, that provision of the 1916 enactment, above referred to, which prohibits national banks from incurring indebtedness in excess of capital stock paid in, with a sixth exception added to the previously existing five. However, the three other major provisions of section 5202, as amended by the 1916 enactment, are omitted altogether, namely those:

(a) Subjecting transactions of Federal Reserve Banks in bills receivable to regulation;

(b) Granting national banks in small communities authority to act as insurance agents and real estate brokers; and

(c) Providing for acceptance by member banks of drafts and bills of exchange drawn on them.

There can be no question but that the effect of the 1918 enactment, in omitting from section 5202 of the Revised Statutes, as thereby amended, the grant of authority to national banks in small communities to act as insurance agents and real estate brokers, was to repeal that grant totally. The authority never existed outside of section 5202. Its omission from amended section 5202 left it without life, for it is well established that an amendment using the words "so as to read as follows" followed by matter within quotation marks has the effect of substituting the matter so included within quotes for the entire text of the provision which is the subject of the amendment.[1]

I would not close without acknowledging some of the arguments I am informed have been made to sustain the position that the provision in question somehow survived repeal and is still on the books.

First, it is contended that Congress, in 1916, did not intend to include the second, third, and fourth major provisions referred to above as amendments to section 5202, but meant them as independent enactments. This argument requires the further contention that the inclusion of those provisions within the same quotation marks as included the first such provision was in error. It is urged that what was really intended was to make these three provisions amendments to section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act of 1913 (Public Law 43, 63d Cong., 2d sess., 38 Stat. 263) rather than amendments to section 5202. Support for this contention is sought in the practice of the Comptroller of the Currency in administratively treating the four major provisions of the 1916 enactment as parts 9, 10, 11, and 12 of section 13. Since the grant of authority under discussion was never part of section 5202, the argument continues, it was not repealed, nor were the other two major segments, when Congress, in 1918, added a sixth exception to the rule against incurring excessive indebtedness. It is also asserted that the managers of the 1918 act made no reference to the repeal of the substantive provisions under consideration in debating that act or in any committee report.

Further, the 1926, 1934, 1940, and 1946 editions of the United States Code continued to carry the provisions granting national banks in small communities authority for insurance and real estate activities, and only the 1952 edition of the code omitted it. It is also asserted that the 1952 edition of the code carried (as section 361 of title 12) the provision relating to dealings in bills receivable. This inclusion was inadvertent and is scheduled for deletion in the next edition.

Finally, I understand that the Comptroller of the Currency has regulations under presently nonexistent section 92 of title 12, and is enforcing them.

Mr. Chairman, I will not enter into dispute concerning the validity of any of the foregoing arguments. Some propositions are too clear for cavil. An unambiguous enactment is the law. The United States Code is prima facie evidence of what the law is. The various contentions that have been made, to the effect that the grant of authority to national banks in small communities to engage in tangential businesses was never repealed, all run afoul of these unassailable principles. More than mere doubt and conjecture are required to overcome the force of law, or to overcome the official prima facie statement of it.

Inasmuch as the authority under discussion was unambiguously repealed, candor requires that the proposal of section 45 be presented and fully considered on its merits, and not passed over a mere continuation or codification of existing law.

HOUSING AND URBAN RENEWAL BILL

Mr. BOWLES. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced today a housing and urban renewal bill designed to meet the increasingly critical needs that have developed in both metropolitan and rural areas across the country.

This bill represents the dedicated, conscientious, and detailed efforts of a number of public organizations and countless individuals to determine how we must proceed if our local governments in the United States are to remain economically and socially healthy, and how far American communities themselves are prepared to go in meeting their share of the costs.

SPONSORING GROUPS

The United States Conference of Mayors, the American Municipal Association, the National Housing Conference, and the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials have all joined in vigorous support of the objectives of this bill. All have participated in its drafting.

These groups represent mayors from all the largest cities in the country, public officials from more than 13,000 municipalities, professionals from the fields of housing and planning, and spokesmen for leading business, religious, labor, and civic organizations.

These people, Mr. Speaker, are not dreamers; they are hardheaded realists who have been living day to day with the challenge created by our sprawling, ill-planned cities, and by inadequate housing for one-third of the Nation.

Undoubtedly this bill can and should be further refined. Thorough hearings will be needed to discover flaws where they may exist. I am confident that Congress will enact an adequate bill without sacrificing any of the essentials.

Surely the challenge itself cannot be avoided, postponed or swept under the rug. We can no longer ignore our obligation to wipe out slum areas, to restore sagging industrial centers, to provide more low-rent housing for a wider range of low-income families, to aid displaced families to relocate, and to meet the special housing needs of our farm, veteran, college and elderly groups.

CONNECTICUT RENEWAL PROJECTS

In my own State of Connecticut, cities like New London, Middletown, Groton, Norwich, Willimantic, Putnam, Danielson, and several smaller towns, are in various stages of urban planning. Some already have Federal funds reserved for urban renewal projects which will offer their citizens a brighter and more profitable future.

Middletown, for example, has had its application approved and has $1,883,653 reserved in Federal funds. Norwich has $281,600 reserved. Also included are Putnam, with $2,621,398, and Killingly with $134,653.

At present, however, funds to carry forward existing plans and to finance new ones are exhausted. Unless effective legislation is passed by Congress in this session, and approved by the President, these and countless other urban renewal programs will grind to a stop.

Some communities will not need money immediately. Indeed the urban renewal expenditures which I propose would not appear in the actual budget for 3 to 5 years. Yet in order to make plans for these projects, municipalities must be assured how much money will be forthcoming.

NEW HAVEN PROGRESS

Mr. Speaker, in my own State, New Haven, under the unflagging effort of its mayor, Richard C. Lee, has shown the kind of exciting urban renewal progress that is possible with vigorous local support. The New Haven story can be repeated across the length and breadth of the land.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot afford further delay. We cannot, because in this day and age, millions of people in this country have a right to expect something more than a slum existence. Merchants and businessmen have a right to earn their living in a city that offers expanding opportunities for trade and development.

We cannot afford it because every day people all over the world read and hear about democracy in the United States. And they ask two questions: Will it work politically? Will it work economically? This legislation will help us answer affirmatively to both.

PROVISIONS TO ENCOURAGE HOME BUILDING

First. The bill liberalizes the present relocation housing program by increasing the maximum amount of an insurable mortgage on a single family house from $9,000 to $10,000 in normal cost areas and from $10,000 to $12,000 in high cost areas. It further permits the construction of such housing in the suburbs as well as within the community for which the relocation housing has been certified.

Second. It facilitates trade-in financing by making builders and realtors eligible for mortgage insurance on units held by them for sale.

Third. It increases cost limitation on the maximum mortgage amount for many rental housing projects and increases the cost limitation per room and per unit to bring such limitations more in line with present building costs.

Fourth. It provides for liberalization of the cooperative housing program, by increasing the maximum insurable amount of the permissive loan and by providing for broader participation on the part of nonveteran families.

Fifth. It provides for an increase in the maximum amounts of the FHA—Federal Housing Administration—insured mortgages covering one- or two-family residences from $20,000 to $27,500, and provides for moderate reductions in the required downpayments on houses in the middle priced range.

Sixth. It establishes a program of mortgage insurance to encourage more rental housing for elderly persons. At least 50 percent of the units constructed under this section in a project would be specifically designed for elderly persons, who could be given preference in renting a unit in the project. The 50-percent requirement was included to assure that such projects will provide housing for a normal cross section of families.

Seventh. It increases the maximum dollar limitation on single-family dwelling mortgage amounts which FNMA—Federal National Mortgage Association—can purchase from $15,000 to $18,000. It also increases the special assistance authorization—all of which have been exhausted—for advance commitments to purchase FHA and GI mortgages of $13,500 or less.

PROVISIONS TO ENCOURAGE THE REBUILDING OF OUR CITIES

First. The bill directs the HHFA—Housing and Home Finance Agency—Administrator to encourage the creation of State agencies to assist smaller communities in initiating and carrying out urban renewal programs.

Second. It encourages local public agencies to acquire and clear slum housing in the first stages of project planning and to expedite the program's progress.

Third. It increases capital grant authorizations for municipalities and expands the program 10 years. Where the annual amount available proves inadequate for any given year, the administrator may borrow funds from those assigned to future years in order to speed up the national effort.

Fourth. It will discourage the imposition of any rationing procedure on the allocation of capital grant funds by the HHFA. Thus communities filing applications for projects which in all respects meet the general requirements of the law can be confident that the Administrator cannot arbitrarily require the local public agency to scale back or cut back on the project as a condition to being given a capital grant reservation.

Fifth. It sets up a grant program to help local governments undertake broad scale analysis of their slum and blight problems through community renewal programs.

Sixth. The proposed measure provides an increase of relocation payments to displaced families and business concerns, increasing the amounts to the families from $100 to $200 and in the case of displaced businesses, $2,500 to $3,500.

Seventh. It provides for an increase in the amount of program resources which can be devoted to nonresidential redevelopment from 10 to 25 percent. It amends the existing language to make it possible for areas to be redeveloped where there is no residential use. Present law requires at least 20 percent of the project area be devoted to residential use.

Eighth. It helps to make the public housing program more flexible and adjustable to local community needs. It authorizes the local housing agency to fix maximum income limitations for admission and continued occupancy, and to establish its own rent levels. The bill also encourages the Public Housing Administration to promote where appropriate, the acquisition, repair, and rehabilitation of existing dwellings for use as low-rent housing.

Ninth. It acts to restore the original provisions of the Housing Act of 1949, as it relates to the number of low-rent housing units which can be under construction. Under the current levels of construction costs this would mean that with the remaining program, about 190,000 additional units could be constructed. Under the 1949 act, the basic rate for any one year could not exceed 135,000 units. It could be increased by the President up to 200,000 or reduced by him to 50,000 for any one year.

Tenth. As an alternate approach to the problem of providing adequate housing facilities for the aged, the bill contains provision for a direct loan program to nonprofit organizations to construct, rehabilitate, or convert structures to provide rental housing for elderly persons.

Eleventh. Of great importance to rural areas in Connecticut's Second District and throughout the United States, the bill provides for housing loans by the Secretary of Agriculture to (a) expand coverage for housing all types of farm labor, (b) investigate farm housing needs, (c) expands loan coverage to smaller farms, and (d) reduce the housing loan rate from 4 to 3 percent.

It also establishes a new program authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to insure loans for the purpose of providing housing to migratory farm labor.

The farm housing research program would also be extended for 3 more years, with an authorized appropriation of $100,000 a year.

Twelfth. Finally, the measure also increases the amount available to the college housing program, provides for loans for classroom buildings and other academic facilities. It also contains provisions related to needed improvements in the veterans housing programs.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

Mr. REUSS, for 10 minutes, today, and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. BAILEY, for 30 minutes, on Monday next, January 19, 1959.

Mr. ADDONIZIO (at the request of Mr. SANTANGELO), today, for 10 minutes.

Mr. FLOOD, for 1 hour, on February 16, on the subject Lithuanian Independence Day.

Mr. FLOOD, for 15 minutes, today.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Defense of the Small Tobacco Farmer of West Virginia

OF

HON. CLEVELAND M. BAILEY

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I desire to call the attention of my colleagues to the excellent presentation made by my colleague, KENNETH HECHLER, of West Virginia, before the Tobacco Division of the Agriculture Department on the controversial question of acreage allotments to burley tobacco growers of his State.

Mr. HECHLER's remarks, which appear under the caption "Defense of the Small Tobacco Farmer of West Virginia," are pertinent because they attribute the plight of the tobacco industry in the State as one of the contributing causes to West Virginia's overall sad economic situation.

Congressman HECHLER's remarks follow:

I represent the Fourth Congressional District of West Virginia, along the Ohio River. In this district live virtually all of the more than 4,000 tobacco farmers in our State. It is on their behalf that I am appearing before you today.

None of these West Virginia tobacco farmers own large, prosperous farms. Their farms aren't mechanized to any great extent. None of them surveys vast tracts of land from the shade of a veranda, with a mint julep in his hand.

Instead, these are, in the main, poor people. The smallness of their farms is matched only by the smallness of the tobacco quotas assigned to them. In fact, each farmer in my district grows an average of less than six-tenths of an acre each year under the present quota system.

With an average yield of 1,600 pounds an acre, at 60 cents a pound, this means that the average farmer in my district receives only about $576 a year from the growth and sale of tobacco.

This, I am sure, sounds trivial to you. You may be asking yourselves, "Why should we concern ourselves with a small group of farmers who produce only a small amount of tobacco?"

May I answer by pointing out that for a majority of these 4,000 farmers, tobacco is the only major cash-producing crop. For many of them, it is the one crop that brings any dollar income into their homes. For a large number of these people, it is the only way they have of making cash for themselves as they eke out a rustic, precarious living in the mountains of our State.

Considering these farm families, it is possible that the actions you agree upon here will determine directly whether or not upwards of 20,000 West Virginia citizens will have their pitifully low income slashed even further.

May I offer a corollary to this problem: Other sections of our Nation have recovered from the recent recession. West Virginia has not.

In the past 18 months, 45,856 persons have exhausted the unemployment benefits they merited under West Virginia's regular job-security program.

More than 300,000 persons in the State of West Virginia are subsisting on Federal surplus commodities. This constitutes more than 15 percent of the people in the State—the highest percentage of any State in the Union.

What this all means is that if these small tobacco farmers are not permitted to continue to make a small amount of cash income from their burley crop, they have no place to go to find new sources of cash income. I sincerely trust that no action will be taken by the Department of Agriculture that would add more of these hard-working people to the relief rolls. If they are driven to the cities in search of jobs, this will make the urban unemployment problem much more acute.

The economic fate of the tobacco farmer is so closely bound to the actions you take here, I am certain you will do nothing to damage his already hazardous position.

The West Virginia tobacco farmer has stood by passively and cooperatively while acreage controls have been drastically reduced. The number of acres harvested in our State has dropped from a high of about 19,000 acres in 1910 to 2,300 acres in 1958. This is the lowest figure since records of tobacco acreage were begun in 1866.

Even more recently, we can see how the production of burley in West Virginia has declined. In 1954 the poundage marketed at our warehouses in Huntington totaled 7,930,874 pounds. By 1957 this figure had dropped to 5,633,013.

Now this all has come about because of quota cutbacks. I have been informed by Charles E. Campbell, tobacco specialist with the West Virginia State department of agriculture, that West Virginia tobacco farmers have notably good records of support for the control program.

This means that although the Government was cutting back acreage in the only money crop many of these farmers grew, they still were willing, in a spirit of cooperation and good will, to accept these controls and, indeed, roll up an enviable record of compliance with the Government's orders.

Now it would be a gross distortion of the truth to say that these small West Virginia farmers are happy with these small quotas. I don't think we can expect them to be happy with quotas that limit their cash income to an average of less than $600 a year.

But I can say that these farmers are good people; they recognize and agree with the theory behind crop controls and adjustments. They realize that maintaining a good price for tobacco is essential, and they want the burley export market to remain strong.

If it is in the best national interest to keep quotas at their present levels, I am sure the West Virginia tobacco farmers will accept them. But any effort to cut quotas below their perilously low level will cause havoc and additional economic misery in the State.

This is the general viewpoint of tobacco farmers in my district regarding the present system of figuring acreage allotments.

Now may I pass to another phase of the problem.

I would like to comment for a few moments on a series of recommendations made to the Secretary of Agriculture by a group of representatives of growers, auction warehousemen and leaf exporters of burley tobacco. These recommendations were handed to Secretary Benson on November 17, 1958.

Recommendations concerning a return to the old parity formula—that is, parity as calculated prior to the Agriculture Act of 1948—receive our understanding. Also, we might add that we support these tobacco men in advocating acreage allotments for 1959 the same as those for 1958—since there seems little prospect for any increase in quotas.

I believe this is a sound proposal because the facts indicate that the surplus of burley tobacco is declining. I would like to point out that the production of burley tobacco has been below the level at which total stocks have been depleted for four consecutive years.

It is a third proposal put forward by these tobacco experts which disturbs me, and places me sharply at odds with the men who drafted these recommendations.

That would be the proposal which states "that the Department assign a task force to work with leaders representing various segments of tobacco production and trade, including college of agriculture personnel, in studying, developing, and preparing in legislative form an acreage-poundage control program for tobacco."

This recommendation, which would take tobacco off an acreage system and put it under a pounds-per-acre system, is a very serious mistake, in my opinion. It might prove harmful to the large tobacco farmer under certain circumstances. It would surely prove disastrous to the small farmer such as we have in West Virginia.

And why is this so?

For one thing, the regulation of pounds per acre is a difficult business at best. It is well known that annual rainfall—or lack of it—has a powerful influence on the weight and quality of tobacco yielded by any given field.

For a more important reason, however, I must assert again that this bill would hurt the small farmer.

The small farmer has a small tract of land to nurture and coddle. Because he is so severely limited by acreage, he devotes tender care to his tobacco plot, and often is rewarded with a heavy yield. The big tobacco farmer, who uses mass-production methods, consequently is willing to forego the higher yield in order to cut production and labor costs.

I am told that acreage limitations of something in the neighborhood of 1,600 to 1,800 pounds may be advised for the 1960 crop year. This would work a serious hardship on many West Virginia farmers, who by diligent work and unstinting effort obtain a yield of 2,300 to 2,500 pounds per acre on some of their pitifully meager tracts. Sometimes their output rises into the vicinity of 2,800 to 3,000 pounds.

Surely we are not going to reward these small farmers who obtain superior production by dint of long hours and unceasing care by altering the formula for calculating the amount they may produce, so that it will wipe out the fruits of their efforts.

It also can be argued that the small farmer deserves a better break than this because he must spend a longer time cultivating his crop, regardless of the methods and yield. It is estimated that in our West Virginia mountains, a minimum of 500 man-hours must be spent in cultivation of one acre. In Kentucky's bluegrass area, this figure drops to a comparatively low 300 hours. Thus, the extra hours put in by the hill-country farmer will go unrewarded if we make such an alteration in the quota-figuring formula.

The pound-acre formula is specifically designed to help the large, big-quota, mass-production farmer. The Secretary of Agriculture has argued that he wants to return agriculture to the free enterprise system. But can this be free enterprise, when a system is devised that takes money from the pockets of the man who is willing to spend long hours and devote tender care to his crop, and favors the man who operates on impersonal, businesslike lines?

You must agree that this is not free enterprise, as we understand it, in any sense. It is instead, I fear, a callous and heartless policy which builds a monument to massive, factory-type, mass-production farms upon the graves of small, marginal farms. This may seem to be efficiency, but it is a false efficiency if it is achieved by driving our small farmers into bankruptcy and starvation.

But, as I said, this program was evolved by tobacco men, not Federal officials.

However, it is significant that West Virginia's tobacco farmers were not even invited to the meeting at which these policies were adopted and endorsed.

I protest against the unfeeling and cruel attitude toward the little farmer, and I strongly urge that action be taken to protect this little man in the tobacco business, who apparently is being thrown to the wolves by his big brothers.

The West Virginia tobacco farmer is, in his way, as efficient as the big men in the field. Although West Virginia rates a rather low 18th in production, it rates 13th in yield per acre. And when we consider that tobacco is the State's fifth most important crop, the effect on the already troubled West Virginia economy can be appreciated.

So stringently do West Virginia burley farmers oppose this new formula that the State's department of agriculture has informed me that "this program, if adopted, could put the State out of the tobacco business."

I do not dispute the right of the big tobacco interests to present their case before you here today. I do not dispute that their share of the tobacco economy is larger than ours.

I ask you only to remember that any action you take here which is detrimental to the small tobacco farmer will be disastrous to 20,000 people in my home State. Therefore, I urge that you take no steps which would strike another blow at West Virginia's economy.

I do not want the famous old tobacco slogan "LSMFT" to come to mean "let's starve mountaineer farmers of tobacco."

Statehood for Hawaii

OF
HON. THADDEUS J. DULSKI
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. DULSKI. Mr. Speaker, the 86th Congress will have an opportunity to perform a significant act of justice, equity, and diplomacy this coming year by granting Hawaii's request for statehood.

As a matter of justice, Hawaii meets every historical standard we have required for the admission of new States. Hawaiians have been immersed in American traditions since 1820. They have demonstrated their devotion to the principles of democracy and to the American form of government in numerous ways, including the adoption of a constitution, in 1950, which has been commended as a model among such instruments.

In 1950, about 84 percent of the Hawaiians were native-born American citizens. The record of island troops in combat is impressive testimony to their loyalty. Gen. Mark Clark described the Hawaiian organization as "the most decorated unit in the entire military history of the United States." They served with equal valor in Korea.

That the majority of Hawaiians desire statehood is unquestionable. In 1940 they voted two to one for admission. In 1950 they approved the proposed State constitution by more than three to one.

Hawaii has first-class qualifications insofar as population and resources are concerned. It has more people than five of the present States—more than twice as many as Alaska. It has a well-developed, prosperous economy. Its citizens support a per capita tax burden considerably higher than the national average—larger, in fact, than in 33 States.

Hawaii richly merits statehood as a matter of equity as well as justice. Permanent political inferiority for American citizens in American Territories is simply too foreign to our ideals to be tolerated for long. Hawaii is the only incorporated Territory not yet welcomed into the Union. It has been petitioning for entrance since 1903. It has more people and a better developed economy than Alaska, our newest State. Both political parties have, in their platforms, approved Hawaiian statehood. Both President Eisenhower and former President Truman are for it. According to recent polls, the people of the United States are also for it by a ratio of more than 4½ to 1.

Finally, as an act of diplomacy, the admission of Hawaii would be of incalculable value. It would reverberate to our credit throughout the Far East. It would stand as an irrefutable proof that we really live by the principles of freedom and self-government we preach.

For these and many other reasons, I shall, in Congress, support passage of a Hawaiian statehood bill, which I am introducing today.

Proposal To Create a Pan American Parliamentary Association

OF
HON. VICTOR L. ANFUSO
OF NEW YORK
Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. ANFUSO. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a joint resolution expressing the sense of Congress that a Pan American Parliamentary Association—PAPA—should be established and that the United States be authorized to participate in the parliamentary conferences of such association.

All of us are well aware of the need to establish the greatest possible measure of understanding, harmonious relations and cooperation between the nations of the Western Hemisphere. Despite our good neighbor policy of the past quarter of a century, we know that much resentment and dissatisfaction persist in Latin America with U.S. policy toward those countries. Much of this dissatisfaction, of course, is stirred up in recent years by Communist elements who seek to create chaotic conditions among our neighbors to the south in the hope of gaining a foothold in this hemisphere.

The truth of the matter is that the Latin Americans desperately need our help in their efforts to attain a higher standard of living, in the exploration and exploitation of their natural resources, in economic growth, in expanding their agriculture and industry, and most especially in giving them an equal voice and the right of joint participation in the affairs of the Western Hemisphere and in the formulation of hemispheric policy.

Mr. Speaker, I was privileged to visit several Latin American countries during part of November and December 1958 in connection with my joint resolution on a Pan American Parliamentary Association. A full report of my visit there, as well as my views and findings, appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 9, 1959, pages 396–399.

It is high time that we look upon the peoples of Latin America not only as good neighbors but also as our best friends, which they are. Here we have a wonderful opportunity to regain some of the ground we have lost in other parts of the world, our moral position and our international prestige in the eyes of all nations, by stressing democratic principles and championing human rights. We can do so by offering the fullest measure of aid possible in order to achieve genuine friendship and inter-American support. We must prove to them that they stand to gain more by aligning themselves with the United States in order to protect their political freedom, their national independence, their economic gains, and the security of the whole hemisphere.

Fortunately, we are in a position to be of invaluable assistance to Latin America in many ways, particularly in helping them with their economic and development problems. The standard of living in those countries is extremely low. The average per capita income for all of Latin America is reported to be only $312 per year, compared with over $2,500 average in the United States. We must help them raise this standard of living through economic development and expansion, through increased production and consumption, and by increasing their purchasing power in domestic markets.

The more we help Latin America achieve these goals, the more we too shall benefit in the long run because of increased trade relations. Even now our trade with Latin America is greater than with any other area in the world. About one-third of our imports come from this area and about one-fourth of our exports go there. They sell to us half or more of such products as copper, coffee, raw wool, petroleum, and other products, while the value of our exports to them is approaching the $5 billion mark annually. Thus, by aiding them in their economic growth and in attaining a higher standard of living we can look forward to increased trade relations which should prove mutually advantageous.

What we need today is greater unity of purpose and a program of action which, I believe, should and could best be done on a people-to-people basis. It is for this very reason that I have proposed the establishment of a Pan American Parliamentary Association. My original resolution containing this proposal was offered to Congress in the summer of 1958 when the hectic period of adjournment was approaching and no time left for consideration. Nevertheless, within a few short weeks several of our leaders in Congress approved the idea in principle, it was similarly approved in principle by statesmen from 12 of the 20 Latin American countries, and the Department of State encouraged me to undertake my visit to several South American countries to discuss the proposal in detail with leading legislators there.

Following my visit I reached the conclusion that the idea proposed in my resolution is very timely and very urgent. Thereupon, I revised it and expanded it on the basis of my findings. The resolution proposes the establishment of a Pan American Parliamentary Association which is to meet annually, or as frequently as deemed necessary, in the different capitals of the Western Hemisphere. It is to be attended by the parliamentary representatives of the 21 American nations, since they are the direct representatives of the people having been elected by them as their spokesmen.

The purposes of the association are set forth in the resolution in the form of a 12-point program, which may be expanded upon whenever necessary. This program is as follows:

1. Create better understanding and foster closer personal contact among the elected legislators of the 21 American nations.
2. Stimulate greater public knowledge of, and making more effective, the Organization of the American States (OAS) and other agencies designed to promote the best interests of the American nations.
3. Expand the educational and scientific exchange programs.
4. Develop closer cultural relations throughout the hemisphere.
5. Improve trade relations and reduce the barriers to trade between countries in the Western Hemisphere.
6. Encourage large-scale tourism between the Americas.
7. Help to provide relief in times of disaster and other emergencies.
8. Seek means to dispose of surplus commodities of all sorts in the various countries in order to help their economies.
9. Help to raise the standard of living throughout Latin America.
10. Aid in the development of plans for the sound economic expansion of the Latin American countries, including U.S. public and private investment in their economic development.
11. Assist them in modernization of their agricultural methods.
12. Seek solutions to other problems of common concern to the countries of the Western Hemisphere.

My resolution further calls for U.S. participation in the Pan American Parliamentary Association and the appointment of 18 Members of Congress from both Houses and both political parties as the delegation of the United States to the conferences of the Association. The U.S. delegation is to submit a report to Congress each year on the activities and decisions of the Association.

I am convinced that if the elected representatives of the 21 American nations could meet in person to discuss pressing problems of mutual interest to the entire hemisphere, much could be achieved in the way of better understanding and harmonious relations. We must stop taking Latin America for granted. We must develop a positive and direct people-to-people approach in our relationship, treatment and dealings with our neighbors of the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. Speaker, I believe sincerely that my resolution is the key to such improved relations of the future, only we must bring that future closer—not some distant tomorrow, but today. I hope and trust that the idea to set up a Pan American Parliamentary Association, as proposed in my resolution, will soon become a reality. Let us be the first to pave the way.

Changing the Level of Imposing the Federal Tax on Gasoline

OF
HON. FRED SCHWENGEL
OF IOWA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. SCHWENGEL. Mr. Speaker, because I feel that all segments of small business in this country should be entitled to compete equitably with larger concerns, I have introduced H.R. 1343, which is designed to give the independent oil jobber and wholesaler the same break as the major oil company has with reference to the payment of the Federal tax on gasoline.

Under existing law the 3-cent Federal tax on gasoline is imposed at the time of sale by the producer. The producer is the refiner and, from the standpoint of volume, this really means the major oil companies. The word "producer," as defined by section 4082 of the Internal Revenue Code, includes "blenders" and "importers"; however, the volume of gasoline handled by these last two categories is relatively insignificant.

When the existing language of the code—as implemented by regulations—is translated into actual operation what it means is that the refiner or major oil company does not pay the Federal gasoline tax until up to 45 days after the time of sale, whether that sale be direct to a consumer, to a service station, or to a reseller, such as a jobber or wholesale distributor. It also means that the wholesale distributor who pays this tax at the time of purchase must not only permanently encumber approximately 20 percent of his inventory capital but, in addition, he must suffer tax losses due to evaporation and unavoidable spillage between the time of purchase and the time of delivery into the tank of the person to whom he sells. Neither of these burdens is imposed on the major oil company with whom this small, independent jobber must compete. It is estimated that the jobber's losses due to evaporation and unavoidable spillage amount to approximately 2 percent of the total volume of gasoline handled. A majority of the States imposing gasoline taxes recognize this inequity and allow the jobber varying percentages to compensate for these losses and some of them allow additional percentages for the handling of this tax burden, collection of the tax and the maintenance of the necessary records required by the collector. The Federal Government, however, has refused to either recognize or remedy this inequity.

My bill would change the definitions in the code in such a way that the independent jobber or wholesale distributor will be placed on the same basis as his major oil company competitor insofar as payment of the Federal gasoline tax is concerned. In my bill the jobber will pay the tax at the time he sells the gasoline rather than at the time of purchase. This will not only release badly needed capital which this category of small businessmen can use to improve their competitive position but, in addition, will relieve them from paying taxes on a product which has evaporated before the time of sale. This method of collection will not add any appreciable number of taxpayers to the rolls nor will it cause any loss of revenues to which the Government is equitably entitled. The bill, in brief, will at little or no cost to the Federal Government remove an existing inequity between a group of deserving small businessmen and the major integrated oil companies. I can conceive of no cheaper way to help some small businessmen than the passage of this legislation which I have introduced.

Broadening the Market for State and Local Bonds

OF
HON. THOMAS B. CURTIS
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am joining with Mr. HERLONG, my colleague on the Ways and Means Committee, in reintroducing a bill to broaden and relieve the market for State and local bonds. It will accomplish this by attracting investment companies, both regulated and unregulated, with their ever-increasing pools of investable funds, into the so-called municipal bond market. The incentive is that they may distribute or pass through the tax-exempt interest to their shareholders. At the present time the shareholders can invest in these bonds directly, but their corporate funds are effectively sealed off from the market by the fact that the interest becomes fully taxable when distributed to the shareholders.

This bill, except for minor refinements, is the same as H.R. 8702, which I introduced in the last session. Earlier in the last session I had introduced a very narrow passthrough bill, H.R. 4380, which applied only to regulated investments and only if they were 90 percent invested in tax-exempt bonds. Thereafter I became convinced that the narrow bill would extend negligible help to State and local governments. The present bill, however, will provide substantial, essential, and inexpensive assistance by really broadening the market for State and local bonds.

I want to emphasize that we are dealing with an existing exemption. This bill makes that exemption more effective from the point of view of the issuers of tax-exempt bonds. For that reason, the legislation is actively supported by leading national organizations in the municipal, county, and educational spheres, such as the American Municipal Association, National Association of County Officials, and National Education Association.

I have been advised by a prominent economist, Mr. Harry L. Severson, that leaders in the field of municipal finance have been worried for some time about the failure of markets for tax-exempt bonds to increase as rapidly as the supply, and that more recently the underwriters who handle these bonds have been discussing most seriously how and where the ever-increasing volume of new issues can be placed.

The legislation is unique in that it grants substantial assistance to local governments at little, if any, cost to the Federal Government. For this particular reason the legislation has the support of such diverse organizations as the American Farm Bureau Federation and the Council of State Chambers of Commerce.

State and local governments are finding it increasingly difficult to finance the growing volume of new capital improvements which are required to meet the needs of our expanding economy. Traditionally, large capital improvements, with the exception of highways, have been financed largely by borrowing. Since all of the costs of government are rising, there is little reason to hope that it will be feasible for these jurisdictions to meet a significantly greater proportion of the cost of capital improvements on a pay-as-you-go basis in the foreseeable future. The problems of financing capital improvements are made more difficult by the fact that new bond issues do not sell as well as they did a few years ago.

During World War II the supply of new tax-exempt bonds was not only relatively small but it was contracting at the very time that the demand for tax exemption was expanding due to raises in the income tax rates. The result, of course, was an extremely favorable market for State and local bonds. As the volume of new issues increased following the close of World War II, this situation has gradually changed until it is now the investors who enjoy most of the advantages at the bargaining table.

Under existing law the large and growing pools of investable funds held by investment companies are effectively excluded from the municipal bond market by the fact that tax-free interest is converted to taxable dividends when paid out to the shareholders of these companies. The need for a broader market is even more pressing now than when I first introduced this bill in July 1957. The volume of new offerings of these securities continues to mount. In 1957 a total of $7 billion came to the market which was practically the same as the previous high reached in 1954 when new toll road bonds were at the height of their popularity. In 1958 a new high of approximately $7.5 billion was reached in spite of the tight money conditions in the last two quarters of the year which undoubtedly caused the postponement of some new offerings.

What is more, there is every reason to expect that the volume of new offerings will continue to increase. Our growing economy will make it necessary for State and local governments to install many new capital improvements all of which must be financed. The widely quoted Severson projections show a steady increase in the volume of new offerings. According to these projections the volume in 1959 will be above $8 billion, increasing to more than $16 billion in 1968. This represents a lot of bonds to place with investors. The market is choking up periodically on the present volume and this gives us some idea of the task ahead in finding permanent outlets in 10 years for a flow more than twice as large as the greatest we have known.

The enactment of the passthrough would be of material assistance in placing these new issues. Investment companies not only hold large reservoirs of funds but they are growing steadily. An important advantage of the passthrough is the fact that it would open up these new markets without upsetting existing institutional arrangements. Furthermore, the cost to the Federal Treasury would be nominal. If the aspirations of the people for new improvements are to be realized, the volume of new issues must continue to grow. In many instances the failure to sell these bonds would result in the economic strangulation of the area.

Since these bonds will be tax free in any event under existing law to whoever buys them, no tax loss of any consequence is involved. Moreover, certain offsets must be considered. By holding down the rate of interest on new issues the total volume of interest on which tax is not paid is reduced. Also by reducing the cost of debt service the passthrough will tend to reduce or hold down local taxes which are a deduction in computing the income subject to tax.

State and local governments are requesting assistance in meeting their obligations. Their burdens are heavy. About this there can be no question. In considering these requests for assistance I think it well to give real consideration to those forms of aid which would enable these governments to help themselves, since this type of assistance is likely to be the most efficient. As governments are called upon to perform more services, efficiency becomes increasingly important, and I think we will all agree that keeping the controls close to home tends toward economy. It is easier to waste a dollar which comes from Washington than one which must be raised locally.

In closing, I feel that the broad pass-through should be enacted into law at this session of Congress since it would assist State and local governments in financing their capital improvements by reducing or at least holding down the cost of debt service, and debt service will become an increasingly important item for these governments. The control of the capital improvement programs would be left with local government. The Federal Government would not be concerned over what a local community did or did not undertake. Each locality could build its improvements as simply or as elaborately as it chooses.

The bill follows:

H.R. 2341

A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to the income tax treatment of dividends paid by certain corporations which hold obligations of States and local governments

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 103 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to interest on certain governmental obligations) is amended by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (e) and by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsections:

"(c) EXCLUSION FOR EXEMPT-INTEREST DIVIDENDS.—In the case of a taxpayer other than a corporation, there shall be excluded from gross income an amount equal to the aggregate amounts received during the taxable year as exempt-interest dividends. Any amount excludible from gross income under this subsection shall be treated for purposes of this subtitle as an item of interest excludible from gross income under subsection (a)(1).

"(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of subsection (c)—

"(1) EXEMPT-INTEREST DIVIDEND.—The term 'exempt-interest dividend' means any dividend or part thereof (other than a capital-gain dividend within the meaning of section 852(b)(3)(C)) paid by a corporation and designated by it as an exempt-interest dividend in a written notice mailed to its shareholders not later than 30 days after the close of its taxable year, if such corporation meets the requirements of paragraph (2) for such taxable year. If the aggregate amount so designated with respect to a taxable year of the corporation is greater than the amount of interest received or accrued by such corporation during such taxable year and excludible by it under subsection (a)(1), the portion of each distribution which shall be an exempt-interest dividend shall be only that proportion of the amount so designated as the amount of such interest so excludible bears to the aggregate amount so designated.

"(2) SECTION 103 CORPORATION.—A corporation shall be treated as meeting the requirements of this paragraph for a taxable year if—

"(A) such corporation is a domestic corporation other than a bank as defined in section 581 or an insurance company taxable under subchapter L,

"(B) such corporation files with its return for such taxable year an election to be a section 103 corporation or has made such election for a previous taxable year which began after the effective date of this Act,

"(C) at least 90 percent of its gross income is derived from dividends, interest, and gains from the sale or other disposition of stock or other securities (and for purposes of this subparagraph and subparagraph (D), the terms 'gross income' and 'interest' include interest excludible under subsection (a)(1), and

"(D) less than 30 percent of its gross income is derived from the sale or other disposition of stock or other securities held for less than 3 months."

SEC. 2. Section 265 of such Code (dealing with nonallowance of deduction for expenses and interest relating to tax-exempt income) is amended as follows:

(a) In paragraph (1) by deleting the period at the end thereof and substituting the following: ", or any amount otherwise allowable as a deduction which is allocable to interest received and distributed as an exempt-interest dividend by a corporation meeting the requirements of section 103(d)."

(b) By adding at the end of the section the following new paragraph:

"(3) INTEREST RELATED TO EXEMPT-INTEREST DIVIDENDS.—Interest, on indebtedness incurred or continued after the effective date of this Act, to purchase or carry stock of any corporation, for any period during which such corporation meets the requirements of section 103(d)(2)."

SEC. 3. The amendments made by this Act shall apply only with respect to distributions by corporations with respect to taxable years of such corporations which begin after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Hon. Davis Elkins

OF
HON. PHILIP J. PHILBIN
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, it was with deepest sorrow that I learned of the recent passing of the esteemed and beloved former distinguished Senator of the great State of West Virginia, the Honorable Davis Elkins.

Illustrious scion and great leader of a family which for more than 75 years has been a prominent, vital force in the upbuilding and development of his great State, Senator Elkins leaves a precious legacy of devoted public service and constructive business leadership.

Educated at Lawrenceville, Andover, and Harvard College, Davis Elkins early enlisted in the Spanish-American War as a volunteer with Company E of the 1st West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and served with great distinction with that unit throughout that history-making conflict. During World War I inspired by that high sense of patriotism and civic virtue for which he and his family were noted, the Senator again enlisted in the Army and served in Europe with the high rank of major and once more distinguished himself as a gallant fighter and a devoted son of Uncle Sam.

Of his outstanding service in this war, the late famous Percy D. Haughton, famous Harvard football coach of the era, himself an officer in the American Expeditionary Force, said of Senator Elkins: "Dave Elkins was a great soldier and a great human being, respected and loved by all."

Evidently the people of his home State felt the same way about his patriotic contributions, high character and ability since, while he was still on the European battlefront, they elected him to the U.S. Senate in November 1918.

Much could be spoken of his fine service in the Senate. He early won the high regard of his colleagues and served his constituents, the State, and the Nation with unquestioned integrity, outstanding fidelity, and great ability during his term.

He did not run for reelection. His large and varied business interests, civic and family responsibilities which he had long unselfishly sacrificed to serve his country, demanded his consideration and attention and he reluctantly retired to private life.

Senator Elkins' warm friend of Senate days, President Warren G. Harding, greatly honored him by offering him an important Cabinet post, but his many business affairs and domestic duties enjoined him from acceptance, notwithstanding the persistent urgings of the President and his many friends and advisers. As the Senator put it himself: "I am grateful for the honor and wish it were possible for me to serve. But I must give some attention now to my business and my family."

Senator Elkins' family life was typically American and fabulously happy. In 1926, he married the charming, talented, and gracious Mary Regan of Washington, a young lady noted for her beauty, keen wit, and popularity, who bore him three lovely children, Katherine, now Mrs. Charles J. Kelly of New York City, Maureen, now Mrs. A. Thomas Zirpolo of Cleveland, Ohio, and Davis Elkins, Jr., now of Elkins, W. Va.

The Elkins family life was also truly ideal and brought great joy and great pride to the distinguished Senator. Very many friends of official Washington, the Nation, and even the world, the famous and the unsung, drawn from every walk of life, moved from time to time in and out of the noted Elkins home where hospitality, graciousness, love, generosity, kindness, and a strong Christian faith always abided.

I can speak with intimate personal knowledge of this lovely Elkins family because it was frequently my privilege and pleasure to visit them in their home. Never have I known more generous hosts; never have I experienced more gracious hospitality; never have I seen a more beautiful family or a more wholesome, interesting, inspiring home environment.

The great and the humble passed through the doors of that inspiring home. It was a salon, in the very best sense, of fine culture, enlightenment and gayety. Above all, it was a home which exemplified the finest qualities of parenthood and the most appealing attributes of filial love and devotion. The home of Davis and Mary Elkins was a home to remember, as those who have ever visited it will gratefully testify.

The Elkins children were brought up with scrupulous, yet loving vigilance, care, and affection and they have lived up to high early promise. The girls are happily married, are blessed with beautiful children; the boy is rapidly making his way in the business world. Together, they brought great joy to their devoted dad and granddad and to their loving mother and grandmother—a family of which anyone could be proud—American to the core, that can "walk with kings nor lose the common touch," that shines out like a bright star in the firmament of modern life in our great Republic.

Davis Elkins was a man of rectitude and high honor, a two fisted American who up to the time of his disability attended prize fights, wrestling matches, and athletic contests. Born to the manor, so to speak, he was plain in speech, democratic in manner, kind of heart, generous of impulse.

He was a hard hitter, blunt spoken against injustice, sham, and quackery, firm in his convictions, rugged of character, stern in his sense of duty. Essentially, he was a kind and generous soul, deep in his knowledge of humanity, keenly aware of its problems, eager to do his part whether by bountiful private philanthropy or public action to lighten the burden and better the lot of all those unable to help themselves.

His loyalties and affections knew no narrow bounds of party, race, creed, or class. He was a friend to man, a public servant of whom any nation could be proud; a husband and father of whom any family could be eternally grateful, as I know his devoted family is.

In the poignant sorrow of their bereavement, I extend to Mrs. Elkins and to each and every one of them the most heartfelt sympathy of my family and myself. May the good Lord bring them strength and courage in their dark hour of sadness and travail. May they find "that peace of God, which passeth all understanding."

An able honest man, a noble statesman, and a great American, Davis Elkins, has gone to his heavenly reward. His State, the Nation, the people and his many friends join his bereaved family in mourning his lamented passing. May God bless and keep him.

Inspection of Alcatraz and Terminal Island Prisons

OF
HON. EDWIN E. WILLIS OF LOUISIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, having drafted legislation affecting Federal prisons in the 85th Congress, members of the House Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee No. 3, of which I am chairman, visited two Federal institutions during the latter part of August 1958, to study at firsthand the problems associated with the confinement of Federal offenders. Representatives WILLIAM M. TUCK, ROLAND V. LIBONATI, and I, accompanied by Mr. Cyril F. Brickfield, counsel to the committee, inspected the Federal correctional institution, Terminal Island, Calif., on August 25, 1958, and the U.S. penitentiary, Alcatraz, Calif., on August 28, 1958.

TERMINAL ISLAND

Terminal Island is headed by Warden Preston G. Smith and is the only Federal institution in which both men and women prisoners are confined. Terminal Island is a medium security institution located in the heart of Los Angeles Harbor on a small peninsula known as Reservation Point. On the day of our visit the total prison population was 845, with 688 men and 157 women. It has a staff of 163 persons, 129 of whom are assigned to the men's prison and 34 to the women's division. The ratio of prisoners to employees is quite excessive, especially when it is remembered that the employee staff must be spread out over a 24-hour day, 7 days a week.

Terminal Island receives men prisoners, with sentences of 5 years or less, and women prisoners, regardless of length of sentence, from the area west of the Rockies, Alaska, and Hawaii.

The largest offense group is made up of prisoners convicted of narcotic law violations. Other offenses represented most numerously in the population are forgery, car theft, and illegal entry into the United States. The average length of sentence for the men is about 39 months and for the women about 50 months. However, the committee noted the length of sentences varied over a wide range even in virtually identical car theft or forgery cases. Public Law 85–752, enacted in August 1958 by the 85th Congress, was drafted in subcommittee No. 3 to minimize such disparities, and the members of the subcommittee are hopeful that the prevalence of the noted disparities will dwindle as the new law becomes more commonly used by the Federal courts.

The subcommittee visited the recently overhauled admission-orientation unit where the men are housed during their first month in the institution. This is a clean, well-lighted and well-ventilated area consisting of a dormitory with a capacity of 46 beds, 8 individual cells, a combination day-lecture room and 2 small interview rooms. It was explained that the capacity of this unit would be increased shortly by the addition of double-deck beds, required because the population of this unit frequently exceeds the present 54-man capacity.

During the month that the men spend in this unit they are given a program of orientation geared to help them adjust to the routine of the months and years ahead and to encourage them to make the best possible use of their time in prison. A good many of the men begin various types of study courses while they are still in this unit.

At the end of their first month the men appear before the classification committee, composed of the warden, associate warden, classification and parole chief, educational supervisor, social worker, chief medical officer, and chaplain. This committee advises the inmate on the type of program considered best suited to his needs and assigns him to living quarters, work program and custody classification. For those who test below fifth-grade level one-half day school attendance is compulsory. All other school work is voluntary but the committee encourages attendance at evening classes on this basis. The school is staffed by two full-time staff instructors, two part-time instructors from the local school system and a number of inmate teachers. The program is accredited by the Los Angeles school system and certificates and diplomas are awarded for attainment of elementary or high-school graduation.

An active vocational training program and on-the-job training is carried on in the various shops, powerplant and culinary department. A concerted effort is made to install good work habits, to promote a high standard of personal appearance, to maintain excellent sanitation in living quarters and places of employment, and to discourage vulgar and profane speech.

The committee was pleased to note that Terminal Island has two full-time chaplains. These are young and vigorous men who appear to be keenly interested in their work. The Catholic chaplain speaks Spanish fluently and acts as interpreter for the classification committee in dealing with the considerable number of Mexican inmates who speak and understand very little English.

The medical staff is composed of two doctors, a dentist, and four male nurses for the men's division and two female nurses for the women's division. They are supplemented by part-time consultants in the various specialties form the local community, available on an as-needed basis.

The subcommittee visited the institution's library, and the hobby shop where men can spend their leisure hours working upon articles of handicraft. Television sets were observed in some of the housing units and Warden Smith explained that these sets were rotated weekly among the several units on an incentive basis. Each group is anxious to have the benefit of television and competition for these sets is quite keen. One of the results of this system was seen in the extreme orderliness and sanitation in the living quarters. These sets, incidentally, were acquired partly through donation and partly through purchase from commissary profits. No appropriated funds were expended for this purpose.

The work program at Terminal Island poses some unusual problems because of the site, the dual nature of operations and the restricted area of the reservation which precludes the farming operations normally carried on at a penal institution. To offset the lack of a farm to some extent the institution has developed with neighboring government agencies working arrangements which permit the use of labor details at those installations for grounds maintenance, shop operations, and various similar services. Approximately 50 inmates are assigned to details of this type at the Coast Guard station and immigration and naturalization offices just across the street from the institution and at Fort MacArthur in San Pedro.

On industrial activity, furniture refinishing, is now operated at the prison and employs 40 to 45 prisoners. Construction of a new building to accommodate additional industrial activities is under way. It is planned to use this new space for metals industry fabricating steel shelving, lockers, and various small metals products. With institutional maintenance requirements, the services performed for other agencies and the expanding industrial program, sufficient employment to keep approximately 700 men usefully occupied will eventually be furnished.

Keeping the women inmates usefully employed is more of a problem and an industrial activity for them is being developed. Meanwhile job training is being afforded by such activities as cooking and baking, sewing, landscape gardening, cosmetology, and various other lines.

Terminal Island uses the standard ration allowance common to the entire prison service. Its food costs are higher than those of prisons having farms but notwithstanding this circumstance the food costs slightly less than 59 cents per inmate per day, including raw food, minor equipment, repairs, and the supplies involved in meal preparation and serving.

When the institution was returned to the Bureau of Prisons in 1955—it was used by the Navy from 1942 to 1950 and by the State of California from then until 1955—funds provided for its reactivation were sufficient to cover only a part of the total job required to restore the plant to minimum standards. The dining hall, kitchen, and dormitories are in need of overhauling. The hospital also requires a number of alterations and improvements, including adequate facilities for disturbed patients, modernization of the operating room, ceiling and floor treatment in the wards and corridors. A chapel is needed to replace the present makeshift space that is being used for religious services.

The women's unit is housed in a temporary type of barracks buildings which were constructed by the Navy during World War II. These buildings offer no security and constitute a fire hazard. Replacing the women's unit with buildings of fireproof construction, designed and equipped for their intended purpose, is perhaps the most urgent need at Terminal Island at this time.

CONCLUSION

On the whole, the Terminal Island institution seemed to be operated efficiently. Morale among both staff and inmates appeared to be at a high level. Sanitation and orderliness were especially noteworthy throughout the institution and the personal appearance of employees and inmates was excellent. It was the feeling of the members of the subcommittee that the Terminal Island staff is doing a good job in attempting to rehabilitate the men and women prisoners committed to their custody and that Federal funds are being expended economically and judiciously at this institution.

The problem of disparity of sentences will, it is clear, remain an important concern of our subcommittee. The new law, we hope, will reduce the prevalence of such disparities.

THE BAR ASSOCIATION

The members of the subcommittee also had an opportunity to attend several sessions of the American Bar Association which was meeting at the same time in Los Angeles.

We attended the dinner of the section on judicial administration and some of the meetings of the criminal law section dealing with the problem of representation of indigent clients and the administration of criminal law. A very interesting paper, entitled "What Price Justice?" was delivered by the Honorable Irving R. Kaufman, of the U.S. district court of New York. A number of suggested improvements in the administration of Federal law were discussed and these doubtless will be presented later to the full committee for consideration.

ALCATRAZ

On Thursday, August 28, 1958, the members and counsel of the subcommittee, accompanied by Representative T. ASHTON THOMPSON, visited the U.S. Penitentiary, Alcatraz, Calif. This institution, of course, is much different from Terminal Island and holds some of the most hardened criminals in America.

The 290 prisoners at Alcatraz were transferred there because they were too unmanageable even for such penitentiaries as Leavenworth and Atlanta, or because they were considered to be dangerous men whose escape would represent a distinct threat to the public safety. They were convicted, typically, for committing quite serious crimes and their sentences are long, averaging well in excess of 20 years, and including about 30 life terms. Alcatraz, in the opinion of Director James V. Bennett, must be considered one of the most difficult and complex prisons in the world to administer.

The subcommittee was transported from Fort Mason to the island by the penitentiary's boat. Upon arriving at the landing the committee observed a metal detector and stepped through it to test its operations. The manner in which the inspectoscope worked was explained by the operating officer and it was obvious to the subcommittee that this type of equipment is needed for a super-security institution where both prisoners on the inside and their friends on the outside are constantly trying to devise some means of outwitting the institution's security system. This was sharply dramatized in an episode several weeks after the committee's visit when two long-term prisoners made an abortive attempt to escape from the island by overpowering their supervisory officer and swimming away with sets of makeshift waterwings.

Warden Paul J. Madigan, a veteran of over 25 years in the prison service, is in charge of operations at Alcatraz. It is run on a surprisingly economical basis, considering the fact that everything that is used and consumed, including water, must be ferried to the island. Each prisoner, for example, is fed three meals a day for the relatively small sum of 59 cents. The subcommittee learned that the Government expends an average of $10.34 a day to keep one prisoner at Alcatraz, as contrasted to $3.05 at Leavenworth and the $4.58 average for the entire Federal prison system. Yet Alcatraz is performing a valuable service for the protection of the public.

The penitentiary has a rather ancient physical plant which presents a difficult maintenance problem. The climate surrounding the island is highly damaging to physical structures, and while at other prisons, inmates can be used to make repairs, the custodial requirements of Alcatraz permit very little use of inmates outside the security of the inner compound. Consequently, practically all repairs to the physical plant must be made by civilian tradesmen.

Upon entering the cellhouse the subcommittee observed that the visiting room was being renovated. The area for the outside visitors was partitioned off solidly from that for the prisoners. Speakers were being installed which would permit two or three visitors to converse at one time with a single inmate. The subcommittee was informed that each prisoner was allowed one visit of 90 minutes duration each month. However, of the population of 290, an average of only 15 inmates received visitors each month.

The subcommittee first visited the cellhouse which contains 2 inside cellblocks, each with 168 cells. The cellhouse was immaculate, and the cells themselves were sparely but comfortably equipped. The committee then went to the kitchen area where feeding arrangements were discussed and the menu for the current 10-day period was displayed. It was obvious that although the Alcatraz prisoners have few privileges and no commissary as in other Federal prisons, they were well fed. The kitchen and dining room looked exceptionally neat and clean.

At the prison hospital the committee talked to the chief medical officer and his medical technician. The subcommittee was informed that on the average about three prisoners a day were in hospital status, which would indicate that the health of the Alcatraz population was safeguarded well. The subcommittee inspected the operating room, the outpatient clinic, and the wards which were equipped with beds recently acquired from surplus property lists. Like the rest of the penitentiary, the hospital was neat and orderly. While Alcatraz does not have a full-time dentist, a local dentist visits Alcatraz one day each week, and, according to the warden, this time has been sufficient to provide adequate dental care for the men.

The subcommittee visited the treatment unit, where men who are in punitive status or who must be segregated from the rest of the population for various reasons are housed. At the time of the subcommittee's visit, 20 prisoners were in segregation status and 1 in punishment status.

Returning from the disciplinary unit, the subcommittee stopped at the library and examined the bookshelves. The warden pointed out that Alcatraz had recently received a number of surplus books from the Navy and now had about 14,000 volumes. He explained that the average Alcatraz prisoner read about 85 books a year. The books, selected from a published list, are delivered to the cells. After the working day is over, the prisoner can also listen to the radio, if he wishes, by means of the earphones installed in each cell. The radio is turned on at 6 p.m. each night and turned off at 9:30.

Following lunch, the committee went to the industrial area and entered the laundry. This unit performs work for local government agencies; and while 40 inmates were assigned at the time of the subcommittee's visit, the laundry was being disbanded because local government agencies do not furnish enough work to keep 60 or 70 men busy.

Visiting the clothing factory next, the subcommittee observed 36 inmates working on an order from the U.S. Army for cooks' and bakers' white trousers. The members circulated through the cutting room and through the main shop, stopping occasionally to talk to the prisoners. Warden Madigan advised me that this was the most efficient industrial activity at Alcatraz and that there was little difficulty in securing enough work to keep the factory busy. The morale of the inmate workers seemed high, considering the circumstances, and few of them stopped work long enough even to inspect their visitors.

In the glove factory the members observed operations in the leather cutting department and the sewing shop, where 35 men were making leather gloves for the Army Quartermaster. According to Warden Madigan, the shop had enough orders on hand to keep the activity busy for several months.

In the furniture refinishing shop, 20 prisoners were renovating desks and chairs for Travis Air Force Base, one of several air bases in the area served by the unit. The quality of the work turned out by the prisoners was very high, with the finished product not readily detectable from a newly manufactured article. The issue of tools was carefully controlled by means of a carefully designed tool board, with the absence of a tool evident at a glance.

In the brush shop, the last industrial activity visited by the subcommittee, 22 men were making 14-inch brushes for the Navy. The brushes were turned out with rapidity, and it was obvious that the inmate workers had acquired high skill.

After leaving the work area, the subcommittee inspected the powerplant. Warden Madigan explained that the electricity supply was a source of difficulty, inasmuch as it generated chiefly d.c. current. For example, it was troublesome to operate the prison's metal detectors with only a small amount of a.c. current. The powerplant itself was operated by a chief engineer and five assistants, who rotate on shifts around the clock.

The committee was interested in noting that many of the staff lived on the island with their families and were dependent upon the institution's boats to get to San Francisco for shopping, attending school, and securing other community services. Normally a boat makes round trips every hour or two between 6 a.m. and 12 midnight. However, it is apparent that the life of the island's civilian residents is rather restricted, and the dedication of these public servants must be admired.

CONCLUSION

Although it might be considered regrettable that the United States has need for a supersecurity prison such as Alcatraz, the prisoners confined there are being accorded treatment which is as humane and reasonable as the circumstances permit. The primary function of Alcatraz is to protect the public, and this task is being performed well, under rather trying and difficult circumstances, in the opinion of the members of the subcommittee who visited the insitution.

Needed: More Defense Contracts in Indiana Areas of Unemployment

OF
HON. JOHN BRADEMAS
OF INDIANA
Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, I want to praise the action taken this week by the Rules Committee of the House in urging that the Committee on Armed Services investigate the failure by the Department of Defense to award Government contracts to areas of substantial unemployment.

I refer specifically to House Resolution 19 which, among its other purposes, authorizes the committee "to conduct a full and complete investigation" into the procurement and use of materiel, equipment, supplies, and services by or within the Department of Defense.

Mr. Speaker, since 1953 we in the Third District of Indiana have suffered violent fluctuations in employment. Two of the four counties in my district have too often been in the substantial labor surplus or distressed area category.

Because of economic conditions within my district and because of similar conditions in other distressed areas throughout the Nation, I am glad to see the scope of the investigation covered by House Resolution 19 extended to include a study of whether or not defense contracts are properly being awarded to business firms in areas suffering from serious unemployment.

I have discussed this possibility with the Honorable RAY J. MADDEN, of Gary, Ind., who was among those members of the Rules Committee reporting H. R. 19 favorably to the House. My distinguished colleague from Indiana has informed me that the Honorable CARL VINSON, of Georgia, chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, is in agreement with the extension of the committee's power to study the relationship between first, unemployment, and second, the favoritism by the Defense Department of big companies over small firms in the granting of Government contracts.

I specifically call to the attention of the Armed Services Committee and of Congress the critical unemployment situation in the South Bend area, and I want to commend my good friend, Congressman MADDEN, for his emphasis at the Rules Committee hearing yesterday on the situation at the Studebaker-Packard plant in South Bend.

I respectfully submit that the investigation of which I speak can develop much valuable information toward the end that areas of substantial unemployment are, whenever practical, awarded more contracts by the Department of Defense.

The human and economic cost of high unemployment is ample justification for awarding more government work to such areas.

Communist-Inspired Smear Campaigns

OF
HON. GORDON H. SCHERER
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. SCHERER. Mr. Speaker, I request permission to bring to the attention of my colleagues the recent series of scurrilous attacks against the Federal Bureau of Investigation and its highly respected Director, J. Edgar Hoover.

I particularly commend to your attention the underlying forces behind this patterned campaign of vilification and abuse.

For more than a quarter century, Mr. Hoover and the FBI have been targets of malicious smear campaigns launched by subversive organizations. Communists and other unsavory groups, through distortion and deceit, have directed a wealth of misinformation, innuendoes, and smears against the FBI. But, in the light of its past achievements it is, of course, not too difficult to understand why. Like a stuck pig, they have had good reason to squeal, and are out to get the FBI.

Mr. Hoover is a public servant who has given a lifetime of dedicated effort to unselfish public service. He has dedicated every legitimate resource to an unrelenting war upon the criminal underworld and against those whose ideologies are contrary to our American way of life.

Those whose wish it has been, and is, to unlawfully overthrow our Government are Mr. Hoover's sworn enemies. We all know this. And they leave no stone unturned in their vicious efforts to hamper his effective work. Their malicious smears, however, go on and on.

In 1940 there was a concerted wave of Communist-inspired criticism denouncing the FBI as "an American Gestapo" and a "threat to freedom." Communist demands were heard for a "sweeping investigation of the FBI."

Again in 1947, the Communists spearheaded a vicious drive to slander this agency and undermine public confidence in its operations. Behind this all-out attack were the fear and hatred of subversive groups for the then newly established Government Employees Loyalty Program, a measure clearly designed to strengthen our national security. The attack failed.

In the late 1940's, and early 1950's the FBI's investigative machinery dealt crippling blows to the Soviet spy system here in America. It was during this time, you will remember, that Judith Coplon, Valentin Gubitchev and Harry Gold were arrested and exposed; the Rosenbergs were convicted, and later executed, as atomic spies.

Following these successes, Director Hoover and his staff were subjected to renewed castigation and abuse. Through hate propaganda, and the technique of the big lie, efforts were made to dupe an unsuspecting public into the ridiculous belief that J. Edgar Hoover and the FBI were the menace to the citizenry of our Nation, not the Communists and their allies, the pseudo-liberals.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation has admirably weathered periodic storms of Communist-directed scorn and contempt. Its record of past accomplishments speaks for itself. But in taking a stand for the preservation of the American way of life, Mr. Hoover has invited upon himself the wrath of experts adroit and skilled in the art of character assassination.

In more recent months, this attack has assumed a well-organized pattern of smear, slander, and hate. The leopard has not changed its spots: As in bygone years, the current hate Hoover campaign is implicit in the forces of the Communist Party, U.S.A., its willing dupes, its sympathizers, and its respectably cloaked apologists and pseudoliberals.

"THE NATION"

The initial impetus to this rabid anti-FBI drive was sparked by the Communist-line magazine, "The Nation." Its entire issue of October 18, 1958, some 60 pages, is devoted exclusively to a highly distorted and biased attack upon J. Edgar Hoover and the FBI by Fred J. Cook, a writer who has earned the unenviable distinction of being an apologist for Alger Hiss. This article contains many of the same contradictions, falsehoods, and innuendoes characteristic of those hurled at the FBI by Max Lowenthal and others of similar ilk. The Ford Foundation's Fund For the Republic, a tax-exempt organization, was the largest single advertiser in this smear issue of "The Nation."

"The Nation" is edited by Carey McWilliams, a character whose record relating to Communist Party activities extends over a period of more than 20 years. These facts speak for themselves.

COMMUNIST PARTY U.S.A.

Blistering criticism, nurtured by a feeling of bitter resentment and hate, of those who would zealously defend the country against its internal enemies, has always been, and still is, an unceasing Communist Party tactic. Yet the very ruthlessness and violence of these attacks are a grudging acknowledgment of FBI vigilance in its relentless fight against the treacherous guiles of Communist subversion and intrigue.

One of its latest salvos appeared in the official publication of the Communist Party, U.S.A., "The Worker," on November 16, 1958, in an article brazenly captioned "Edgar Hoover's Four Decades of Fight Against Peace."

But let us not be misled. Today, the American people are being fed the phoney propaganda line that the Communist Party, U.S.A., is just another legitimate political organization. Of course, what it really is—is just what it has always been: A Soviet-dominated link in the international Communist conspiracy, dedicated to the ultimate forcible destruction and overthrow of the U.S. Government.

Soviet leader, Nikita Khrushchev, himself restated this aim in a television interview in June 1957, when he boasted your grandchildren would live under the heel of Communist socialism.

EMERGENCY CIVIL LIBERTIES COMMITTEE

Elaborately linked to the current conspiratorial chain of smear forces are the many fronts exploited by the Communist Party, U.S.A. to convey insidious propaganda designed to discredit truth. They are "the marks" of the conspiratorial con-game swindlers: the willing dupes of the Communist "roper" and "inside man."

These are the individuals whose sly and slanted writings oppose urgently needed internal security measures; present the menace of communism as a myth of hysteria, urge that we tolerate the subversive acts of Communists because the Communist Party is just another political movement; and whose outraged cries have been joined in the attack against everyone and everything related to the exposure of the Communist conspiracy.

It was back in September 1957, you may still recall, that the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee started its campaign of vilification to abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Immediately, the efforts of these Communist stooges were broadened to include the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Their motives were all too obvious. The record will show that the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee was designated a Communist-front organization by the Internal Security Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Harvey O'Connor and Corliss Lamont are its officiating heads.

For some years the name "Harvey O'Connor" has been on the Nation's list of editors as a staff contributor. It was this individual to whom the House Committee on Un-American Activities referred when it stated:

> Harvey O'Connor was identified as a member of the Communist Party by Benjamin Gitlow, the Communist Party's former secretary general, in sworn testimony before the Committee on Un-American Activities on September 11 and October 17, 1939.

And this same committee, in its report on Lamont, states: "Corliss Lamont has been one of the foremost apologists for the Soviet Union in the United States," and then factually recounts his association with many Communist-front organizations.

NEW YORK POST

Next to join forces with the "hate Hoover" campaign was the New York Post whose efforts are being directed by James Wechsler, its editor, a self-admitted former member of the subversive Young Communist League.

The New York Post has probably published more character-assassination attacks on J. Edgar Hoover than any other paper except the Daily Worker. It now has assigned a staff of reporters in the United States and abroad in a farflung attempt to dig up dirt for a professed objective study of the FBI.

We should note that James Wechsler, editor of the New York Post, in the 1930's was on the National Committee of the Young Communist League, and was also formerly an editor of the Nation.

SOCIALIST WORKERS PARTY

The latest blast in the current series of vicious attacks to discredit Mr. Hoover and the FBI was launched on December 8, 1958, by the Militant, a weekly organ of the Socialist Workers Party, in a smear bearing the warped caption, "J. Edgar Hoover, Chief of Thought-Police."

But, here again, let us not forget that the Socialist Workers Party is a militant revolutionary group advocating the immediate violent overthrow of our Government. It is an organization which was cited by the Attorney General under Executive Order 10450.

Over the years, the attitude toward law enforcement of American Communists, leftwingers, and those skilled in concealing foul and despicable acts behind the fifth amendment, has been one of deliberate hostility, coldly calculated to smear, slander, and hate. Their repeated attacks against the FBI are not rooted in a spirit of honest criticism and fact.

But we do know this: Their hostile smears are based upon wishful thinking. They want the FBI abolished. Therefore, they ridicule and vilify its personnel. They condemn its lofty purposes, revile its methods, and rail at its lawful techniques employed to cope with their trickery. In essence, Communist hatred of democratic law enforcement is rooted in the fact that our system is a strong bastion against violent revolution by a minority of political gangsters. Because it is such a barrier, it must be destroyed.

The Communists have raised no audible objection to a system in which the whims of each new tyrant and his hierarchy become the law of the land. The citizen who survives the torture chambers, brainwashers, and firing squads is consigned to a slower death in the slave-labor camps. In the sardonic and semantic lexicon of the Communist conspiracy, this system is called the people's police.

The individual who does not recognize Communist techniques may find himself providing grist for the Red Fascist propaganda mill.

The sinister chain of smears currently being leveled against the FBI prompted

Preston J. Moore, national commander of the American Legion to issue a statement in which he recently declared, in part, and I quote:

It is difficult to attribute any purpose to these attacks other than a desire to destroy this Federal law enforcement agency and its leader as an effective deterrent to undetected, unopposed Communist subversion in this country. * * * The American Legion believes that the American people will not permit their justified confidence in Mr. Hoover and the FBI to be compromised by scurrilous distortions and half-truths. Nor will they allow irresponsible journalism to blind them to the need for continued FBI investigation of the dangerous Communist conspiracy in this country.

I feel that this statement by the national commander of one of America's foremost patriotic organizations very well summarizes the issue: "FBI smears do not stick."

Amendment Offered to Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1958

OF
HON. WILLIAM C. CRAMER
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Speaker, Congress worked its will in regard to Federal aid to highways by passing H.R. 10426 which was an amendment to the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956, and provided for an additional 2 years for advance purchase of rights-of-way. Notwithstanding this fact, a later enactment which was in essence a codification of basic highway law passed and became law. Thus the amendment introduced by me and passed by Congress was nullified by the subsequent passage of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1958. In the final form of the codification of the highway legislation into title 23, United States Code, which was a very essential bill and one which I actively supported, my amendment was not embodied.

It is my desire in reintroducing this measure to have Congress reinstate its approval of the extended term of 2 years so that we may take full advantages of this program and to make the benefits more effective. Last year when this amendment was first introduced I pointed out to the House that additional time is justified and needed between the purchase, not only for construction of the Interstate System but also on primary, secondary, and rural and urban highways, of rights-of-way and actual construction.

The present law provides that a 5-year period is the outside limit of time between the fiscal year in which a request for reimbursement of the cost of acquired rights-of-way is made and commencement of actual construction. Under the present provisions the States are seriously hampered from purchasing rights-of-way unless construction is definitely programed to begin within the 5-year period. In many States such as Florida, where the cost of rights-of-way is daily increasing and plans for substantial highway construction are being made far in advance of the actual beginning of work this provision is not as fully helpful as was intended.

I am in fact, by introducing my amendment, asking Congress again to do that which was intended to be accomplished on August 6, 1958. Due to provisions in codification of highway legislation in United States Code, title 23, repealing all other previous passed legislation, my bill approved August 6 and becoming Public Law 85–597 of the 85th Congress was repealed by this code which was approved on August 28, 1958.

It being the obvious will of Congress that the rights-of-way time limit be extended from 5 to 7 years, I trust immediate action on my bill will be forthcoming. This being the case, I understand that the Bureau of Roads is holding in abeyance, but on active basis, State requests coming within the 5- to 7-year extension in anticipation of such favorable congressional action.

Let Us Defend the Written Constitution

OF
HON. WILLIAM M. TUCK
OF VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. TUCK. Mr. Speaker, on October 23, 1958, our distinguished colleague, the Honorable BURR P. HARRISON, who so ably represents the Seventh Congressional District of Virginia, delivered a masterful address at a meeting of the American Carpet Institute in Skytop, Pa. The sound doctrines expounded by Mr. HARRISON merit serious thought and consideration. Under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following complete text of the address:

There is an element in the United States dedicated to the principle that the working class is the only essential class, and that wealth produced by this class and paid to private ownership is surplus. To obtain this surplus, a constant class warfare must be waged for the control of the private property essential for the production of wealth. The control of such private property should vest in Government, and the control of Government in Socialists' hands. You are fully aware of the vast progress the Socialists have made in the past 25 years toward these objectives. Tonight in every corporation represented here, the Government is the unwanted partner to the extent of 52 percent of net income. Fortunate indeed is the executive who does not contribute 50 percent of his net earnings to Government. A galaxy of laws, State and national, have invaded and pounded down upon our free enterprise system. But, as yet, the Socialist victory has not been complete and the outcome of the struggle remains in doubt. Corporations still earn and declare dividends, farmers still maintain some control over their lands, laborers still in some places may obtain employment without paying tribute, Government control of person and property is not yet fully realized though the outcome teeters in the balance.

To obtain their objectives, the Socialists must reduce the Constitution of the United States to shambles. To the extent its written word is observed, the rights of private property and private enterprise are observed because the Constitution protects them both. An authority cited with all inclusive acceptance by Chief Justice Warren in the school segregation cases was "An American Dilemma," by the Swedish sociologist, Gunnar Myrdal. This book to which the Supreme Court of the United States has given unanimous approval contains this passage: The Constitution of the United States "is impractical and unsuited to modern conditions" and its adoption was "nearly a plot against the common people."

Speaking 2 years ago of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, Edmund W. Flynn, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island, declared "recent decisions have departed so far from constitutional precepts that this country no longer has a written Constitution any more than England."

Judge Learned Hand, of New York, one of the most eminent men ever to sit on the bench and the kind of man who used to be appointed to the Supreme Court, in a series of lectures at Harvard University, has charged that the Supreme Court is pursuing a tendency to set itself up as a third legislative chamber. He says that the Supreme Court has one rule where property is involved and another where liberty is at issue. He says public support disappears from the Court "insofar as it is supposed permissible for the judge to smuggle into his opinions his personal notions of what is desirable." "For myself," continues Judge Hand, "it would be most irksome to be ruled by a bevy of platonic guardians."

The chief justices of 36 States in a remarkable indictment have charged "that the overall tendency of decisions of the Supreme Court over the last 25 years or more has been to press the extension of Federal power and to press it rapidly * * * the Supreme Court too often has tended to adopt the role of policymaker without proper judicial restraint. * * * It has long been an American boast that we have a government of laws and not of men. We believe any study of recent decisions of the Supreme Court will raise at least considerable doubt as to the validity of that boast."

Let me give you one more quote. The California leader of the Communist Party said: "This decision will mark a rejuvenation of our party in America. We've lost some members in the last few years, but now we are on our way again."

No outsider can match the abuse which members of the Court have heaped upon one another. For example in one case, Justices Douglas, Black, and Chief Justice Warren said the action of their colleagues was "a shocking instance of the abuse of judicial power." This is not a suggestion that the majority has made an honest mistake, it has been pointed out. A shocking abuse of authority is an intentional act; a wicked and dishonest thing. In another case, Justice Tom Clark said: "Unless the Congress changes the rule announced by the Court today, those intelligence agencies of our Government engaged in law enforcement may as well close up shop for the Court has opened their files to the criminal and thus afforded him a Roman holiday for rummaging through confidential information as well as vital national secrets * * * and all in the name of justice."

The layman cannot realize the extent to which these nine men have gone toward destroying and distorting our written Constitution. They have decreed that under our Constitution a local school board of the State of New York may not dismiss a teacher who refuses to say whether he is a Communist; that this very State of Pennsylvania may not convict Steve Nelson, a notorious Russian spy, for plotting to overthrow the State government; that the Federal Government may not convict, under the Smith Act, one who advocates the violent destruction of the Federal Union provided such advocacy is "abstract," whatever that may mean; that the State of California and New Mexico must permit subversives to practice law in their courts; that the Government of the United States may not dismiss its own employee who plots the Government's overthow unless he occupies a sensitive position; that the Cabinet head of a Government department must keep on the public payroll a person he believes should not be entrusted with confidential assignments bearing on national policy; they have so tortured the salutary provisions of the fifth amendment, that "taking the fifth" has become a part of the language of the underworld meaning a smug and effective recourse of racketeers and subversives. These nine men have opened the secret files of the FBI to the criminal; they have struck down the criminal laws of the States; they have licensed the seller of filth and obscenity to the youth; they have assaulted the rights of officers of the law to arrest for serious felonies committed in their presence; they have swept away the power of the police to fight crime by reasonable interrogation of suspects and by introduction of voluntary and truthful confessions in evidence; they have decreed that the Congress of the United States, which this year spent $40 billion of the people's money to protect against Communist invasion, has no power to control hostile Communist activity in the United States or even to make inquiry into Communist doings or to remove Communists from Government payrolls; in countless other decisions they have gladdened the hearts and built up the power of criminals and subversives.

In the South conditions threatening chaos have been produced by the decision that racial separation in the public schools violates the Constitution of the United States. This decision did not contend that Southern States had denied equal opportunity to colored children in the public school. Upon the facts, such a contention could not be made. In my State of Virginia, for example, the average salary of a public school teacher is higher for the Negro than for the white. In 10 years, the value of school property per enrollee has increased 258 percent for the Negro as against 144 percent for the white. Thirty-four percent of the State money spent on school construction since 1950 has gone for Negro schools, although Negroes represent only 25 percent of the school population. The taxpayers of Virginia—and that means, by and large, the white taxpayers—have been paying willingly for the creation of truly equal facilities for education of the white and colored child.

Does the Constitution of the United States prohibit the separation of the races in the public schools?

The judges said the acts of Congress providing for segregated schools in the District of Columbia are in violation of the fifth amendment. The fifth amendment was written into the Constitution in 1791, and under it human slavery existed for 75 years until abolished by the 13th amendment. Can any honest man say that language which permits human slavery denies the right of separate school facilities? Separate schools in Virginia, the judges said violated the 14th amendment. The 14th amendment did not give to Negroes the right to vote which was conferred by the 15th. Can any honest man say that language which does not give the right of suffrage denies the right of separate school facilities? The very Congress which submitted the 14th amendment set up a system of segregated schools in the District of Columbia and six times the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that separate but equal facilities comply with the 14th amendment. Chief Justice William Howard Taft was the most recent and expressed the opinion of the Court that "the separate but equal principle * * * is within the discretion of the State in regulating its public schools and does not conflict with the 14th amendment."

However much we may argue about legal niceties, there are certain aspects of this decision which we in the South know, and know beyond peradventure of debate. First, we know that we cannot carry it out and at the same time educate the youth of either race. In the District of Columbia the public schools were integrated in 1954. A congressional committee has established that in the wake of this action has come disciplinary problems described as appalling, demoralizing, intolerable, and disgraceful. Fighting, lying, stealing, vandalism, obscene writing, vulgar talking, absenteeism, and truancy have increased to an amazing degree. Teachers have resigned in disgust, courses of study had to be abandoned because supplies were stolen so rapidly they could not be replaced, children go to school with weapons. The committee found that the vilest sex talk, dirty writing on walls, foul and unspeakable language to teachers, and vicious and obscene tongue battles in classroom, as well as during recess. They reported an enormous increase in venereal disease, which incuded 13 colored girls of 6 years of age. A majority of the people in the District of Columbia are white, but the school population is 73 percent Negro. Where are the children of the white parents?

A second thing we know about this decision is that no civil government, Federal or local, can enforce it. Under the principles of the Declaration of Independence, governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. When you have government exercising power to which the people do not consent, and to which they are deeply opposed, you have widespread violation if you leave enforcement to civil authority, as during prohibition. The only alternative must be a substitution of government by fiat and military might for civil authority and popular government.

I earnestly contend that when constitutional liberty, the right of peaceable assembly, the right to operate local government dies anywhere in the United States, it is threatened everywhere.

What is the real reason the leftwing, with the Supreme Court as its heavy artillery, wages war on the South? In an editorial in this week's U.S. News & World Report, David Lawrence says: "If it had not been for Democratic leaders from the South in the last session of Congress * * * America now would be facing economic disaster."

The leaders of the South, such as BYRD, RUSSELL, IRWIN, and HOLLAND, for 20 years, have held the pass against the Socialist march. When they are succeeded in the Congress by a new generation of carpetbaggers and scalawags, kept in power by Federal bayonets, the votes will be in the Congress to carry the class war to victory not only against the South but over the last vestige of written constitutional government, the last trace of private ownership of property and private enterprise. Thus, the purpose of all of the decisions discussed tonight, including the segregation decisions, is not the protection of the Negro, or the workingman, or the downtrodden individual; the purpose is the destruction of the written Constitution, the breakdown of the police power of the States, the promotion of class warfare, the establishment of Marxist socialism.

As one people of one nation, let us defend the written Constitution and say of it, as did that great New England poet:

> "Sail on, O Ship of State.
> Sail on, O Union, strong and great.
> Humanity with all its fears,
> With all the hopes of future years
> Is hanging breathless on thy fate."

Castro Not Fit To Rule Cuba

OF
HON. VICTOR L. ANFUSO
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. ANFUSO. Mr. Speaker, I have long sought and hoped for a democratic and peaceful change in dictator governments like Cuba. The revolutionary change in Cuba, commencing with uncivilized bloodbaths, does not seem to be a change for the better. Today violence reigns in Cuba, instead of order and democracy for which the people have long prayed.

Already some 200 lives have been needlessly taken, while many hundreds more are reported facing secret trials and possible death. Although executions have been temporarily suspended by the new regime, rebel leader Fidel Castro has defended these mass executions as "necessary to purify the nation." The civilized and free world had high hopes that the Castro movement would establish a government of freedom and democracy for the Cuban people, but it has been disillusioned.

On the basis of what has taken place in the brief period since the Castro regime has come to power, we can only reach one conclusion and that is: Castro is no better than Batista. The methods he has used to attain power—and I am thinking of his kidnaping of U.S. military personnel and civilians in Cuba—and his conduct after the bloody revolution clearly demonstrate that Castro has little or no regard for human lives or human rights. In less than 2 weeks he has authorized the murder in cold blood of 200 human beings under public view and without any semblance of law or order.

At the same time, it is reported that some 500 other persons are being held in Oriente Province alone and they will soon face summary mock trials by hotheaded rebels, lasting perhaps a few minutes per person and with very little chance of defense. And this the Castro regime is trying to tell the world is legal and civilized procedure. In the United States we call these lynchings and murders.

Present-day justice in Cuba under the Castro regime is succinctly discussed in an editorial in the Washington Post of January 14, where it is stated as follows:

> There is a difference between an open trial fairly conducted in a less impassioned moment and drumhead justice dispensed by hotheaded rebel troops. Capital punishment in such a situation too readily becomes lynching. Terror has a way of passing beyond control as the appetite for vengeance increases with use. * * *

According to recent press reports, Castro stated that he has no desire to run for the office of President of Cuba. By his own admission, the job of governing Cuba is too big for him and he ought to resign from active leadership or perhaps take on some kind of professorship at the University of Habana and bide his time.

Castro cannot, by self-appointment, be the commander of the land, air, and sea forces of Cuba which by removing conscription, as he has promised, will eventually be composed of volunteers who are actually his followers. In this way he will succeed in entrenching himself in power and as such become just as dangerous and threatening as any dictator. Under such circumstances it is difficult to see how free elections can be held, except at the point of the bayonets of these self-appointed liberators. No President and no Member of Congress could possibly be elected or serve in office without Castro's approval.

Furthermore, Castro admits that his brother Raul has Communist leanings, having been trained in Moscow. Simultaneously, it is reported that a large number of Castro's followers are Communists, but Castro himself protests that he is not a Communist and is willing to aline himself with the United States. Here again, however, he throws in a proviso that we first show our respect for him. I should like to ask: Respect for him as what? As a kidnaper of American citizens? As a brutal murderer of his own people?

No matter how flushed he may be with victory, Castro should quickly come to his senses and realize that the United States will not take any bluff from him, just as it had not taken and still refuses to take any bluff from other dictators. He would do well to study the map of the Western Hemisphere and learn the facts of life, particularly as they affect the economy of his own country, before he makes demands on the United States. We will not stand for a Nasser or a Hitler so close to our shores.

Whatever justification may have existed for the Castro revolution has now been completely annulled by his most recent threat to kill 200,000 gringos, or Americans, should we decide to send marines to Cuba, although there has been no such suggestion on our part.

I have never forgotten Castro's unwarranted seizure of American soldiers, sailors, marines, and civilian workers, holding them as hostages for a considerable period of time, and thus humiliating the United States in the eyes of the world. I am sure that many other Americans have neither forgotten nor forgiven him for this deed. Nor do we in this country particularly like his treatment of U.S. citizens who presently have to travel to Cuba for business or pleasure. Authentic reports show that Americans are forced to wait long hours at airports under the restraint of armed men and that before being admitted their bags are searched and their bodies frisked like criminals.

I think we ought to make it clear to Revolutionist Castro, for his own good and before he gets any more wild ideas, that it is we who demand respect from him. I think we should tell him in no uncertain terms that we will not tolerate any further mistreatment, friskings, kidnapings, and other indignities to U.S. citizens residing in, or traveling to, Cuba.

At the same time, let us state unequivocally that we are opposed to dictators in any form. Castro and his revolutionists in Cuba must realize that government of the people, by the people, and for the people—as the immortal Abraham Lincoln has so correctly defined the democratic form of government—must be sustained by ballots and not by bullets.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to serve notice that unless a democratic form of government is soon established in Cuba and free institutions are allowed to flourish there, I shall be the first to move before the House Committee on Agriculture, of which I am a member, and before the Congress of the United States to drastically reduce the sugar quota for Cuba. Perhaps Castro will be able to understand that kind of language better, since appeals based on justice and morality do not seem to have the desired effect on him.

Veterans' Legislation

OF
HON. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a copy of the following bills which I have introduced for the benefit of our veterans:

A bill to provide that veterans age 65 shall be deemed to be permanently and totally disabled for pension purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 502, title 38, United States Code, is amended by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c), and adding a new subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b) For the purposes of this chapter, a person shall be considered to be permanently and totally disabled upon reaching the age of 65 years".

A bill to provide that veterans suffering from active pulmonary tuberculosis shall be deemed to be permanently and totally disabled for pension purposes while hospitalized.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 502 (a), title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking the period and inserting a semicolon and "or" in lieu thereof, and by adding a new paragraph (3) to read as follows:

"(3) active pulmonary tuberculosis, but only during periods of hospitalization therefor".

A bill to increase the annual income limitations governing the payment of pension to veterans of World War I, World War II, or the Korean conflict, and their dependents.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 522(a), title 38, United States Code, is amended by deleting "$1,400" and "$2,700" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,800" and "$3,000", respectively.

SEC. 2. Section 545(a), title 38, United States Code, is amended by deleting "$1,400" and "$2,700" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,800" and "$3,000", respectively.

SEC. 3. This Act shall take effect on the first day of the second calendar month after its enactment. Pension shall not be paid for any period prior to the effective date of this Act to any person whose eligibility for pension is established solely by virtue of this Act.

A bill to provide pension for widows and children of deceased World War II and Korean conflict veterans on the same basis as is provided for widows and children of deceased World War I veterans.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 543(a)(1), title 38, United States Code, is amended by deleting (a) the comma following the word "title" and (b) the words "and at the time of his death had a service-connected disability for which compensation would have been payable if 10 per centum or more in degree disabling".

A Discriminatory Excise Tax

OF
HON. THOMAS M. PELLY
OF WASHINGTON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. PELLY. Mr. Speaker, I have long subscribed to the merits of the "try, try again" principle as applied to meritorious causes. Therefore, in introducing H.R. 2418, I am urging for a third time the repeal of the so-called, but misnamed, cabaret tax—the most discriminatory, ancient, and unrewarding of all the wartime emergency excises. I believe I was the first Member of Congress to initiate legislation to eliminate this discriminatory tax. This was in the 84th Congress, when on January 5, 1956, I introduced H.R. 8153, and I believe my renewed proposal to the 85th Congress was the first of some 17 such repeal bills presented at the last session.

Recent legislative history records, Mr. Speaker, that the House of Representatives, as a whole, conforms to my "try, try again" principle with respect to this sorely needed legislation. Three times has this distinguished body voted relief from this onerous excise and sent its recommendations to the Senate. Unhappily, that body has not seen fit as yet to concur. I trust that in this 86th Congress perseverance will have its reward.

I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that this so-called cabaret tax would have long since been repealed had it not suffered from an unfortunate christening some two-score years ago, at the time of World War I. That, Mr. Speaker, is the hoary vintage of this unjust and still uncorrected Federal taxing policy. Realistically, the cabaret has passed from the public scene; only our seniors in this body will remember it, and not too nostalgically; only a smattering of our more youthful colleagues would now know how to search out a lingering vestige of this unmourned symbol of the gay nineties or the roaring twenties. Yet the prohibitive 20-percent excise that was written for and named for the cabaret applies to the hotel dining room and the well-lighted, carefully operated supper club where dine-and-dance entertainment still survives this 20-percent impost. If, perchance, some of my distinguished colleagues are contemplating a social night out to celebrate the wife's birthday, they would have but meager choice in this Capital City of an appropriate venue affording opportunity to dine and dance. And if they are lucky enough to find a surviving establishment where they might enjoy an anniversary waltz with their ladies fair, they must face up to a 20-percent charge on top of the dinner check.

But the problem of this discriminatory tax is not to be considered lightly, because, in principal effect, it is a tax on employment. Over the last decade it has been an excise of declining return for the Treasury; it has become, in fact, a tax of no return. The paltry $40-odd million per annum this tax now returns to the Treasury likely does not pay for its policing and certainly does not compensate for the personal and business income-tax revenues lost because of the almost complete blackout this uneconomic tax imposes upon what once was and again would become a substantial segment of the entertainment business. I am impressed by the comprehensiveness and conservativeness of an independent economic survey made by a reputable national factfinding organization at the instance of the American Federation of Musicians.

The Research Co. of America reported that of the 83,000 playing musicians who earned their principal livelihood from music in 1954, 40,912 were employed in places subjected to the 20-percent tax and an additional 13,429 had part-time employment in this area—the dine-dance business representing more than half of the gainful employment for all instrumentalists. The average earnings for musicians thus employed was $3,042, making the musician one of the most economically distressed of all American workingmen.

The survey revealed that repeal of the 20 percent tax, which I seek in H.R. 2418, would immediately result in a gain of 63 percent in employed hours for 41,000 musicians working in dine-and-dance establishments and thus increase their annual earnings by some $2,000 each. Up to 35 percent more musicians would be employed—a total employment gain of more than 100 percent for this sorely distressed category. Surely, in point of employment alone, this tax must be repealed without further damage to our national job potential.

In the event of repeal, the survey found, establishments now struggling under the 20 percent impost declared their intent to expand their business and employ more musicians to the extent that $36 million more in Federal income taxes would flow to the National Treasury. This factor, together with the resultant gain of 65 percent in the working hours of musicians already employed in 20 percent establishments thus adding some $16 million in income tax revenues, more than compensates the Treasury for the $40 million per annum now derived from an excise that stultifies business and denies employment.

These economic findings, Mr. Speaker, do not take into account other substantial gains to the Treasury that would flow from the repeal of the 20 percent cabaret tax. The survey from which I quote found that for every additional musician thus returned to work by reason of the repeal of this tax, there would be employed between five and six additional people such as other entertainers, waiters, cooks and other service help.

It happens that my personal interest and sympathy lies in great measure with the American musician upon whom we must depend for the propagation, even the survival, of a fundamental living art. In my home city of Seattle I served as a trustee and as president of our Symphony Orchestra Association. Thus I know intimately how severely the music art is beset by a chilling climate compounded of technological displacement and an indefensible Federal taxing policy.

I yield to no Member of this Congress, Mr. Speaker, in my desire for a balanced national budget. I trust that my colleagues in the House will join me in the unique privilege and opportunity of disposing of at least one of our many excises while at the same time making possible the flow of more sorely needed tax revenues to our National Treasury through the creation of employment and the stimulation of legitimate business.

H.R. 1232: A Bill To Create a U.S. Foreign Service Academy

OF
HON. ALBERT H. BOSCH
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. BOSCH. Mr. Speaker, on January 7, 1959, I introduced H.R. 1232 to create a U.S. Foreign Service Academy which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

This measure is, you might say, a "pet subject" of mine. Bills identical to H.R. 1232 were introduced by me in the 83d, 84th, and 85th Congresses, but no action was taken on them. It is my fervent hope that the 86th Congress will see fit to enact this legislation into law.

We have academies for every branch of our armed services so that we may have officers with the best military training available. No one will argue that this is not as it should be. However, I think we will all agree that the cold war of today is no less important to our security than the military. Upon the shoulders of our diplomatic corps rests the job of preventing a hot war. Does it not logically follow that those charged with the duty of carrying on our relations with foreign countries should be given the very best training in this field that we can provide?

In 1958 I sent a questionnaire to my constituents which included this question: "Do you favor the establishment of a Foreign Service Academy to train our Ambassadors, consular and diplomatic representatives for foreign service?" The response was 86 percent in the affirmative. In addition, many newspapers throughout the country have indicated, through editorials, their support for this legislation. The Long Island Daily Press, the leading newspaper in my area of New York, has on several occasions come out in strong support for this idea.

It is my honest belief that a Foreign Service Academy is a "must," and I am confident that the people of the United States agree. I take this opportunity to call upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs to act on this legislation and to give the members of this body an opportunity to vote on same.

Small Business Tax Adjustment—H.R. 2

OF
HON. FRANK IKARD
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. IKARD. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, the President revealed to congressional leaders an administration budget of over $77 billion—the greatest peacetime budget of this or any nation. I do not wish to speak on that budget, but on the source of Federal taxes which must support that budget—our free economy.

Ours is a growing Nation. During the past year, our population increased 3 million and our Nation's work force increased about a half million. To sustain a growing population and provide jobs, a growing economy is necessary if we are to maintain our high standards of living and support increased Federal expenditures.

We have had a growing economy. The gross national product of 1957 was the highest in history, and indications are that 1958 exceeded that mark. But one segment continues to lag—that commonly referred to as small- and medium-sized business.

In our analysis of small business conditions, we are fortunate indeed to have the reports of the Small Business Administration. May I call to your attention that in the 10th semiannual report for the 6-month period ending June 30, 1958, the Administrator reported that business failures through June 30, 1958, had been reported as 8,071 compared to 7,089 in the similar period for 1957.

Mr. Speaker, this is an increase of 14 percent—an alarming rate for a growing nation. May I point out that many Members of this House were alarmed last year when reports indicated that business failures in 1957 were 8 percent higher than in 1956. Why, in a period of national growth, are business failures continuing at such a high level?

The same reports show that in 1956 larger manufacturing corporations returned 12.4 percent on stockholders' equity; in 1957, 11.2 percent; and in the first quarter of 1958, 7.3 percent. The smaller manufacturing corporations, however, showed a return of 10.4 percent in 1956; 7.6 percent in 1957; and dropped to four-tenths of 1 percent in the first quarter of 1958. This is a tremendous difference.

The Small Business Administration also points up a long-term trend which is of interest to every Member of this House. The Administration reports that from 1947 to 1957 the stockholders' equity in smaller manufacturing corporations increased from $5.9 billion to $9.5 billion—an increase of 62 percent. The equity in larger corporations increased from $59 billion to $132 billion—an increase of 122 percent for the same period.

Mr. Speaker, this is only one facet of the problem. The great bulk of small business is unincorporated, and the most substantial part of it is in the distribution and service trades. While there are no accurate figures on these unincorporated concerns, all the available evidence shows similar conditions exist.

Mr. Speaker, our economy has grown during the 10-year period covered by those figures, but it is evident that the rate of growth of smaller concerns has been less than half the rate of growth of the larger ones. Certainly with a growing nation it is necessary that the economic climate be sustained which will be favorable to the growth of all business enterprises. In the construction of tax laws, the Congress must not only look for revenue but seek that revenue by methods which will continue to foster and encourage further economic growth.

A review of the economic indications leads one to the firm conclusion that the tax laws, as now construed, do not grant small business concerns the same opportunity for growth as is enjoyed by their larger competitors.

Last year, your Committee on Ways and Means held extensive hearings on the general economic conditions and the influence of taxation on the health of our economy. These hearings demonstrated one fact above all concerning the sector of our economy known as small- and medium-sized business today. It demonstrated clearly that the greatest problem faced by the smaller concerns is their inability to retain sufficient after-tax funds to finance their growth. Most small- and medium-sized concerns are unable to obtain capital required for expansion in the open market as the larger concerns can do.

Over 85 percent of the Nation's business enterprises are unincorporated and hence are not in a position to raise capital by the issuance of stock. Further, experience indicates that the smaller concerns which are incorporated and do issue additional stock are unable to compete in the capital market with their larger competitors.

During the last session, the Congress authorized the Small Business Administration to license small business investment companies chiefly for the purpose of making long-term loans to smaller concerns. These loans constitute additional liability for business enterprises. There is a limit to the amounts of money which a small business should borrow. Indeed, many firms have already borrowed all they can or should from banks and other commercial lending institutions. Right now, the greatest need of the smaller concerns is increased equity capital, the chief source of which is retained earnings.

After extensive hearings last year, the Ways and Means Committee, in Report No. 2198, dated July 16, 1958, reported to the House:

> Your committee is convinced that one of the greatest problems confronting small and medium sized business is the acquisition of sufficient capital to modernize and maintain a rate of expansion experienced by their larger competitors. In this regard your committee is aware of the fact that small and medium sized businesses must rely to a very large extent upon retained earnings for modernization and expansion. Thus, there is a need to allow such businesses to retain more earnings after taxes to provide the funds necessary for growth. To aid in achieving this end your committee has investigated thoroughly various proposals to postpone, or to reduce, taxes based upon reinvestment in inventory and depreciable property, and would have liked to have included a provision along these lines in this bill. However, it has been forced to the conclusion that the budgetary limitations under which all tax relief must now be considered are such that any tax reduction which now could be granted under a reinvestment formula is so small as not to represent any meaningful tax relief to small business.

Mr. Speaker, the small business tax adjustment bill, H.R. 2, which I have introduced, is designed to assist small- and medium-sized businesses to maintain a rate of expansion experienced by their larger competitors by allowing such businesses to retain more earnings after taxes. The bill provides that a person engaged in a trade or business shall be allowed as a deduction for the taxable year an amount equal to the additional investment in the trade or business during that year. This deduction shall not exceed $30,000 or 20 percent of the net income of the trade or business, whichever is the lesser. Additional investment is measured in the bill by the aggregate of the increase in depreciable property used in the trade or business, inventory, and accounts receivable attributable to sales to customers in the ordinary course of the trade or business.

This adjustment will make immediately available to all businesses an opportunity to obtain capital for business expansion, thus widening employment opportunities, stimulating competition, and broadening the sources of revenue needed to sustain an increased budget for a growing nation.

It is my sincere hope that every Member of the House will give earnest and sincere study to conditions now confronting small- and medium-sized business. The principle of a tax adjustment based on the reinvestment of earnings is the most meaningful step which the Government can take to help solve this national problem. America has long been recognized as a land in which the door of free enterprise is always open. Passage of this act would reaffirm the determination of the Congress that a free government through the proper construction of tax laws can create an economic climate in which these smaller concerns can grow and prosper.

Small Business Tax Adjustment Act

OF
HON. THOMAS B. CURTIS
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced H.R. 13, the Small Business Tax Adjustment Act, which is an identical bill to H.R. 2, introduced by my esteemed colleague, Congressman FRANK IKARD. These bills are similar to the bills that Congressman IKARD and I sponsored in the last Congress.

The passage of this legislation is urgent if we are to maintain the proper balance in our economy between small and large business. It is urgent if we are to have the growth we need to maintain a healthy and progressive economy.

The bills which Congressman IKARD and I introduced in the last Congress were the subject of extensive hearings by the Ways and Means Committee. The committee in its report accompanying a bill which sought to alleviate some of the lesser problems of small business recognized the soundness of the philosophy behind our bills, which hit at the basic problem.

Now is the time to implement the Ikard-Curtis philosophy by legislation.

What is the philosophy? That traditionally in the private enterprise system economic growth comes essentially from the small and new businesses. That the small and new businesses finance their growth essentially from retained earnings, not from bank borrowings, new equity capital or other sources which are generally not available to it.

This is the seed corn philosophy upon which America has grown great. We plant 1 acre of corn, but we retain enough seed from the harvest to plant 2 acres next year. Yet under our Federal tax structure we have been taxing the seed corn so that we are stunting the healthy economic growth we need.

There are those who are so blind to basic economics that they look upon relief from the seed corn tax as threatening the revenues of the Federal Government. It is quite the other way around. If we do not stop taxing the seed corn we will not have the economic growth from which we have been deriving our increased Federal revenues.

During the last recession we overanticipated our Federal tax revenues by about $8 billion. Why? Because we were counting upon an increased gross national product for a larger tax base. Instead of the increased GNP we had a decrease. Essentially this decrease came from the new and small businesses not going ahead with their planned expansions, because they did not have the financing necessary to do so.

Congressman IKARD's and my theory of removing some of the tax on the seed corn is bound to produce more, not less, Federal revenues. The only basis upon which a business gets the tax credit in our bills is when it puts retained earnings into growth of the business. What is growth in a business other than increased payrolls, increased expenditures for capital outlays which mean increased payrolls in other businesses? The amount of tax the Federal Government obtains from this kind of expenditure is multiplied several times over.

Furthermore, there is no question but the Federal Government loses revenue when the healthy small businesses are made part of larger concerns through merger and acquisition, particularly when in many instances the purchase price of the small concern is partly paid out of tax-avoidance savings.

Many present-day mergers and acquisitions are not real economic growth. Indeed, many actually are stifling growth. There are, of course, mergers and acquisitions resulting from good economics, but the rate of mergers and acquisitions in the past few years clearly indicate reasons other than good economics lie behind this process. One does not have to look far to find the answer. The answer lies in our Federal tax laws, which discourage economic growth and place a premium on economic cannibalism of larger companies swallowing smaller ones.

The point is not whether the Treasury can stand the enactment of the Ikard-Curtis bill. The question is rather how long can the Federal Treasury stand not to have it enacted.

The bill (H.R. 13) follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. Deduction for additional investment in depreciable assets, inventory, and accounts receivable.

(a) ALLOWANCE.—Part VI of subchapter B of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 178. Additional investment in depreciable assets, inventory, and accounts receivable.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—In the case of any person engaged in a trade or business, there shall be allowed as a deduction for the taxable year an amount measured by the additional investment in such trade or business for the taxable year.

"(b) LIMITATIONS.—The deduction under this section for any taxable year shall not exceed whichever of the following is the lesser:

"(1) $30,000, or

"(2) an amount equal to 20 percent of the net income of such trade or business for the taxable year (computed without regard to this section).

"(c) ADDITIONAL INVESTMENT DEFINED.—For purpose of this section, the additional investment in a trade or business for a taxable year means the amount (if any) by which—

"(1) the aggregate, computed as of the close of the taxable year, of the adjusted bases of—

"(A) all property used in the trade or business of a character which is subject to the allowance for depreciation provided in section 167,

"(B) all stock in trade and property held primarily for sale to customers in the ordinary course of the trade or business.

"(C) all accounts receivable attributable to sales to customers in the ordinary course of the trade or business, exceeds

"(2) a similar aggregate, computed as of the beginning of such taxable year.

"(c) SPECIAL RULES.—Limitation on Affiliated Group—For the purposes of this section:

"(1) All members of an affiliated group shall be treated as one taxpayer; and

"(2) The Secretary or his delegate shall apportion the limitation contained in subsection (b) of this section among the members of such affiliated group in such manner as he shall by regulations provide.

"(3) AFFILIATED GROUP DEFINED.—For the purposes of this section, the term 'affiliated group' has the meaning assigned to it by section 1504, except that, for such purposes, the phrase 'more than 50 percent' shall be substituted for the phrase 'at least 80 percent' each place it occurs in section 1504(a)."

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections for such part VI is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Sec. 178. Additional investment in depreciable assets, inventory, and accounts receivable."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1958.

VHF Translator Facilities

OF

HON. E. Y. BERRY

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I am reintroducing with minor amendments a bill, designated as H.R. 1913 in the 85th Congress, which directs and requires the Federal Communications Commission to authorize VHF translator facilities under proper rules and regulations to be established by the Commission. The amendments in the bill I am introducing, which differs from H.R. 1913, are that I have incorporated the language of the Senate report providing that, in denying a VHF translator application, interference with other facilities is not to be assumed but must be proven and must be shown to be so significant that it cannot be permitted a license or cannot be permitted to continue.

Action was not taken on H.R. 1913 in the last session because of the fact that the FCC was in the process of holding hearings on the entire problem of translators, boosters, repeater stations, etc. About 3 weeks ago the FCC handed down their decision, a decision which is devastating to the western half of the United States. It declares VHF television boosters and translators to be illegal and gives communities 90 days from the time of the order in which to make application for a license under UHF.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, it makes illegal receiving television programs in 50 percent of the congressional district which I represent. It makes law violators out of peaceful people because, since the distance is so great and the population so sparse, it is not possible for a large percentage of the peoples in towns and communities on the prairies of western South Dakota to receive television reception except by some kind of booster facilities. The FCC has failed to take jurisdiction of VHF boosters and at the same time, through lack of enforcement, have permitted, although not authorized, almost every community on the prairies of the West to spend several thousand dollars in installing VHF boosters. Under the new order these facilities would be completely voided and these communities would be required to spend three or four times the amount they have invested in VHF boosters in a UHF booster.

Another problem that apparently is of no concern to the FCC is the fact that UHF is a line-of-sight reception. A large portion of the West, including the Black Hills area of western South Dakota, is mountainous. The primary reason those communities need boosters is because of the fact that most of the population live in the valleys where line-of-sight television is not possible. They must have translators or boosters on a frequency which will permit reception on other than line of sight.

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that the UHF boosters are, by far, the least expensive means of bringing television reception to these remote areas. They ordinarily consist of an antenna located on a windmill tower or sometimes on a grain elevator through which a normally weak signal from a distant station is picked up. It is then amplified and rebroadcast at low power on the same or another channel from an antenna many times located on the city water tower. In most towns and communities where such facilities have been installed, contributions are solicited in the community or memberships are sold in a television club in order to finance maintenance and operation of this simple system. Because it is cheap and yet because it brings television to that community in this simple manner, thousands and thousands of communities throughout the West have availed themselves of television through this system. The signal goes out only a very few miles, but farmers living near the town get the benefit of television thereby.

Two or 3 years ago the Commission wrote to many individuals and mayors of small cities and towns, advising them that this type of booster was unauthorized and must cease. Although their action was proper under their authority, their inaction to authorize some other service or to authorize any VHF facilities, whether they interfere with any other facility or not, was unrealistic and stopped nothing. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the fact that the Commission failed and refused to step in and provide a sound scheme of regulation whereby communities so situated that VHF might interfere would be required to install

UHF, and authorizing communities where there was no possible chance to interfere with anything, that those communities be authorized under VHF. In other words, they sought simply to stamp out the whole operation without provising any means for people of the West to have television service. Law-abiding residents felt that the good resulting from the booster systems was so evident and the alleged dangers so theoretical that they continued their operation.

It should be pointed out that the Commission is not unanimous in its thinking. After a thorough investigation of the problem in the West, Commissioner T. A. M. Craven dissented from the majority opinion, calling it unduly rigorous and unrealistic and based upon a narrow interpretation of the Communications Act. His statement is in part as follows:

Because the Commission failed to recognize promptly the overwhelming public interest factor involved in providing practicable procedures for establishing television service to small communities in the mountainous areas of the West, it is my opinion that this agency has failed thus far to discharge its statutory obligation to make available, insofar as possible, to all the people in the United States, a rapid, efficient, nationwide radio system. Apparently, the Commission did not recognize soon enough that these low-powered boosters are the only practicable way in which the people residing in those isolated areas can secure any television service whatsoever. We have been shortsighted in this connection, as remedial steps could have been and should have been taken long ago. If necessary, changes in legislation should be requested.

No hearings were held in the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on this subject because of the heavy schedule of this committee, but the Senate committee did hold hearings making four very specific recommendations:

First. The Commission has a statutory duty to provide television service for as many of the people in this country as it possibly can.

Second. If VHF boosters are technically feasible, as seems demonstrated by their operations to date, the Commission should accept them as one available tool for achieving this end—which means authorizing such facilities under proper rules.

Third. The enunciating rules to regulate boosters, the Commission should go as far as is practicable in modifying its general rules to permit unattended installations incorporating the simplest possible equipment so that the service can continue to be an extremely inexpensive one within the reach of even very small communities.

Fourth. The Commission is not only entitled to insist that boosters not create objectionable interference, but is charged by statute to do so. However, it should operate on the principle that interference is not to be assumed, but must be proved—and must be shown to be so significant that it cannot be permitted to continue.

To me the decision of the FCC is unauthorized and unwarranted. The law makes it the duty of the FCC to authorize services which will provide television reception to the people of America. In many instances the only means of providing that service is through VHF translators. In many more instances the only practical means of providing service to thousands of communities is through VHF translators. Where VHF translators provide the service and cannot cause any disruption in other television or radio or commercial or radar or defense services, it seems to me to be not only a neglect of duty and of the law for the Commission to refuse to recognize and legalize through licensing these VHF facilities.

The bill I am introducing does direct and does require the FCC to authorize these small community translator facilities where they do not interfere, and provides further that the burden of proof shall be upon the FCC to show interference where application for such facilities is under consideration.

Work of the Red Cross in Pennsylvania Flood Areas

OF
HON. JAMES G. FULTON
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, the American National Red Cross is doing an excellent job in Pennsylvania flood areas. The Red Cross, under the fine leadership of Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, deserves the high commendation and sincere thanks from the representatives and people of the flood areas of the Nation.

The Red Cross is the quick and friendly hand that gives our people, caught in the current January 1959 flood disaster, the courage and will to rise and, through our own efforts, to clean up the damage, rebuild, and face the future with growing confidence.

WHAT THE RED CROSS DOES TO DISASTER SUFFERERS—WHAT THE RED CROSS WILL DO FOR YOU

The Red Cross is the official volunteer disaster relief agency of the Federal Government and the American people. It is the way in which people all over the country—your neighbors—are helping you to help yourselves.

Red Cross assistance is of two kinds:

First. Emergency assistance: The Red Cross will provide immediate temporary relief. If you need food, shelter, clothing, or medical attention now, report to the nearest Red Cross disaster office or emergency shelter. The Red Cross will give you a change of address order provided by the Post Office Department to speed up the delivery of your mail. On major disasters the Red Cross will provide you with safety notification cards so that you may notify your relatives and friends of your safety and whereabouts.

Second. Assistance after the emergency: The biggest job to be done is the reestablishment of homes. Those of you who need more than temporary aid to return to normal living may apply for Red Cross help at the Red Cross disaster office.

This help is an outright gift of the American people through the Red Cross. It may include:

First. Food, clothing, and maintenance.

Second. The repair or rebuilding of owner-occupied homes.

Third. Furniture and other household necessities.

Fourth. Medical and nursing care and hospitalization.

Fifth. Occupational supplies, fixtures, inventories, and equipment.

The Red Cross does not replace losses. It is not an insurance agency. Red Cross meets those needs that you cannot meet yourself without undue hardship. Your situation will receive individual consideration by a Red Cross worker. Enough time will be taken to plan wisely with you and to verify certain information, such as home ownership, income, and liabilities. The final plan will be reviewed in confidence with an advisory committee of responsible local citizens. Each case will be handled as quickly as possible with due consideration given such things as health or age, which might create unusual conditions.

WATCH OUT FOR MISLEADING RUMORS

The Red Cross never sells food or disaster supplies—no payment is ever expected for any assistance given. Any statements to the contrary are completely false and you can help by reporting them, with the name of the person you heard tell them, to the nearest Red Cross office.

THE AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS,
Washington, D.C., January 26, 1959.

The Honorable JAMES G. FULTON,
The House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. FULTON: Knowing of your great interest in the well-being of the people in Pennsylvania, I want to give you a report of Red Cross activity in connection with the flooding that began in Pennsylvania on January 21.

Incomplete surveys from Red Cross workers indicate that nearly 22,000 families have been affected by floodwaters in 63 counties in the 5-State flood area. At the peak of the flood emergency approximately 6,000 persons were housed and fed in 82 Red Cross shelters.

Chapter volunteers and national disaster workers of the Red Cross are on the job along with Federal, State, and community agencies to bring all possible relief to flood sufferers in your State and the four others affected. The full resources of our organization have been mobilized to aid these stricken families. The Red Cross will continue its emergency and rehabilitation work until the disaster-caused needs of all these families, lacking the necessary funds, have been met.

As perhaps you know, Red Cross help is based on the principle not of replacing all losses, but of assisting disaster victims in need who lack sufficient resources of their own, including insurance, to start back on the road to recovery.

All assistance from the Red Cross is an outright gift, coming chiefly from funds contributed annually by the American people. Unfortunately, our disaster reserve has been drastically reduced because of the extraordinarily heavy disaster losses in the past 4 years. For that reason special appeals for funds have been inaugurated by the Red Cross in the affected areas. I am confident that the American people, as always, will contribute generously.

You may be assured that the Red Cross will remain on the job until all who need our assistance have been helped.

Sincerely,

ALFRED M. GRUENTHER.

JIM, this has really been a rugged flood in many of your areas.

AL.

Thank you, General Gruenther; we in the flood areas do indeed appreciate your warmhearted cooperation.

The Administration's Development Loan Fund Request: Shirking Our International Responsibilities

OF
HON. HENRY S. REUSS
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, the aspiring peoples of Asia, Africa, the Middle East and Latin America—those with the greatest need for help along the road toward economic development—may be our best friends in the future. Congress set up the Development Loan Fund 2 years ago in order to assist underdeveloped peoples by loans—not by grants—to help themselves.

The Congress felt that the "revolution of rising expectations" of people emerging from backwardness should be assisted by us for its own sake. But we well know that the Communists are also exploiting this revolutionary surge in the underdeveloped countries for their own purposes. In less than 3 years, Communist Russia has extended $1.7 billion in long-term low-interest loans for economic development. Communist trade agreements with underdeveloped countries increased from 49 in 1953 to 147 in 1957. Trade between the Soviet bloc and the underdeveloped areas is 50 percent greater than it was 2 years ago. Today, more than 2,000 students from these areas are studying in Moscow and other Soviet centers. Some 2,300 Soviet technicians are now at work in the underdeveloped areas.

The Development Loan Fund was off to a good start. Two years ago Congress gave it a needed 2-year authorization, to insure some continuity of administration. The congressional authorization for the Development Loan Fund for the current fiscal year, that ending June 30, 1959, is $625 million.

Since the Development Loan Fund began operations just a year ago in January 1958, it has had a profoundly constructive, although limited, effect on the health of the underdeveloped world. Of the $3 billion of applications made in the last year, to the end of January 1959, $700 million have been committed in loans, $500 million have been rejected as not sufficiently worthy, and $1.8 billion of applications which are deemed worthy but for which no funds are available, are on file. Applications for further developmental loan capital are still pouring in. It is anticipated that valid applications on the order of $3 billion will be on hand before the Development Loan Fund in a matter of weeks.

The Development Loan Fund is financing basic economic facilities, such as roads, ports, power, communications, and irrigation, and is loaning to private industry. The Development Loan Fund will also be a source of United States contributions and support to regional development institutions as they come into being.

Here are some illustrations of the type of loans being made by the Development Loan Fund:

In Taiwan a loan of $21.5 million to assist in financing the cost of the Shihman Dam project in the northwest to produce power needed for further industrialization, flood control, and water supply. Shihman will increase the total power available to Taiwan by 15 percent and provide a water supply for 340,000 persons and irrigation of 140,000 acres.

In Pakistan a loan of $4.2 million to assist the privately owned Pakistan Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation in extending loans to private borrowers for the purchase abroad of machinery, equipment, materials, and services for economic development purposes.

In Liberia a loan to a joint American-Liberian private company of $190,000 to assist in financing the costs of expanding existing sawmill operations.

In Honduras a loan of $5 million to a large-scale road program being undertaken by the Government of Honduras. Proceeds of the loan are being used to help construct a new 45-mile paved highway serving one of the most populated regions of Honduras and to improve a highway linking the capital with the Pan-American Highway and Pacific ports. The DLF financing supplemented a $4,500,000 loan by the World Bank for the import of equipment, materials, and services required in this project.

In Ceylon a loan of $1.6 million toward the purchase abroad of equipment and materials required to continue Ceylon's irrigation and land development program and to assist in rehabilitating 29 major reservoirs and 1,200 village reservoirs breached in the winter floods of 1957–58.

In Paraguay a loan to a private U.S. firm, the International Products Corp., of $2.6 million to assist in modernizing and expanding its operations of ranching, meatpacking, and production of quebracho extract.

In Turkey a loan of $10 million to assist privately owned Industrial Bank of Turkey to make small- and medium-sized loans for the expansion of industry.

For many months now, the administration has been telling the people of this country, and of the world, that America's international responsibilities require, for the 1960 fiscal year, a considerably expanded use of the Development Loan Fund. It must be set up on more than a 2-year basis, the administration has rightly proclaimed, and it must have loanable funds at its disposal at a rate of $1 billion a year.

Thus Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs C. Douglas Dillon, testifying before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs on March 11, 1958, said:

You may ask why, if the executive branch believed last year that long-term financing was needed for the Fund, we have not renewed the request this year.

We have not done so through any belief that the need has diminished. In fact, international developments during the last year have convinced us even more firmly, if possible, that long-term assurances of funds is necessary to obtain the maximum results and so is essential to the future peace and security of our country and the free world. However, we recognize that the House of Representatives determined last year that the Fund should be established with capital sufficient for only 2 years as a trial and that consideration of longer term financing should be postponed until the Congress can have for it the record of requirements and performance for this initial period.

We are abiding by that decision, and we are deferring until next year proposals for the longer term financing which I had said we are more than ever convinced is essential. In the meantime, our experience, thus far, has demonstrated overwhelmingly that the appropriation of the full $625 million now authorized, is needed for the coming fiscal year.

Under Secretary Dillon, in an address to the Foreign Policy Association at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York City on May 21, 1958, said:

The less-developed countries are fully prepared to bear the major burden of their own economic development. But to acquire the industrial techniques and the machinery and equipment which they cannot yet make for themselves they need help from the industrialized countries. As the greatest industrialized country of the world we must accept the responsibility for leadership in this field.

This means that we must lift our sights. In the fields of international development assistance, international finance, world trade and private investment we must find ways of doing more than we are doing now. For unless we meet the challenge of the times, our own safety, let alone our economic well-being, will surely be placed in the gravest danger. * * *

For the future, I believe that we should contemplate a higher level of lending from the Development Loan Fund, something on the order of $1 billion a year. I believe that such an amount could be spent wisely in stimulating development abroad and would be warranted by considerations of our national security.

Secretary of State John Foster Dulles spoke movingly to the United Nations General Assembly at New York City on September 18, 1958:

Economic development is, of course, an aspiration shared by all peoples. In the newly independent nations, and indeed in many long independent, there is a burning desire for economic and social progress, for higher levels of living, for freedom from the slavery of poverty.

Much has been accomplished already. The American people admire the vigorous efforts of the leaders and the peoples of less developed countries to help themselves. Yet much remains to be done.

The United States believes the time has come for the nations of the world to take stock of accomplishments to date and to chart anew long-term courses of cooperative action.

We propose that the nations dedicate the year 1959 to these purposes.

Let me mention some of the major steps that the Uinted States would be prepared, subject to action by Congress as appropriate, to take or support in the coming year:

1. The United States will carry forward its existing development financing programs on a vigorous and effective basis. * * * The great challenge of poverty and disease can only be met by vigorous realistic action. The United States stands ready to play its full part in this great peaceful crusade.

Again, on November 7, 1958, Under Secretary Dillon, addressing the World Affairs Council of Northern California at San Francisco, said:

In my view a most serious threat of all is the Soviet economic offensive. * * * I believe that we must place our chief reliance in meeting the Soviet challenge on the mobilization of our economic and technical resources, both public and private, to help raise the living standards of the less privileged nations of the world. * * *

During the past 12 months, our country's responses to their needs has taken many forms. Perhaps the most striking is the Development Loan Fund, which has added a whole new dimension to foreign loan program. The Fund, which began operation early this year, represents a new hope for the underdeveloped countries. * * *

At the present rate of operations the Fund will have committed all of its available resources within a few months which means an annual rate of operations of about $700 million. I believe that we should contemplate a still higher level of lending from the Development Loan Fund, something on the order of $1 billion a year.

Three days later, in his address to the Colombo plan meeting at Seattle, Wash., on November 10, 1958, President Eisenhower joined the crusade:

Our task is a great one. It will take many years to fulfill. Yet if we undertake it boldly, with wisdom and determination, we can and will succeed.

What are the steps that we should take?

First, we must keep in mind our goal. That goal is to enable free nations to achieve a momentum of economic progress which will make it possible for them to go forward in self-reliant growth.

Next, we must determine the means by which we are to achieve that goal. To this end, Secretary of State Dulles suggested at the meeting of the United Nations General Assembly on September 18 that all countries of good will should chart anew their long-term courses of action to promote the growth of less developed areas.

If both the less developed and the more developed countries move vigorously to carry out this proposal, their action could pave the way for the 1960's to become a decade of unprecedented progress toward our common goal.

The United States stands ready to play its full part in this great peaceful crusade to achieve continuing growth in freedom.

And on November 13, 1958, Acting Secretary of State Christian A. Herter told the International Cooperation Workshop in Washington, D.C.:

Among the five specific measures proposed by the President at Seattle, I should like to place some special emphasis on the Development Loan Fund.

This Fund is a major instrument in our effort to assist the less developed nations to carry forward their own plans for progress. It is important to realize that the Development Loan Fund will be substantially out of funds available for new commitments by January 1, 1959. Yet it will have a backlog of over $1.5 billion of applications for loans to help on important projects in many countries. If the Development Loan Fund is to be an effective instrument for peaceful development, it must have resources for substantial increased activity on the order of $1 billion a year. It must also have continuity over a period of years.

Only under such circumstances can the wastefulness of inadequate planning be avoided.

But in the last 2 months, something has happened. The administration has been seized by the magnificent obsession for balancing the budget at a low level, by whatever arithmetic tricks it can get away with, and with a fine unconcern for the future of the free world. Nowhere does this show up more shamelessly than in the Development Loan Fund budget request.

As Secretary Herter said, "If the Development Loan Fund is to be an effective instrument for peaceful development, it must have resources for substantial increased activity on the order of $1 billion a year." The 1960 budget request is for a mere fraction of this, $700 million a year. As Secretary Herter said, only if the Development Loan Fund has "continuity over a period of years, can the wastefulness of inadequate planning be avoided." Yet the budget request is for only a 1-year authorization, not even for the 2-year authorization which the administration had the courage to request, and Congress granted, back in 1957.

If there is one clear lesson in the politics of foreign-aid requests, it is that in order to get at least part of what is adequate, the administration must ask what is adequate. How easy it would have been to have requested a 2-year authorization, now that the Development Loan Fund has proved its worth, as was successfully done in 1957, when the Fund was a fledgling. How easy it would have been to have asked for a $1 billion authorization for fiscal 1960, as the administration has been saying for many months was vitally necessary. While the additional $300 million request would have thrown the administration's paper budget out of balance by $200 million, 10 times this $200 million could readily be recouped, and a substantial surplus shown, if the administration were willing to plug some of the more outrageous loopholes in the tax laws.

And what nonsense it is to say that the country's economy could not stand the administration's sticking to its guns on the need for $1 billion for the Development Loan Fund. More than 4,100,000 Americans are unemployed, some 6.1 percent of the working force; less than 75 percent of our manufacturing capacity is being used. Why shirk our international responsibilities just to keep our unemployed unemployed, and our unused industrial capacity still unused?

Mr. Speaker, the President movingly pointed to the need for "the 1960's to become a decade of unprecedented progress." His administration can practice what it has so eloquently preached by amending its budget request for the Development Loan Fund for 1960 to include authorization for more than 1 year, and for more than the $700 million requested.

Hawaii Statehood—50 in '59

OF

HON. JOHN A. BURNS

DELEGATE FROM HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. BURNS of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, recently Hawaii was highly privileged to welcome five very able and distinguished Members of the 85th Congress who came in their capacities as Members of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives pursuant to the request of the Delegate from Hawaii made of the chairmen of the respective committees.

The purpose of the visit was to scrutinize at first hand existing conditions in Hawaii and Hawaii's readiness for statehood. No one could have worked more diligently or more thoroughly than did these capable and outstanding Senators and Representatives. In accomplishment of their mission they pursued every avenue of pertinent inquiry; talked to as many people as possible; and, under the least constrained circumstances, left, in a word, no relevant stone unturned to obtain every fact.

In a New Year's message to Hawaii's people the junior Senator from Idaho, the Honorable FRANK CHURCH, has stated brilliantly and concisely the conclusions he drew from his searching inquiry. With his usual graciousness, the distinguished Senator has consented to my insertion of this message into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, the 86th Congress faces tremendous challenges. Legislation that will be considered is of grave importance to the lives and welfare of our people. It is my considered opinion, objectively, that no legislation is of greater import than Hawaii statehood. There could scarcely be a more convincing statement in support of this fact than the message of the Honorable FRANK CHURCH. I am most highly honored, therefore, to present for the consideration of the Members of the House the thoughtful, closely reasoned, and brilliantly stated report of the Honorable FRANK CHURCH on his inquiry in Hawaii:

TIME FOR STATEHOOD IS RIGHT NOW

(By Senator FRANK CHURCH, of Idaho)

We are fast approaching the time of decision on whether Hawaii is to become our 50th State. In all likelihood, the decision will rest with the coming Congress.

If its answer is 'Yes," then we will have welcomed in, as an integral part of our country, the last of our incorporated Territories.

Statehood will confer upon the people of the islands, long since citizens of the United States, fundamental rights of self-government equal to our own.

They will then elect their governor, as we do ours; they will then be entitled to two U.S. Senators and a voting Representative in the Congress; and they will participate with us, every fourth year, in the election of the President.

But if the answer should be "No," let no one be deceived that Hawaii will remain indefinitely an American Territory.

To be neither in nor out, but to stay a colony, is no more acceptable to our fellow Americans in Hawaii, than it was to our own forefathers.

They were subjects of the English King; they bore arms in his defense, and paid the taxes he levied upon them.

Again and again, they petitioned him, through his appointed governors, for redress of their grievances, but he refused to grant them more than limited rights of self-government.

So, their call to reason, "no taxation without representation," became, at last, a call to arms.

Yet, despite this national birthright, we are today denying our fellow citizens in Hawaii many of the same prerogatives refused our forefathers by George III.

TAX PAYMENTS

In 1957 the Hawaiians paid over $150 million in Federal taxes, a larger total than several of the existing States, but Hawaii had no representation in Congress to vote either on how much tax should be collected or upon how the money should be spent.

In time of war, Hawaiians shoulder arms with the rest of us, yet they cannot vote for the President who shapes their foreign policy, or for representatives in Congress who together hold the purse strings over their defense.

To remedy these inequities, the people of Hawaii want statehood. They are tired of standing, hat in hand, at the door of our Union.

But what we must understand is this: if we refuse to let them further in, they will, in due course, demand to be let further out.

That we actually face a choice between these alternatives, my recent visit in Hawaii has convinced me.

There, I was privileged, as one of five members of Congress from the Interior Committees of both Houses, to conduct a joint investigation of the statehood question.

I talked with hundreds of Hawaiians from all walks of life. I listened to every argument, pro and con.

The consensus of this opinion, together with the most current information we could gather about social, economic, and political conditions in Hawaii, left me strongly persuaded the islands are ready for statehood, and we'd best admit them now.

FOR STATEHOOD

There is no doubt but what the vast majority of Hawaiians favor statehood. Even before Pearl Harbor, a plesbiscite showed the population endorsing statehood by a margin of two to one.

Since then, support for statehood has steadily grown stronger. In 1950, a proposed Hawaii State constitution was approved by the people of the Territory by a vote of more than 3 to 1.

Today, I would judge that the Hawaiians want statehood fully as much as did the Alaskans, who a short 4 months ago, proved their sentiments when five out of six voted to ratify the bill admitting Alaska as the 49th State.

DESERVING CASE

The proponents of Hawaiian statehood believe their case just as deserving as was that of Alaska. Indeed, the islands' economy is far more developed.

Sugar and pineapple are produced in abundance by the best paid fieldworkers in the world. The export of Kona coffee is increasing.

On the big island of Hawaii itself, the 300,000-acre Parker Ranch is next to the world's largest for Herefords, while to every island the tourists come in burgeoning numbers, beckoned by the gentle trade winds, in quest of the dazzling beaches and inviting waters.

Hawaii, for all its tropical beauty, is bustling and prosperous. No one can charge it with being a poor relation.

MELTING POT

It is true that Hawaii is the melting pot of the Pacific. The people are a polyglot mixture of native Hawaiian, Caucasian, Japanese, Filipinos, and Chinese, and the crosses between.

But it is also true that Hawaiian life and culture, though it clings naturally to many happy phrases, songs, and customs out of its colorful past, is nevertheless essentially American.

The cities, the stores, the homes, streets, and schools, all bear the unmistakable stamp of the United States.

In fact, anyone from southeastern Idaho, accustomed to a tabernacle in his neighborhood, would not feel a bit estranged in Hawaii.

One of the most striking tabernacles I have ever seen is in the center of Honolulu, and on the windward side of Oahu there is located a Latter-day Saints temple fully as impressive as that in Idaho Falls.

Nearby, 20 newly completed buildings on a 100-acre tract mark the site of the $3½ million Latter-day Saints College of Hawaii.

MANY TALKS

These are but a few glimpses gleaned from many I gathered during the inquiry we made in Hawaii.

We met with public officials and private citizens alike, with teachers and students, with judges and housewives.

We talked with businessmen and labor leaders. I had a morning's conference, in private, with the presidents of the Big Five, interests that were once opposed to statehood but now favored.

When we were through I came away determined to work hard for Hawaiian statehood in this coming session of Congress. Already a Commonwealth Party has been activated in Hawaii.

COMMONWEALTHERS

I talked with several of its leaders, who would like to see Hawaii set loose from the United States, absolved of all Federal taxes, and granted full rights of self-government, while the people retained for themselves American citizenship and the continued protection of the American flag.

Patterned after the British system, the commonwealth idea is alien to our American tradition of building one nation, rather than a loose-knit empire.

Today, this Commonwealth Party is small, but if statehood is refused to Hawaii, it will grow rapidly.

I shall not forget the parting shot of one prominent commonwealth proponent.

"Senator," he said to me, "right now, the people of these islands want statehood.

"If you refuse it, they will turn to our solution, and the time will come when you will have to recognize the independent Commonwealth of Hawaii."

To us on the mainland, facing westward toward an Asia awakening from its slumbers, Hawaii is much too important, not to be made an inseparable part of the United States.

Truth Must Prevail for Krebiozen

OF

HON. ROLAND V. LIBONATI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. LIBONATI. Mr. Speaker, I have had hundreds of requests for copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 104, part 15, pages 19745–19746, on the subject "Truth Must Prevail for Krebiozen." There have also been hundreds of requests for the material inserted, by me, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on the dates hereinafter listed in the aforesaid article.

In view of the great importance of the public interest in this issue and the fact that nothing has been done, to date, although conferences are presently being perfected between the U.S. Public Health Service and Dr. J. R. Heller, Director of the National Cancer Institute, and the Krebiozen Research Foundation, and Dr. Andrew C. Ivy, the research adviser of the Foundation, on the proposal of Senator PAUL DOUGLAS, of Illinois, giving Krebiozen a fair test, as set out on the floor of the U.S. Senate in August 1958, I hereby acquiesce to this request of hundreds of Americans who are acquainted with the same, by republishing the remarks made on August 25, 1958, touching upon this important subject.

TRUTH MUST PREVAIL FOR KREBIOZEN

(Extension of remarks of Hon. ROLAND V. LIBONATI, of Illinois, in the House of Representatives, Saturday, August 23, 1958)

Mr. LIBONATI. Mr. Speaker, the story of Krebiozen is a sad one, and by their unfounded opposition, several past officials of the American Medical Association have been guilty of heinous actions against a great scientist in the medical profession, Dr. Andrew C. Ivy, who presently holds the high position of distinguished professor of physiology and head of the Department of Clinical Science of the University of Illinois College of Medicine. Because of the actions of these men, Dr. Ivy lost his position as vice president of the University of Illinois, as well as his membership in the Chicago Medical Society.

A true scientist is a man who seeks the truth, and Dr. Andrew C. Ivy exemplifies that type of man. In his experimentations with 250 other physicians, all members of the AMA, he has proved that there is biological activity in the use of this drug.

Dr. Stevan Durovic and his brother, Marko Durovic, have spent large sums of their own and their friends' money in Argentina in the development of the discovery of Krebiozen as well as thousands of dollars to the Krebiozen Foundation, to place the drug at the disposal of cancer victims, terminal cases, who were doomed to die.

Personally, I am well acquainted with the whole story in view of the fact that I acted as vice chairman of the committee and the commission, duly appointed by the Illinois Legislature, to conduct an inquiry to determine whether or not there was a conspiracy to prevent freedom of research at the University of Illinois, a tax-supported institution. A great deal of testimony given by many expert witnesses at those hearings proved beyond a doubt that false reports were released to the public by medical stooges of the AMA to destroy public confidence in the scientific findings conducted by Dr. Ivy and his fellow medics. This subject was in controversy for a period of 5 years, and still continues today in spite of the reports that have been released showing favorable results in certain phases of cancer study listed in the reports made by those individual doctors on their own cases.

The subject matter and testimony, together with conclusions thereon, were masterfully presented in the two books written by Mr. Herbert Bailey, "K-Krebiozen, Key to Cancer?" published in 1955, and "A Matter of Life or Death" recently published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, a concern that is very selective on printing any books, and especially those touching on scientific subjects, as to their value and veracity.

I am very pleased to note that the very distinguished Senator, PAUL H. DOUGLAS, of Illinois, being a person of substantial reliability in dealing with matters of public import, has advanced proposals for controlled tests for Krebiozen. He has every reason to be concerned in view of the fact that he has studied this question thoroughly. It is to his credit that he deals with the subject with a highly constructive sense of justice. He avers that mistakes were made by both the AMA and the scientists interested in the Krebiozen study, and yet he does not lose the mental grasp that there is a high sense of public obligation to be considered and, therefore, feels that in view of the favorable reports of the doctors working with Krebiozen, the merits of the drug should be inquired into officially on a purely scientific basis, to determine its medicinal value for public approval.

Senator PAUL H. DOUGLAS is a man of important stature in America. His background is one of high intellectual training as a professor in our colleges and universities. He shows no dispositon to dillydally with words, but gets at the meat of the problem and presents a complete picture of the controversy and its shortcomings.

His stand should be considered by the AMA as a warning that if they persist in their present attitude to belittle and devaluate the results and published findings in the experiments presently being conducted, that there is no question that the public health services and the National Institues of Health will be drawn into the picture through congressional enactment in the nature of a thorough investigation of this subject.

I stand firmly behind Senator PAUL H. DOUGLAS in his position in this matter and, unless something is done to remedy the present unfortunate standoff situation preventing an authentic test of Krebiozen, I will proceed in the 86th Congress, God granting my presence, to introduce a resolution to investigate those elements that are preventing the carrying out of such a test, on the ground that the public interest demand such action. It is fundamental that a conspiracy to prevent scientific research is in itself within the congressional prerogative to protect the welfare of the people of the United States.

No organization can defy or deny the right of justice to be meted out to honest men and their works, especially in this case, directly affecting thousands of unfortunates, who die every year with great suffering and at great cost to their families, or the charitable institutions which are established throughout the land for this cause.

I am warning the American Medical Association at this time, as I did before in the Illinois State Assembly, to pay heed to Dr. Ivy's appeal for fair play and give Dr. Andrew C. Ivy a fair chance to prove what he contends is of benefit to mankind.

The Chicago Daily Tribune article touching on the Krebiozen proposal, by Senator DOUGLAS, appearing in that paper's issue of August 23, 1958, follows:

"SENATOR DOUGLAS PROPOSES TEST FOR KREBIOZEN

WASHINGTON, August 22.—A secret scientific test of the merits of Krebiozen as a cure for cancer was proposed in the Senate Friday by Senator PAUL DOUGLAS, Democrat, of Illinois.

"DOUGLAS said in a Senate speech that the public is bewildered by the conflicting statements regarding the preparation. Dr. Andrew C. Ivy has reported Krebiozen to be helpful, DOUGLAS said, while the American Medical Association has denounced it and the National Research Council has found on the basis of the AMA report that there is no evidence of curative or palliative effects from use of the drug.

"DOUGLAS called for tests to be conducted by the United States Public Health Service and the National Institutes of Health. Under DOUGLAS' plan the Institutes would conduct a sample test upon 200 more or less terminal cancer cases of patients who had applied to the Institutes for help.

"ONE HUNDRED WOULD GET KREBIOZEN

"Of these, 100 cases would be treated with Krebiozen while the other 100 would be given mineral oil instead.

"The Institutes and Ivy would choose an outstanding biostatistician who would help design the tests and would be the only person knowing which patients had received Krebiozen treatment.

"The lists of those who had and had not received the treatment would be placed in a sealed envelope in a safe, to be opened later by the biostatistician and two advisers, Dr. Ivy and a representative of the medical profession chosen by the Public Health Service. The advisers would not know the identity of the patients.

"WOULD REVIEW HISTORIES

"At the conclusion of the test-treatment period, the case histories of all 200 in the test would be submitted to Ivy, and he would be asked to identify the 100 cases in which Krebiozen had been administered. DOUGLAS said Ivy would naturally select those showing the most improvement or pain alleviation.

"The sealed envelope would then be taken from the safe and the lists would be compared with Ivy's list. A comparative study would be made of the cases of the patients who did and did not receive Krebiozen.

"The degree of agreement or disagreement between Ivy's list and the other lists would then be announced.

"WOULD PUBLISH FINDINGS

"Finally, if Ivy requested it, the Public Health Service would examine records compiled by Ivy of other cases treated with Krebiozen, appraise the results, and publish the findings.

"DOUGLAS said the organized medical profession disparaged the discoveries of Pasteur, Lister, and others, and sought to defame the discoverers."

Address by Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy Before the Women's Forum on National Security

OF
HON. ROBERT L. F. SIKES
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 15, 1959

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted me to extend my remarks and include extraneous material, I request that the attached address by Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy be reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

CHANGING DIMENSIONS IN NATIONAL SECURITY

"Changing Dimensions in National Security"—I wonder if you realize how very apt such a theme is for your forum discussion. In these days of exploding technology, change is the one constant dimension in national security.

Sometimes your Secretary of Defense feels that the component elements of our national security have all the stability of ladies' fashions—a subject with which each of you is concerned and quite obviously well informed. You know, for instance, better than I, that strange things happen from season to season to such items as necklines, waistlines, and hemlines. Once in a very great while you ladies can rise up and exercise some control over the changing dimensions of fashion—as witness your boycott and the consequent sack of the sack and the demise of the trapeze.

Changes in weapons come upon us even more unexpectedly than changes in fashions. They are also apt to be more radical and fantastically expensive. In fact new elements in defense frequently arrive on the scene just after we've made a huge investment in yesterday's weapons' style. This upsets the defense budget keepers just as a sudden change in fashion raises havoc with your clothes budget. But you have options. If you don't like a new fashion you can rise up en masse and reject it collectively. In my experience as a husband and the father of two girls who are now young women, this seldom happens but it is theoretically possible. Or, you can choose to ignore the new fashion for economic reasons and wear last year's model. This also seldom happens. Again—I'm speaking as a husband.

In the serious business of defense, unlike the world of fashion, we do not have the option of freezing styles in weapons nor can we reject new weapons for either esthetic or economic reasons. In fact, we must carry on unceasing research deliberately to outmode what was invented and built just yesterday—however uneconomic such a practice may be. We must, in short, seek to change dimensions and catapult into new and untried areas. In the business of defense the cow has already jumped over the moon. Almost anything can happen in the future. Ask Dr. Wernher von Braun when he speaks to you tomorrow.

He can testify also to the impact of a vast dimensional change on a brand new, freshly caught Secretary of Defense to be. On the night of October 4, 1957, I was attending a dinner at the Army's Redstone Arsenal at Huntsville, Ala. It was one of the last stops on a month-long orientation trip I had made to military installations across the country. A group of us were discussing the changing dimensions in warfare. While we were talking about changes which would be brought about by guided missiles Doctor von Braun was called to the telephone. He returned, visibly excited, to inform us that the Russians had just announced the successful launching of an earth satellite. To the three standard dimensions of warfare—land, sea, and air—a fourth had been added, space. And this, just 5 days before I was to assume office as Secretary of Defense.

Yes, in the 16 months I have been in office there has been a steady and rapid evolution in our defense posture. But, while the dimensions of national security have changed, the overall superiority of U.S. military power in relation to any potential aggressor has not and must not change. While we cannot always be first with every link that makes the chain of our defense—we must always be first in the sum total strength of all the links. That is where we are tonight and that is where the Department of Defense is determined to remain.

Last September I expressed to the American Legion Convention in Chicago:

"Fullest confidence that the United States is ahead of the Soviet Union in overall strength in being * * * now."

I wish to bring that statement up to date by repeating it to you tonight. And, I wish to add that the Department of Defense, fully supported by the President, has no intention of allowing this condition to change. We believe that our planned military programs are adequate to achieve this result for the foreseeable future. You and the country may be assured that our programs will keep pace with what our official intelligence warns us any enemy of the United States may have in the future. Our budgets support military programs tailored to produce what that intelligence tells us we must have.

Americans have always shown themselves capable of both great effort and great sacrifice in times of national danger. Our whole history as a Nation testifies that our people need only to be informed and aroused to take any action necessary for national survival. I am told by Mrs. Gunn that the very purpose of this forum is to inform and arouse this representative group about the threat to our security. I'm glad that Mrs. Gunn used the word "aroused" and not I. As the loving husband of Mrs. McElroy and speaking as a veteran of 30 years of marriage I hold with Charles Dickens that—

"There is something about a roused woman * * * which few men like to provoke."

I agree, however, that the total resources of America can never begin to be marshaled unless the women of this country are kept informed of the problems facing us as a Nation. You need only be convinced that everything you hold dear—your home, your security, your children—calls to you for help. Victory in war, hot or cold is not possible without your support, it's as simple as that.

Now let me tell you something about the changing dimensions of the world I live in these days—the Department of Defense. I entered the Pentagon with the Space Age. For those engaged in the business of defense, entering space is vastly different from the use of new and unproved weapons in the known elements of land, sea, and air. True, such weapons as the airplane and the submarine changed the dimensions of warfare over the years but the changes came about by a process of evolution. Weapons of the space age—and I refer specifically to long range missiles—have caused and will continue to cause a revolution in the art of warfare, with all its violent side effects.

We must devise whole new categories of weapons both offensive and defensive. Thus, you can see not only have the dimensions of new weapons changed but the very benchmarks—the very points of reference from which measurements may be made—have shifted.

Let me, at this point, give you just one example to illustrate what I mean. Up until a very few decades ago it took weeks for a weapon to be launched against America because it had to come by sea—then with the advent of the long range airplane the time for possible warning was reduced to hours. Then, suddenly, as the guided missile burst upon us we found ourselves up against one of the most fantastic defensive requirements ever placed upon military technology.

Instead of weeks or hours the missile will allow us something on the order of 30 minutes for defensive action. The actual number of minutes will depend on the effectiveness of our warning systems—systems which must be redesigned to meet the threat of a missile traveling 25 times as fast as the speed of sound. To devise a weapons system which will in the time required, detect, track, fire at, and destroy, such a small fast moving target, is a challenge military technology must meet.

Our scientists and engineers have dedicated themselves to this task. They are spurred on by the knowledge that technology has given to the offensive missile a striking and destructive power of well over one hundred thousand times the bomb which we knew in World War II as the "blockbuster." You can now understand why I say the benchmarks from which dimensions are measured have shifted.

In any commercial enterprise there are six basic elements known in management studies as the Classic M's. They are machines, men, materials, methods, money, and markets. Markets we don't have to worry about in the defense business. But the other five we must deal with to accomplish our objectives and their dimensions are constantly changing. Let's look at machines first.

Last year we were told by General Betts from the Office of the Director of Guided Missiles that technology in this day and age does not stand still—and that was the understatement of 1958. Later in this year's forum you will see and hear a dramatic story by Mr. Joe Powell of the Department of Defense on the "Collapse of Time" and the effect of the stampede of technology on our machines of war.

I've already told you about our defensive problems with missiles. They stagger the imagination of even a scientist. Let me just mention some of our more serious management problems with other weapons, submarines, for example. This is a weapons delivery system where we now enjoy a qualitative and technological superiority. We know that in less than 2 years our atomic submarines will be able to hurl powerful ballistic missiles many hundreds of miles. They will create grave problems in detection and defense for any potential enemy of the United States. But Russian submarines likewise pose serious defensive problems for us. While we believe they do not now have atomic submarines we must assume that whatever we have the enemy is capable of producing—sometimes much faster than we thought possible.

So, the increasing complexity and destructiveness of modern machines of war create new and grave management problems. You have to know just when and how long to go along with an old weapons system and just when to put your money and faith in a successor system. And, of course, they must overlap for a while. This is not unlike buying the newest style before you know whether it will take. However, in the case of weapons, you bet your very life. The security of the country may hang in the balance on right decisions. Machines are indeed a changing dimension of national security.

The second M—materials—are likewise a defense management headache. No longer can we depend alone on the common materials of other wars. Excursions into outer space and deep under the sea call for exotic metals and plastics, for new and better fuels and for more powerful explosives in smaller packages. One of the major projects of the Advanced Research Projects Agency of the Department of Defense, for instance, is the development of a more powerful solid fuel needed for our third generation intercontinental ballistic missiles. Defense management is solving this problem and adding another new dimension to national security. In doing so we have devised new methods—the third classic M of management.

ARPA, the Advanced Research Projects Agency I mentioned a moment ago, is in itself a new organizational method established by management for the purpose of advancing our knowledge in—to name just a few of its projects—the field of missiles, anti-missile missiles and military space vehicles. Set up to handle advanced research and development programs, ARPA utilizes the best brains of the university and industry. It focuses particular skills on special problems whose solution is vital to America. Old methods of research are too slow to cope with the pace of technology. Your defense management must and is finding new ones.

The fourth M is manpower. The research and development, production and operation of new weapons systems puts space age strains on our manpower resources. We must utilize the best scientific and engineering brains the country now possesses in research, development and production. At the same time we must take steps as a Nation to educate and train the scientists, the engineers, and the skilled workers of the future. Democracy's future demands and depends on an unending supply of well-educated citizens—educated, that is, to cope with all changing dimensions of the space age.

Mere numbers of men used to be a measurement of this Management M. Today skillpower and brainpower have had to make radical improvement in efficient use of manpower. A guided-missile ship, for instance, with a crew of 1,000 men but no skilled electronic technicians, wouldn't have any fighting power. The same is true for other modern weapons systems of our Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marines.

Therefore defense management needs better educated and better trained soldiers, sailors and airmen to operate the complex machines of war devised by our scientists and engineers. Technology has multiplied the penalty for stupid or careless error 10,000 fold. The error of yesterday's gunsmith could cost us only a musket or two. The error of today's technician could cost us a bomber worth, literally, its weight in gold.

Improving our educational system to cope with the new demands of technology is an all-hands, all-American task. The average citizen can't invent fuels, build missiles or fly an airplane but he can and should find out what's needed in the field of education and take steps to insure that his community fills the needs.

Now, we come to the fifth and last great M of management, money, a problem that affects all of us. I imagine if I were able to listen to the conversation of any one of you ladies for a few days I would be bound to hear you say, "Everything costs more these days." That's true of clothes, food, automobiles, houses and luxuries. It's also true of the materials and machines of defense. We buy everything you buy, we feed, clothe and house millions of people. Our costs have gone up, too. That's tough enough on our budget. But the cost of military hardware, unlike the ordinary commodities we buy, didn't go up just a little—it blasted off into space.

If an automobile cost 50 times as much today as it did in 1945 you'd be shocked and probably decide to keep your old one. Yet as the President pointed out in his state of the Union message today's fighter aircraft are 50 times more expensive than the fighters of World War II and we can't use the old ones. Our Polaris firing submarines will cost 15 to 20 times more than the conventional subs of the last war.

Of course, the weapons we buy at these increased prices are much more powerful. Indeed, their effectiveness oftentimes goes up in much greater ratio than their cost. We must have these weapons, regardless of cost. But in buying them defense management strives to spend your money in the most efficient manner possible.

Let me emphasize that money is important to defense but it's no panacea. You can't purchase prepackaged defense. It's the job of defense management to translate the amount of money needed into a winning combination of men, methods, materials, and machines. I think we have that combination.

In addition to the changing dimensions in national security brought about by the five great M's of management, we are always conscious of another M looking over our shoulder. This M stands for moments—we know you can't spend deficit time and you can't borrow minutes. Our potential enemies have exactly the same amount of time we have. He who uses his moments most wisely will be the winner in the cold or hot war of the future.

The framework I have set for your forum discussions bears principally on the problems of military defense. I would not want you for one moment to think that changing military dimensions are the only ones that are important to national security. The last few years have seen tremendous changes in the dimensions of the economic competition between the nations of the free world and the Communist bloc. These years have not lessened either, the changing political and psychological pressures. To these changes we must be responsive. We must, in fact, continue to develop political, psychological, and economic programs of our own—programs which are as appealing as our military might is unassailable.

America's military might is for defense not aggression. The dimensions of your Military Establishment keep changing only to make it clear to any aggressor than an attack on us would be foolhardy.

America's defense will remain geared to reality—we will keep pace with technology. We will keep America's military strength superior to that of any nation which threatens us.

We will—that is, if we—and I mean all of us—take care to insure that the dimensions of our minds keep pace with the dimensions of our problems. Our mental dimensions represent our ability to understand the problems ahead and our determination, with God's grace, to conquer those problems.

Ladies, your forum represents citizenship at its best—informed citizens are the priceless ingredients of a democracy—our democracy in particular. I salute you and join you in your efforts to keep America strong.

SENATE

SATURDAY, JANUARY 17, 1959

Rev. Thomas W. Sumners, rector, St. John the Divine Episcopal Church, Houston, Tex., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who has given us this good land for our heritage; we humbly beseech Thee that we may always prove ourselves a people mindful of Thy favor and glad to do Thy will. Bless our land with honorable industry, sound learning, and pure manners. Save us from violence, discord, and confusion; from pride and arrogancy, and from every evil way. Defend our liberties, and fashion into one united people the multitudes brought hither out of many kindreds and tongues. Endue with the spirit of wisdom those to whom in Thy name we entrust the authority of government, that there may be justice and peace at home, and that, through obedience to Thy law, we may show forth Thy praise among the nations of the earth. In the time of prosperity, fill our hearts with thankfulness; and in the day of trouble, suffer not our trust in Thee to fail.

Guide and direct him who presides over the Senate, that he may rule with fairness and diligence. Inspire with Thy love and gratitude the leader of the majority party and him of the minority, that they, through gratitude to Thee for the revelation of Thy love, may lead Thy people in accordance with Thy holy will, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I am proud and delighted to be present today. It was a pleasure to receive the inspiration and spiritual warmth which came from the devout prayer delivered by a great and good man of God, a devoted Texan, and a fine American. Dr. Sumners is a man dedicated in mind, in body, and in spirit to his church, to his State, and to his Nation; and I know of no finer thing that could be said of any man.

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, all Members of the Senate were moved by the deeply spiritual invocation and opening prayer given by the Reverend Thomas W. Sumners, of Houston, Tex. His brother, the Reverend Charles Sumners, serves the Episcopal Church in my home city of Austin, Tex.; it is the oldest church in that city.

These two brothers have great influence on the spiritual life, and thereby, on the broader aspects of living, including the educational life, of the State of Texas, and likewise on the modes of living and the lives of many persons who occupy commanding positions in the life of the State. It has been a great privilege to me to be in the Chamber to hear the prayer of Dr. Sumners today.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, January 14, 1959, was dispensed with.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

REPORT ON OPERATIONS UNDER INTERNATIONAL CULTURAL EXCHANGE AND TRADE FAIR PARTICIPATION ACT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the provisions of section 9 of Public Law 860 of the 84th Congress, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the fourth semiannual report of operations under the International Cultural Exchange and Trade Fair Participation Act of 1956.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 15, 1959.

REPORT OF NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 507, 81st Congress, I transmit herewith the Eighth Annual Report of the National Science Foundation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1958.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 17, 1959.

EXPRESSION OF SENSE OF THE SENATE CONCERNING THE MAKING OF LOANS BY RURAL ELECTRIFICATION ADMINISTRATION—RESOLUTION

Through inadvertence, the following resolution (S. Res. 21) expressing the sense of the Senate concerning the making of loans by the Rural Electrification Administration, submitted by Mr. AIKEN (for himself and other Senators) was omitted from the RECORD of January 14, 1959:

Whereas the Comptroller General of the United States in decisions (B–134138) dated July 21, 1958, and October 15, 1958, in questioning the validity of a portion of a loan made by the Rural Electrification Administration to the Central Iowa Power Cooperative, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, interpreted the Rural Electrification Act, in the first decision, as not authorizing loans for service to persons who are actually without central-station service if they are located in an area generally served by a power supplier; and, in the second decision, as not authorizing loans to serve persons, in fact without service, if they are located "on", "along side of", or "within a reasonable distance" of a line of a power supplier; and

Whereas the Acting Secretary of Agriculture, in a letter dated August 7, 1958, to the Comptroller General, requested reconsideration of the first decision because it was inconsistent with the express provisions of the Rural Electrification Act, its legislative history, congressional understanding, uniform administrative practice, and legal interpretations and opinions during the 22 years following enactment of the Rural Electrification Act and, by letter dated October 29, 1958, informed the Comptroller General that these objections were equally applicable to the interpretation of the Rural Electrification Act expressed in the second decision and could therefore not be agreed to; and

Whereas the interpretation of the Rural Electrification Act proposed by the Comptroller General in either of his decisions, if it had been applied to the rural electrification program from its inception, would have prevented that program's great contributions to agriculture and the rural areas of the Nation and to the national economy generally and, if now applied, would drastically curtail the future great potential of the rural electrification program: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Rural Electrification Act of 1936, as amended, continue to be interpreted to authorize the making of loans for the construction of facilities to bring electric service to persons who are in fact not receiving central-station service, and to continue to serve those who are presently being served, in accordance with the Acting Secretary of Agriculture's letters of August 7, 1958, and October 29, 1958, to the Comptroller General, and that the proposed limitation on the authority of the Rural Electrification Administration introduced in the Comptroller General's decisions of July 21, 1958, and October 15, 1958, be rejected as contrary to the clear intent of the Congress.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO TUESDAY

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, after consultation with the distinguished minority leader, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourns today, it adjourn to convene at noon on Tuesday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to my friend, the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am quite grateful that there will be a session on Tuesday, which will mark the sixth anniversary of the first inauguration of the present President of the United States. I should like to indicate now that on that day we would like to take a little time to testify suitably regarding that fact.

LIMITATION OF DEBATE DURING MORNING HOUR

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I make the usual request that during the transaction of routine business statements be limited to 3 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZATION FOR CONSIDERATION OF AMENDMENT OF RESOLUTION RELATING TO SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order for the Senate to consider an amendment to Resolution 58 of the 81st Congress, with regard to the Select Committee on Small Business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I send to the desk the resolution, for which I request immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 25) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the first paragraph of Senate Resolution 58 of the 81st Congress, as amended, be further amended to read as follows:

"That there is hereby created a select committee to be known as the Committee on Small Business and to consist of seventeen Senators to be appointed in the same manner and at the same time as the chairman and members of the standing committees of the Senate at the beginning of each Congress."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, just to make the legislative record, let me say that when the Select Committee on Small Business was first established, the rule provided for 13 members. Subsequently, the resolution was amended, in 1955, to provide that they should be appointed at the same time and in the same manner as the members of standing committees of the Senate.

This resolution conformed to the amended rule, and only increases the membership from 13 to 17.

I discussed the resolution with the majority leader; and I assure him that it is quite agreeable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the resolution was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

DEATH OF ARTHUR E. COOK

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I think I should call attention to the fact that yesterday a very familiar figure in the Capitol passed away. I refer to "Gus" Cook. I think every Member of the House and every Member of the Senate for many, many years knew him.

"Gus" Cook was one of the first persons I met when I became a Member of the House in 1933. He started in a very humble way in the service of the Congress, and continued to serve here for nearly 60 years.

Mr. President, 60 years of service in itself is a great testimony; but it is even greater when one measures the fidelity of "Gus" Cook to his job and the multitudes of friends he made as he went along. He was extremely helpful to every Member, and gave most freely of his knowledge, in order to see that the necessary conveniences were provided, so that the working place where we spend so much of our time is accommodated to the responsibilities which confront us.

I know that he leaves a legion of friends who mourn his passing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the distinguished minority leader yield to me?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I should like to join the distinguished minority leader in his eloquent tribute to the late "Gus" Cook, who served us so faithfully for many years.

I know of no public servant who was more helpful or more dedicated than was "Gus" Cook. It seems, Mr. President, that I can see him now, walking into the Speaker's room, to line up the Members to greet the President and to escort him to the Chamber.

Ever since I came to Washington, some 25 years ago, I have been rather intimately associated with this good, great, kind, and genuine man. I join the distinguished minority leader and "Gus" Cook's legion of friends in regretting his passing.

He was always kindly, always helpful, and always dedicated to his duty. He will be sorely missed.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the distinguished minority leader yield to me?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the distinguished senior Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, a long time ago I became a Member of the other branch of the Congress. It was then that I first met "Gus" Cook and we have been friends ever since. No one else will ever know every nook, corner, and cranny of the Capitol as well as he did. Whenever anything became out of order in the old building, he knew how to fix it.

I greatly admired his constant good humor. He and I had between us a joke which he invented—I being the senior Member of the Congress, and he being the senior member of all the employees. Some persons would call us "deans"; and "Gus" would want to know when he and I would get together to do some "deaning." That opportunity now is past. I sincerely regret his departure.

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the senior Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. President, I should like to join my colleagues in a few words of tribute and expressions of sorrow at the passing of our friend. He was known to all of us as "Gus" Cook.

When I first came to the House of Representatives, 25 years ago, I soon found that "Gus" Cook was my friend, as indeed he was a friend of all of us. He was a man of dedication, a man who was, if anything or any human being could be, a fixture of the Capitol Building.

As the distinguished President pro tempore has said, "Gus" Cook always had a smile and a pleasant word; he always wanted to stop and exchange greetings while he was constantly carrying out his assigned duties and pushing himself, I believe, in his later years, even beyond his physical capacity to do so. While there is so much more I would like to say about "Gus," so many things that have come to my mind since I learned, only last night, of his passing after a long and useful life, at this time I shall have to content myself with saying, " 'Gus,' we shall all miss you. Your place in our hearts and in this building, the Capitol of our country, will never be completely filled by anyone else. You have been a good and faithful servant."

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

A letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the use of certified mail for the transmission or service of matter required by certain Federal laws to be transmitted or served by registered mail, and for other purposes (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A resolution adopted by the American Association of State Highway Officials, at San Francisco, Calif., relating to a defense highway system in the Territory of Hawaii; to the Committee on Public Works.

CLOSING OF NAVAL AIR STATION REPAIR FACILITY IN NUECES COUNTY, TEX.—RESOLUTION OF TEXAS HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, I recently had inserted in the RECORD a statement and a group of resolutions from Corpus Christi, Tex., pertaining to the order by Secretary of the Navy Thomas Gates, Jr., that the overhaul and repair department of the naval air station located in Nueces County, Tex., has been ordered closed.

I have also requested the Secretary of the Navy make proportional cutbacks in all overhaul and repair departments, rather than the entire closing of this facility—a move which would put almost 3,500 persons out of work.

In further support of my proposal and opposition to the arbitrary move by the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. President, I request unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a special resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Texas introduced by State Representatives Bridges, Glusing, Hale, Parish, and Woolsey, and passed by that body on January 15, 1959.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Armed Services, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House Special Resolution 14

Whereas by order of the Secretary of the Navy, the Honorable Thomas Gates, Jr., the overhaul and repair department of the naval air station located in Nueces County, Tex., has been ordered closed; and

Whereas this order, directed to this one particular area, will directly affect the jobs of some 3,400 civil service workers and probably another 10,000 persons, including the families of these workers, thereby seriously affecting the entire economy of this particular area of Texas; and

Whereas this order came as a sudden and staggering blow without any warning which might have allowed the adjustment of the economy to ease the serious financial damage to the individuals of the area affected; and

Whereas it is not the intent of this legislature to oppose the economy move on the part of our Government but rather to express our feeling that an order such as this should be made applicable to all areas on an equal basis: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Texas, That the Honorable Dwight D. Eisenhower, President of the United States of America, be respectfully requested to recommend to the Secretary of the Navy that he reconsider this order; that as a countermeasure he recommended a 10-percent cutback on all overhaul and repair units of all naval air stations of the U.S. Navy rather than concentrating on this one particular unit in Nueces County, Tex.

WAGGONER LOW,
Speaker of the House.

I hereby certify that House Special Resolution 14 was adopted by the House on January 15, 1959.

DOROTHY HALLMAN,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. CASE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I present a resolution adopted by the Board of Commissioners of the City of Cape May, N.J., favoring the enactment of legislation to change the Labor Day holiday from the first to the second Monday in September. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION: LABOR DAY HOLIDAY

Be it resolved by the Board of Commissioners of the City of Cape May, recognizing the importance of an extended summer season, which supplies the greater part of revenue for resort towns and cities, That it is for the best interests of the city of Cape May that the Labor Day holiday be changed from the first Monday in September to the second Monday in September in each calendar year; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Governor of the State of New Jersey, the members of the State legislature and all U.S. Congressmen and U.S. Senators, urging the passage of Federal legislation changing the date of the aforesaid national holiday; and be it further

Resolved, That this resolution by itself shall not change the date of the aforesaid national holiday but that the same shall be offered by the city of Cape May to the above-named officials, urging Federal legislation which will change the date of the aforesaid national holiday as prescribed by law.

Presented by Kennedy A. Hickman.
Seconded by Wm. A. Pambood.
Passed: December 30, 1958.

RESOLUTIONS OF ORGANIZATIONS OF STATE OF NEW YORK

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I present, for appropriate reference, three resolutions adopted by organizations in the State of New York. I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were received, appropriately referred, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Committee on Armed Services:

"RESOLUTION OF MONROE COUNTY COUNCIL, VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES

"Whereas the membership of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States is composed entirely of veterans who served on foreign soil during time of war; and

"Whereas, having seen such service, we of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States dread and abhor war; and

"Whereas we of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States have long advocated strong defenses as a deterrent to war; and

"Whereas we have long advocated a strong stand against communism as a deterrent to war; and

"Whereas we have constantly advocated that all aggressors of the Communist combine be called to a halt in all efforts to expand communism, either by internal influences through sabotage and murder or through direct aggression; and

"Whereas a new Congress of the United States is about to be convened: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the members of the Monroe County Council, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, call upon the new Congress to take the necessary steps to assure us of building the world's most powerful Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Marine Corps, properly coordinated, to provide adequate national security with superior development of atomic, hydrogen, and ballistic weapons necessary to achieve and maintain U.S. leadership in preserving world peace; be it further

"Resolved, That we advocate a strong Reserve and National Guard program in proper balance to the Military Establishment and urging the continuance of the Selective Service Act as long as present world conditions exist; be it further

"Resolved, That we urge a strong, well-financed civil defense program; be it further

"Resolved, That we again declare ourselves as militantly opposed to communism in all its forms and to any form of world government or federation which would diminish the sovereignty of the United States; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to each of the Congressmen of this area.

"Submitted by

"W. RAYMOND NOLL,
"County Commander.

"Unanimously approved at a regular meeting of the Monroe County Council on Tuesday, January 6, 1959.

"W. RAYMOND NOLL,
"Commander.
"S. F. MAINE, Adjutant."

To the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"Whereas the International Brotherhood of Teamsters has defied not only the law but sound and long-established public policy by an arrant move to picket police headquarters and other police precincts in order to force the unionization of New York City's Police Department; and

"Whereas Mayor Robert F. Wagner and Police Commissioner Stephen P. Kennedy have courageously denounced this outrageous threat to the maintenance of the safety and security of the people and the preservation of strict discipline among those entrusted with the police powers of this community: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the New York Board of Trade, Inc., does highly commend Mayor Robert F. Wagner and Police Commissioner Stephen P. Kennedy for their forthright rejection of the brazen attempt to unionize the police department, and thus indirectly control the police power, by the International Brotherhood of Teamsters and its New York Local No. 237; and be it further

"Resolved, That the New York Board of Trade recommends to the mayor and the police commissioner that they bar all further endeavors, by whomsoever undertaken, to establish a grievance system for the men of the department which in any way vitiates the authority of the police commissioner and the powers granted him by law, necessary to the preservation of the highest degree of discipline in the organization upon which rests the majesty of the law and the protection of our society; and be it further

"Resolved, That the New York Board of Trade does hereby commend the great majority of the officers and men of the New York City Department of Police for their fealty to their oath and the faithful discharge of their grave responsibilities; and be it further

"Resolved, That the New York Board of Trade call upon the Legislature of the State of New York and upon the Congress of the United States to cause an examination of the sufficiency of existing law applying hereto and to enact forthwith, if necessary, any amendments or new legislation needed to bar the affiliation, with any local or any national union labor organization, of any police force or any law enforcement agency; and be it further

"Resolved, That the New York Board of Trade hereby does pledge to Mayor Robert F. Wagner and Police Commissioner Stephen P. Kennedy, complete support in their most commendable effort to isolate the police department of this city from any loyalty except to the people of this city through their individual oaths of office; and be it further

"Resolved, That the New York Board of Trade does hereby call upon all of the citizens of the great city of New York to give their complete support to their mayor and police commissioner in their continuing resistance to the unionization of the members of the police department."

"Whereas the Niagara Frontier is in the throes of a prolonged critical unemployment situation adversely affecting every man, woman, and child in the area; and

"Whereas, according to the U.S. Department of Labor, this area has deteriorated from a class E to a class F labor market, indicative of a very serious percentage of unemployed people with only a discouraging future outlook; and

"Whereas the unemployment, public assistance, and welfare rolls continue their unabated upward trend; and

"Whereas other areas, by highlighting the problem and joining diverse groups within their community into a united effort, have successfully combated similar situations: Be it

"Resolved, That the leaders of industrial, civic, labor, fraternal, and charitable organizations, elected officials on city, county, State, and Federal levels, retail merchants and business associations, members of the clergy, chambers of commerce, and the family of every employed and unemployed person in the counties of Erie and Niagara protest vigorously the deplorable unemployment crisis in this area, and the inadequate measures taken to alleviate a situation that directly or indirectly adversely affects every person in Erie and Niagara Counties and the surrounding environs; further

"Resolved—

"1. That all aforementitoned persons, groups, and organizations mass their combined strength at a public rally to be held in the near future at the Memorial Auditorium in Buffalo, N.Y., for the express purpose of highlighting the economic blight which is affecting the aforementioned counties; and

"2. Request that our elected representatives on city, county, State, and Federal levels attend and address this rally relative to reporting what has been accomplished to date and suggesting other possible avenues of approach to our mutual problem; and

"3. That these elected representatives join forces in a completely bipartisan effort to effect a solution to this crisis and to request from the proper U.S. governmental agency that a survey team be sent into the Niagara Frontier to ascertain the reason or reasons for the complete lack of defense contracts and/or other types of employment in our community; and

"4. That we exhort these representatives to utilize every means at their command to seek additional defense and/or other Government contracts for our area industry.

"We the undersigned are in full accord and wholeheartedly subscribe to the sentiments expressed in the foregoing resolution:

"Jan H. Kopclyrm, Mayor; F. E. Primeau, Alderman; A. P. Lamke, Alderman; Michael Lesinowski, Alderman; A. F. Pagels, President of the Council; E. P. Maziarz, Alderman; Arnold C. James, Alderman; John F. Lukasik, Alderman."

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HICKENLOOPER in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

PROPOSED EMERGENCY LEGISLATION FOR DEPRESSED AREAS

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I am introducing today two bills to provide needed emergency legislation for the depressed areas of this Nation. Of course, I am thinking of the depressed areas of Kentucky in introducing these bills.

One bill would increase the supply and kinds of surplus foods distributed to the people of the depressed areas of our Nation, and provide a more adequate diet for thousands of persons in these areas who are actually hungry.

The second bill would follow a precedent which was established last year, and would authorize the apportionment of $100 million of the funds already appropriated by the Congress for highway construction in depressed areas in order to provide more employment opportunities to the people living in those areas.

We read that this country has made a substantial recovery from the recent recession, and that production and income are at or near an alltime high. In so doing we may overlook the fact that there still are depressed areas or surplus labor areas. Thousands of people are out of work, without money, in need of clothing and are living on meager supplies of food provided from the surplus food stocks of our Government.

I have personal knowledge of the truth of this statement. Last fall, on several visits to eastern Kentucky and other depressed areas of our State, I saw this situation at firsthand. Only yesterday Governor Chandler of Kentucky advised me that he had visited 17 counties in eastern Kentucky this week, and had found conditions steadily worsening, with thousands of people in dire need of food and clothing.

The first bill which I am introducing would amend Public Law 480 in respect to the priorities between the various surplus-disposal programs of the Department of Agriculture. I know Congress passed Public Law 480 at a time of full employment, and that we were thinking of selling our surplus food wherever we could. I must admit I was surprised and rather shocked when I learned yesterday, in looking over the law, that priorities are given to the sale and disposal of surplus food abroad, and that the last priority is to the people of this country. The bill which I am introducing would amend that law to provide that first priority in the disposal of our surplus food shall be to the needy and hungry people of our own country.

The first bill which I am introducing would also amend existing law in a second respect. We know that, under section 32 of the Act of August 24, 1935, 30 percent of the customs receipts of this country go into section 32 funds to encourage and develop domestic and foreign use of our agricultural products. Today there are $400 million to $500 million in that fund. My bill would direct the Secretary of Agriculture to expend $50 million between now and the end of the fiscal year, and $100 million in the next fiscal year, to buy the additional food necessary to provide an adequate diet in the school lunch programs for school children of the country, and to augment the very limited kinds of food distributed to needy families, which at present are restricted to certain Government-owned commodities without regard to the needs of our hungry people. These foods, such as dried beans, potatoes, cooking oil, canned fruits, pork shoulder and luncheon meat, dried eggs and peanut butter, if available, would provide a better diet for the thousands who are now dependent upon surplus foods provided by the Government. I point out again that the bill would give priority to supplying the needy people of our own country over those of all other countries.

The second bill—and I hope to talk to the Public Works Committee about it—follows the precedent set last year. Last year, as an antirecession measure, we authorized an additional $400 million apportionment of road funds to the States of the Nation. My bill would authorize the apportionment of $100 million to the States to be used in surplus labor areas.

We know there are many long-term programs being considered. The distinguished senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] last year introduced what has been called the depressed areas bill, of which I was a cosponsor along with many others, and which was passed by the Congress. I hope to be able, and will, support him in such an effort again this year. In the meantime, there are people out of work and starving.

The bills which I am introducing are designed to meet an immediate need in respect to providing food and employment to needy persons.

Mr. President, I intend to let these bills lie on the desk. I know my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. MORTON] is very much interested in this problem. I know the Senators from Illinois and West Virginia are interested. I hope they will study these bills and the need for them.

Mr. President, I ask that a statement I have prepared be included in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR COOPER

I have introduced today two bills to provide needed emergency legislation for the depressed areas of Kentucky, and similar areas throughout the Nation.

One bill would increase the supply of surplus food and provide a more adequate diet for thousands of people in these areas who are actually hungry. The second bill, authorizing $100 million for highway construction in depressed areas, would provide immediate employment opportunities to the people living in these areas.

The Nation as a whole has made a spectacular recovery from the recession of 1958. Both national production and total personnel income are at an alltime high today. Yet, it is a sad fact that in those areas of the United States which are termed depressed areas, thousands of people are out of work, without money, in need of clothes, and are living on meager supplies of food provided from the surplus food stocks of our Government. I know this is true. On several visits to eastern Kentucky last fall I saw this situation at firsthand. And only this week the Governor of Kentucky, the Honorable A. B. Chandler, advised me that he had visited 17 counties in eastern Kentucky and had found conditions steadily worsening, and thousands of people in dire need of food and clothing.

In Kentucky, as in other States, long-term plans which will help the economy of these areas are in progress. In Eastern Kentucky a dam is being built at Buckhorn. The construction of Fishtrap and Pound Reservoirs, in the Big Sandy River Valley, is being urged by all of us in the Congress at well as by the people of the area to protect the people of the Big Sandy Valley.

But every step in the development of flood protection facilities is fixed by law. These projects move slowly, they are in their nature long-term programs, and cannot give immediate help to the needy people of the depressed areas.

Last year the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], with other cosponsors, introduced depressed areas legislation for which I voted, and which I hope to cosponsor at this session of the Congress. Such legislation is needed, for it is directed at the basic long-range needs of areas of persistently high unemployment, and underemployment, such as exists in Kentucky. This program, and the existing rural development program, are needed and I shall give them my full support. But, as important as these long-range programs are, I know that unless immediate steps are taken to provide food and employment opportunities for people who are out of work, the injury to them and to the Nation will be irreparable. It is to make a beginning toward meeting immediate needs that I introduce bills today.

As I have said, the first bill would amend Public Law 480. Public Law 480 provides certain priorities in the disposal of surplus foods, including those held by the Government under its support price program. Being passed at a time when there was not the need in our own country that exists today, it gave priorities to the sale of food and to its disposal abroad. My bill is simple. It would give priority to the use of surplus food for needy people in the United States. I believe that this would make available additional supplies of food and of a wider variety of food. Among these could be listed beans, potatoes, and oil for cooking.

The bill which I have introduced would also direct the Secretary of Agriculture to use $50 million during the remainder of this fiscal year ending June 30, 1959, and $100 million during the next fiscal year, to purchase additional food. These foods, such as dried eggs, canned fruits, peanut butter and meat, if available, would provide a better diet for the thousands who are now dependent upon surplus foods provided by the Government. It is especially designed to make available to the school children in these depressed areas, school lunches with a balanced diet and with adequate supplies of food.

The second bill I introduced would amend the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1958. It would authorize the apportionment of approximately $100 million in those States in which are located surplus labor areas designated under the Defense Production Act of 1950. This sum would be apportioned to surplus labor areas, in the ratio which the unemployment in any of these areas bears to the total unemployment in all of the areas.

There is a precedent to this bill. Only last year the Congress authorized in the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1958 an additional appropriation of $400 million to the States as an antirecession measure. The bill which I propose would limit the expenditure of the $100 million to the areas in the States which are in great need.

I intend to introduce other measures next week which could give, I hope, immediate aid to these areas in our country, where people are in dire need. I have no doubt that in time our economy will again bring to full employment the people of our Nation. I must say, however, that in this intervening time, we must help those who, without fault of their own, are in need, even of clothes and food, when our economy is surging ahead, and when areas of our country are prospering greatly, and when many in our country become even richer. It would be unjust, unconscionable, if we do not help the people of the depressed areas of our country.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I want to congratulate the Senator from Kentucky for the very statesmanlike and humanitarian measure which he has just introduced. I have been watching the Lexington, Ky., papers for some time. They give authentic reports of conditions in some of the coal mining sections of Kentucky, notably Harlan County. These reports give every evidence of being conservative. The statement was made that there is a great deal of actual starvation in the coal-mining sections of the country. I can say that there is great want and need in the coal mining counties of Illinois.

It is all too easy to sweep these needy people under the rug and forget about them. It is all too easy to say the recession is over and that we do not need to do anything but wait for prosperity to return. But we know that there were in December 4,400,000 workers completely unemployed. We also know there were several million who were partially unemployed and involuntary part-time workers; and those come to the equivalent of about 1 million full-time workers. So really there were 5 million persons out of work.

The figures for January will probably be worse. We all hope that the pickup in the spring will sweep this condition away. But the Senator from Kentucky is performing a public service in pointing out in the meantime that there is hunger and starvation, and in proposing that surplus foods should be used to stop adults and children from starving to death in the most prosperous nation in the world.

I congratulate the Senator from Kentucky. I hope the Senator will give me the privilege of being a cosponsor of these measures. What the Senator has done today is typical of the attitude which the Senator from Kentucky takes on all public issues.

Mr. COOPER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, may I have unanimous consent to continue for 1 minute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I appreciate what the distinguished Senator has said.

We are happy, of course, about the spectacular recovery which is being made economically in this country, but it has to be said also that when many areas are beginning to prosper as they have never prospered before, and when many people are getting richer than they have ever been before, it would be unjust—I say it would be unconscionable—and a reflection on the economy of this country if we did not take steps at this time to at least help to provide the bare necessities of life itself for people who are actually in dire need, who are in hunger and in want.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bills will lie on the desk in accordance with the request of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. President, I should like to commend my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER], and tell him I shall be most happy and honored to be a cosponsor of the bill which he has presented to us this morning and on which he has so forcibly spoken.

The Senator from Kentucky is well aware of the problems involved. Indeed, there are serious, real, and desperate problems in many parts of our country. I think it devolves upon the Congress of the United States to do something about the so-called depressed areas.

The bills, introduced by Mr. COOPER, were received, appropriately referred, read twice by their titles, and ordered to lie on the desk, as follows:

By Mr. COOPER (for himself, Mr. DOUGLAS, and Mr. LANGER):

S. 423. A bill to amend the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1958 (72 Stat. 89) to provide additional funds for the construction of highways in labor-surplus areas; to the Committee on Public Works.

By Mr. COOPER (for himself, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. LANGER, and Mr. HENNINGS):

S. 489. A bill to facilitate the distribution of surplus food products to needy families in the United States; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT INCREASING LIMITATION OF AMOUNT EARNED BY BENEFICIARIES

Mr. JORDAN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill amending title II of the Social Security Act.

My bill goes a long way, I feel, Mr. President, toward correcting a serious injustice to those people who are receiving social security benefits. The bill would increase from $1,200 to $1,800 a year the amount individuals are permitted to earn without suffering deductions from their social security benefits.

Because of the restrictions now in the law on allowable income outside social security benefits, many thousands of our senior citizens are suffering needless hardships and embarrassment. Many of them have to live virtually as paupers because of the unrealistic formulas now in the law.

I think the present limitations, Mr. President, are a serious reflection on our free-enterprise system and are not in keeping with the high level of our overall economy.

Very few people, except those, of course, who are disabled, care to become completely inactive when they reach the retirement age under the Social Security Act. Most of the individuals who do receive social security benefits have a real desire to continue working on a limited basis.

I feel this bill, Mr. President, will enable those who so desire to earn a reasonable amount of income above and beyond their social security payments without being penalized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 432) to amend title II of the Social Security Act to increase from $1,200 to $1,800 the annual amount individuals are permitted to earn without suffering deductions from the insurance benefits payable to them under such title, introduced by Mr. JORDAN, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION OVER LANDS WITHIN NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVE NO. 4

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill for the purpose of turning back to the public lands of the United States a vast area in Alaska now withdrawn and set apart as a naval petroleum reserve.

This withdrawal, known as Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 4, Pet 4, for short, was set aside by President Harding by Executive Order No. 3797–A on February 27, 1923, at a time when his administration was under a searching investigation by a committee of this body for its handling of the then existing naval petroleum reserves. These are the Elk Hills reserve—Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 1—and the Buena Vista Hills reserve—Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 2—both in California, and Teapot Dome—Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 3—in Wyoming.

Criticism of the administration's action in leasing the California and Wyoming reserves obviously was responsible for setting aside of the Alaska reserve which embraces some 37,000 square miles in the great basin lying north of the Brooks Range and extending from the crest of the mountains on the south to the Arctic Ocean on the north and from the Colville River on the east to approximately the 162d meridian of longitude on the west. Point Barrow, the northernmost point of land in Alaska and Barrow Village, the northernmost inhabited settlement in the United States, is approximately in the center of the northern boundary of the reserve.

When set aside in 1923 virtually nothing was known of the geology of the region or of the lithology of the sediments and a great part of the lands had never been explored. The only evidence of the presence of oil or gas was a single seepage near Cape Simpson where a small amount of oil seeped from a hummock of ice and ran down to cover a small lake with a scum of oil.

I am further advised that in the opinion of informed persons in the Department of the Navy the area is not suitable under present day conditions for a naval petroleum reserve even if large quantities of oil were known to exist there, primarily because of its location, climate, lack of transportation, and the great expense of exploration and development. In view of the high costs involved it would not be practicable to drill a large number of wells in a proven field in this region and maintain them in a standby status pending potential future need as has been done in the Elk Hills reserve. In Elk Hills, I am told, the Navy by merely turning the valves on suspended wells can turn into the existing pipelines to refineries at San Francisco and Los Angeles in excess of 150,000 barrels daily of additional oil whenever the Congress by joint resolution authorizes its production. This is a real and valuable reserve for the military.

It is well known that the Navy, from 1944 to 1953, endeavored to determine the potential value of its portion of this vast sedimentary basin lying north of the Brooks range—Pet 4—and expended nearly $50 million in exploration for oil. After drilling 36 test wells and 40 core holes the Navy suspended operations and although no large oil fields were discovered, this meager amount of drilling in an area so large did not disprove the possible existence of large oil and gas fields in the many mammoth geologic structures disclosed by both its geological and geophysical exploration. The Navy did determine the presence of both oil and gas in this geologic basin in which the sediments exceed 20,000 feet in thickness in the deeper parts. Due to budget limitations the Department of the Navy is reluctant to supply funds from naval appropriations for the further development of its naval petroleum reserves and neither the Navy nor the Congress has, at this time, any plans for further exploration or use of the lands in this petroleum reserve. A naval petroleum reserve to be of use in time of emergency must be fully developed and ready, as is the Elk Hills reserve, in order to serve its purpose. To hold a vast tract of land, such as that covered by this bill, idle and unused constitutes a waste and serves no useful purpose to the Government.

At the present time there is a great interest by the petroleum industry in the petroleum possibilities of several large sedimentary basins known to exist in Alaska and large areas in each have been leased for oil and gas exploration. Private interests appear now to be interested in the Barrow Basin and ready to carry on the work of exploration so ably begun by the Navy.

The Alaska Petroleum & Gas Co., Inc., has recently obtained leases on the Gubik gas structure, a structure in which the Navy indicated commercial gas reserves may be developed. If further drilling proves that adequate gas reserves exist in the Gubik structure, a gas line will be built to furnish gas to Fairbanks, including the military installations in the area, with the result that great savings can be made in the present fuel costs in the area, both by civilians and the military. High cost of fuel is one of the principal reasons for high costs of living in Alaska, and particularly in the Arctic regions.

At the present time the only region in Alaska which enjoys the use of natural gas for fuel is at Point Barrow, where the Navy discovered the small South Barrow field, which supplies gas to its camp and to other Government installations in the area. Drilling in this field has not been sufficient to determine accurately the gas reserves.

On the Umiat structure, some 25 miles southwest of the Gubik structure, the Navy found a field of high gravity oil at shallow depth. While the five productive wells drilled in this field did not produce oil in quantities sufficient to warrant its development as a naval reserve, it may well be that further drilling would develop enough oil to warrant laying a pipeline to Fairbanks—particularly if it could be constructed in connection with a gas line from the Gubik field.

This bill is very important to the people of the new State of Alaska, and when passed and approved will enable the petroleum industry to take over and continue the exploration started by Navy. It will enable private interests to develop that part of the Gubik structure within Pet 4 which cannot now be leased and developed; it will permit further exploration of the South Barrow gas field to the end that it may be possible to furnish gas therefrom to the citizens of Barrow Village and adjacent thereto; it will permit the industry to utilize fully the vast amount of information developed by the Navy in a further search for oil north of the Brooks range. This bill is important to the future economy of the State of Alaska and any oil or gas discoveries made in the region it will open up will add to both the resources of the State and the United States.

In closing my remarks, I want to call the attention of the Senate to a bill, H.R. 298, recently introduced by the Honorable CARL VINSON, chairman of the Committee on Armed Services of the House, which has for its purpose establishment of Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 5 by setting aside for the Navy the islands of San Nicolas, San Miguel, and Prince lying off the coast of southern California. These islands, if found productive of petroleum, can be developed at a reasonable cost and will be far better suited for an oil reserve for the military than is the area which is covered by the bill. Should the bill H. R. 298 ever come before this body for its consideration it will be strongly supported by me and will have my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 434) to provide for transferring from the Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of the Interior jurisdiction over lands of the United States within the boundaries of Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 4, and abolishing such naval petroleum reserve, introduced by Mr. BARTLETT, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

ELIMINATION OF AIR POLLUTION

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, and my colleague, the junior Senator from California [Mr. ENGLE], I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to extend the duration of the Federal air pollution control law, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 441) to extend the duration of the Federal air pollution control law, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. KUCHEL (for himself and Mr. ENGLE), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Works.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, on almost any trip around our country the signs of remarkable growth and progress, of industrial and urban development, of increasing movement of our people, are impressive.

In virtually every section of the Nation, it is impossible to overlook or be unaware of significant changes in the environment in which the American people live and work. These changes, as is evident by the volume of demands for new activities and new services reaching every agency and level of government, present a succession of problems.

From the earliest moment of comprehension, Americans hear about and believe in free air. More and more it is being demonstrated that freeness of the air we breathe every moment of our lives is relative.

The supply of pure, healthful, pleasant air is in real danger of running out because of one of the grave and major environmental problems attributable to our mechanized, industrialized civilization. It long has been apparent—and I have mentioned it to the Senate on a number of occasions—that air pollution, especially in our mushrooming cities and thickly settled metropolitan areas, is a matter of grave concern and potentially of serious danger.

Four years ago, the 84th Congress enacted the Air Pollution Research and Technical Assistance Act, which I had the honor to introduce. This law authorized the Federal Government, through the U.S. Public Health Service, to carry out a 5-year program of investigation, research, and training to assist States and local governments in checking, reducing, and ultimately controlling air pollution.

Considerable progress has been made in the several elements of that program. Yet, much still remains to be done, many questions still are unanswered.

Accordingly, Mr. President, I introduce a bill for the continuance of the program and for extension of the Air Pollution Act in order that Federal agencies may pursue their efforts and provide further assistance in attempts to remove a menace which is estimated to cause $3 billion damage annually to our Nation.

Material contribution has been made by the Federal effort to difficult problems of sampling, identifying, and measuring airborne contaminants. For example, methods of analyzing gaseous contaminants, particularly hydrocarbons, present in the atmosphere of virtually every city, have been greatly improved. Such fundamental advances in knowledge are making possible definitive studies which could not have been undertaken a few years ago.

An extensive national air sampling network now is providing an objective measure of the levels and trends of air pollution. Studies of chemical, meteorological, and physical influences and of atmospheric reactions are making available new knowledge ultimately required for rational and economical control procedures.

Appraisal has been made of some important modern sources of urban pollution such as oil refineries, automobile exhausts, and combustion processes. These indeed are inevitable concomitants of our increasing mechanization and industrialization.

Scientists generally concur that the principal source of fumes which are ingredients of smog and pollution in most cities is the motor vehicle. On a number of fronts—including the automobile and petroleum industry level—this phase of the problem is under intense study.

The Federal Government each year has stepped up its pace in this field. In the past 4 years approximately $1,400,000 of the funds appropriated for air pollution work has been earmarked for investigating the part motor vehicle exhaust and combustion play in the problem. I understand that the forthcoming budget will provide a material increase over the current year figure of $700,000 in the amount for this line of research.

Significantly, the Public Health Service has progressively stepped up the proportion of its outlays for technical aspects of the automotive studies. This year and again next year 55 percent of the sums for this category of work are earmarked for what is termed engineering investigation of the motor vehicle's role in atmospheric contamination. In its own laboratories at Cincinnati, the Service is carrying on a number of projects, sampling and determining the composition of exhausts, investigating reactions between exhaust constituents, and measuring their effects. Through research contracts and grants, it is pursuing work along five specific lines, including testing of devices and chemicals for counteracting and controlling smog-causing emissions.

Health studies have developed evidence that not only does air pollution cause much irritation to individuals but is distinctly dangerous to human health and well-being. It has been determined that low levels of air pollution may cause disease and death, certain kinds of heart disease and cancer are of higher incidence in polluted areas, ozone which is a reaction product of certain smog can cause serious lung damage, and sulfur dioxide produced by burning of many fuels obstructs breathing.

Many agencies are participating in the attack on air pollution. The Federal Government is not by any means carrying the whole load. Yet it is an indispensable partner for a number of reasons.

The Congress and the Federal Government long have been and rightly must be concerned with the health of the American people. For that reason, Mr. President, I feel the bill I am introducing is worthy of early and favorable consideration and I earnestly urge passage of this measure to continue Public Law 84–159, the Air Pollution Research and Technical Assistance Act.

I ask unanimous consent to include the text of a telegram from the Governor of California, Edmond G. Brown, asking that Public Law 84–159 be reenacted and strengthened.

I have replied to him that, in my opinion, Congress should and will do so.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SACRAMENTO, CALIF., January 16, 1959.

Hon. THOMAS H. KUCHEL,
U.S. Senator
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.:

Air pollution is an urgent national health problem which requires positive action by the Federal Government as well as by State and local authorities to press forward in combating this menace. I strongly recommend that you renew and expand the National Air Pollution Control Act, Public Law 159 of the 84th Congress. To abandon this constructive program in the face of the stifling smog over cities all across the United States would be both irresponsible and tragic.

EDMUND G. BROWN,
Governor of California.

FOREIGN SERVICE ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1959

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, by request, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to amend the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended. This bill was submitted to the Vice President by letter on December 31, 1958.

This proposed legislation has been requested by the Secretary of State, and I am introducing it in order that there may be a specific bill to which Members of the Senate and the public may direct their attention and comments.

I reserve my right to support or oppose this bill, as well as any suggested amendments to it, when the matter is considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be printed at this point in the RECORD, together with the letter from the Secretary of State to the Vice President in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill and letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 443) to amend the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. GREEN (by request), was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Foreign Service Act Amendments of 1959."

SEC. 2. Section 415 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 415. (a) There shall be 10 classes of Foreign Service staff officers and employees, referred to hereafter as staff officers and employees. The per annum salaries of staff officers and employees within each class shall be as follows:

"Class 1: $11,660, $11,990, $12,320, $12,650, $12,980, $13,310, $13,640.

"Class 2: $9,900, $10,175, $10,450, $10,725, $11,000, $11,275, $11,500.

"Class 3: $8,140, $8,415, $8,690, $8,965, $9,240, $9,515, $9,790.

"Class 4: $7,000, $7,225, $7,450, $7,675, $7,900, $8,125, $8,350.

"Class 5: $6,150, $6,350, $6,550, $6,750, $6,950, $7,150, $7,350.

"Class 6: $5,300, $5,500, $5,700, $5,900, $6,100, $6,300, $6,500.

"Class 7: $4,650, $4,800, $4,950, $5,100, $5,250, $5,400, $5,550.

"Class 8: $4,200, $4,350, $4,500, $4,650, $4,800, $4,950, $5,100.

"Class 9: $3,750, $3,900, $4,050, $4,200, $4,350, $4,500, $4,650.

"Class 10: $3,500, $3,600, $3,700, $3,800, $3,900, $4,000, $4,100.

"(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section, the Secretary may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, fix the salary or compensation at lesser rates of salary than those prescribed by this section for the applicable class of officers or employees who are employed locally abroad and who are not available or are not qualified for transfer to another post or posts."

SEC. 3. Section 416 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 416. (a) A person appointed as a staff officer or employee shall receive basic salary at one of the rates of the class to which he is appointed which the Secretary shall, taking into account his qualifications and experience and the needs of the Service, determine to be appropriate for him to receive.

"(b) Whenever the Secretary determines that the needs of the Service warrant the appointment of staff officers or employees in a particular occupational group uniformly at a specific step rate above the minimum rate of the applicable class, he may adjust the basic salary of any staff officer or employee in the same class and occupational group who is receiving less than such established uniform step rate."

SEC. 4. Section 431 of such Act is amended by striking out in the first sentence of subparagraph (a) the phrase "the termination of time spent on authorized leave, whichever shall be later," and inserting in lieu thereof the phrase "upon termination of his service in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (b) of this section,"; and by amending subparagraph (b) of this section to read as follows:

"(b) The official services of a chief of mission shall not be deemed terminated by the appointment of a successor but shall continue until he has relinquished charge of the mission and for such additional period as may be determined by the Secretary, but in no case shall such additional period exceed fifty days, including time spent in transit. During such period the Secretary may require him to render such services as he may deem necessary in the interests of the Government".

SEC. 5. Section 441 of such Act and the heading thereto is amended to read as follows:

"CLASSIFICATION OF POSITIONS IN THE FOREIGN SERVICE AND IN THE DEPARTMENT

"SEC. 441. (a) Under such regulations as he may prescribe, and in order to facilitate effective management, the Secretary shall classify all positions in the Service at posts abroad, excluding positions to be occupied by chiefs of mission, and in the case of those occupied by Foreign Service officers, Reserve officers, and staff officers and employees, he shall establish such positions in relation to the classes established by sections 412, 414, and 415, respectively. Positions occupied by local employees and consular agents, respectively, shall be allocated to such classes as the Secretary may establish by regulation.

"(b) Under such regulations as he may prescribe, the Secretary may, notwithstanding the provisions of the Classification Act of 1949, as amended (5 U.S.C. 1071, et seq.), classify positions in or under the Department which he designates as Foreign Service positions to be occupied by officers and employees of the Service, and establish such positions in relation to the classes established by sections 412, 414, and 415."

SEC. 6. (a) Section 444. (a) of such Act is amended by striking out "444. (a)" and inserting "444" in lieu thereof which shall read as follows:

"SEC. 444. The Secretary shall, in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, establish schedules of salaries for classes of positions of local (alien) employees of the Service; provided that such schedules of salaries for local employees shall be based upon prevailing wage rates and related compensation practices for corresponding types of positions in the locality, as is consistent with the public interest."

(b) Section 444. (b) of such Act is hereby repealed.

SEC. 7. A new section 447 is hereby added to such Act, as follows:

"ADMINISTRATIVE ESTABLISHMENT OF HAZARDOUS DUTY PAY FOR CERTAIN CATEGORIES OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

"SEC. 447. The Secretary may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, establish rates of salary differential, not exceeding 15 per centum of basic salary, for officers or employees of the Service while they are assigned for duty as couriers."

SEC. 8. Section 517 of such Act is amended by striking the second and third sentences thereof.

SEC. 9. (a) Section 520 and the heading thereto is amended by striking out in the heading the phrase "Reinstatement and Recall" and substituting in lieu thereof the phrase "Reappointment, Recall, or Reemployment"; and by amending paragraph (b) to read as follows:

"(b) The Secretary may recall any retired Foreign Service officer temporarily to active duty in the Service whenever he shall determine such recall is in the public interest".

(b) Section 520 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph (c) which shall read as follows:

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of 5 U.S.C. 62 and 5 U.S.C. 715a, a Foreign Service officer heretofore or hereafter retired under the provisions of section 631 or 632 or a Foreign Service staff officer or employee hereafter retired under the provisions of section 803 shall not, by reason of his retired status, be barred from employment in Federal Government service in any appointive position for which he is qualified. An annuitant so reemployed shall serve at the will of the appointing officer".

SEC. 10. Section 522 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subparagraph (3) which shall read as follows:

"(3) extend the appointment or assignment of any Reserve officer, or continue the services of any such Reserve officer by reappointment without regard to the provisions of section 527 of this Act, for not more than five additional years if the Secretary deems it to be in the public interest to continue such officer in the Service, except that the assignment of any Reserve officer under paragraph (2) above may not be extended under the provisions of this paragraph without the consent of the head of the agency concerned."

SEC. 11. Section 531 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 531. The Secretary may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, appoint staff officers and employees on the basis of qualifications and experience. The Secretary may make provisions for temporary, limited, and such other type appointments as he may deem necessary. He is authorized to establish appropriate probationary periods during which newly appointed staff officers or employees, other than those appointed for temporary or limited service shall be required to serve. The Secretary may terminate at any time, without regard to the provisions of section 637, or the provisions of any other law, staff officers or employees appointed for temporary or limited service and other staff officers or employees who occupy probationary status."

SEC. 12. Section 532 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 532. Under such regulations as he may prescribe, the Secretary may assign a staff officer or employee to any post or he may assign him to serve in any position in which he is eligible to serve under the terms of this or any other Act. A staff officer or employee may be transferred from one post to another by order of the Secretary as the interests of the Service may require."

SEC. 13. (a) Paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of section 571 of such act are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 571. (a) Any officer or employee of the Service may, in the discretion of the Secretary, be assigned or detailed for duty in any Government agency, or in any international organization, international commission, or any international body, such an assignment or combination of assignments to be for a period of not more than 4 years, except that under special circumstances the Secretary may extend this 4-year period for not more than 4 additional years.

"(b) If a Foreign Service officer shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or by the President alone to a position in any Government agency, any United States delegation or mission to any international organization, international commission, or any international body, the period of his service in such capacity shall be construed as constituting an assignment within the meaning of paragraph (a) of this section and such person shall not, by virtue of the acceptance of such an assignment, lose his status as a Foreign Service officer. Service in such a position shall not, however, be subject to the limitations concerning the duration of an assignment contained in that paragraph.

"(c) If the basic minimum salary of the position to which an officer or employee of the Service is assigned pursuant to the terms of this section is higher than the salary such officer or employee is entitled to receive as an officer or employee of the Service, such officer or employee shall, during the period such difference in salary exists, receive the salary and allowances of the position in which he is serving in lieu of his salary and allowances as an officer or employee of the Service. Any salary paid under the provisions of this section shall be paid from appropriations made available for the payment of salaries of officers and employees of the Service and shall be the salary on the basis of which computations and payments shall be made in accordance with the provisions of title VIII. No officer or employee of the Service who, subsequent to the effective date of this act is assigned to, or who after June 30, 1960, occupies a position in the Department that is designated as a Foreign Service position shall be entitled to receive a salary differential under the provisions of this paragraph."

(b) Paragraph (e) of section 571 of such act is amended by striking the phrase "with heads of Government agencies" where it appears in the second sentence and by redesignating the paragraph as "(d)."

SEC. 14. Section 625 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 625. Any Foreign Service officer or any Reserve officer, whose services meet the standards required for the efficient conduct of the work of the Service and who shall have been in a given class for a continuous period of 9 months or more, shall, on the first day of each fiscal year, receive an increase in salary to the next higher rate for the class in which he is serving. Without regard to any other law the Secretary is authorized to grant to any such officer additional increases in salary within the salary range established for the class in which he is serving, based upon especially meritorious service."

SEC. 15. The heading "Part D. Separation of Foreign Service Officers From the Service" under title VI of such Act is amended to read as follows: "Part D. Separation of Officers and Employees From the Service."

SEC. 16. Section 631 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 631. Any Foreign Service officer who is a career ambassador or a career minister, other than one occupying a position as chief of mission or any other position to which he has been appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall, upon reaching the age of sixty-five, be retired from the Service and receive retirement benefits in accordance with the provisions of section 821, but whenever the Secretary shall determine it to be in the public interest, he may extend such an officer's service for a period not to exceed five years."

SEC. 17. Section 632 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 632. Any Foreign officer, other than one occupying a position as chief of mission or any other position to which he has been appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who is not a career ambassador or a career minister shall, upon reaching the age of sixty, be retired from the Service and receive retirement benefits in accordance with the provisions of section 821 but whenever the Secretary shall determine it to be in the public interest, he may extend such an officer's service for a period not to exceed five years."

SEC. 18. (a) Paragraphs (a), (b), (c), and (d) of section 637 of such Act and the heading thereto are amended to read as follows:

"SEPARATION FOR CAUSE

"SEC. 637. (a) The Secretary may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, separate from the Service any Foreign Service officer, Reserve officer, or staff officer or employee, on account of the unsatisfactory performance of his duties, or for such other cause as will promote the efficiency of the Service, and for reasons given in writing, but no such officer or employee shall be so separated until he shall have been granted a hearing by the Board of the Foreign Service and the unsatisfactory performance of his duties, or other cause for separation, shall have been established at such hearing, or else he shall have waived in writing his right to a hearing. The provisions of this section shall not apply to Foreign Service officers of class 8 or any other officer or employee of the Service who is in a probationary status or whose appointment is limited or temporary.

"(b) Any participant in the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability system who is:

"(1) over forty-five years of age, separated from the Service for unsatisfactory performance of duty shall be retired upon an annuity computed in accordance with the provisions of section 821 but not in excess of 25 per centum of his per annum salary at the time of his separation;

"(2) under forty-five years of age, separated from the Service for unsatisfactory performance of duty shall at the time of separation receive a payment equal to one year's salary or the refund, as provided in section 841(a), of the contributions made by him to the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund, whichever shall be greater.

"(c) Any participant in the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability system separated under the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section, for reasons other than unsatisfactory performance of duty, may, in the discretion of the Secretary and on the basis of criteria established in advance by him, be granted the benefits of paragraph (b) of this section depending upon his age. Unless the Secretary determines at the time of separation of a participant under the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section that he shall be granted the benefits of paragraph (b) of this section his contributions to the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund shall be returned to him in accordance with the provisions of section 841(a).

"(d) Any officer or employee of the Service who is not a participant in the Foreign Service retirement and disability system shall be entitled only to such benefits as shall accrue to him under the retirement system in which he is a participant."

(b) Section 637 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph (e) which shall read as follows:

"(e) Any payments made in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (b) or (c) of this section shall be made out of the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund."

SEC. 19. Section 638 of such Act and the heading thereto are amended to read as follows:

"TERMINATION OF APPOINTMENT OF FOREIGN SERVICE RESERVE OFFICERS AND STAFF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES UNDER LIMITED APPOINTMENT

"SEC. 638. Notwithstanding the provisions of this or any other law, the Secretary may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, terminate the services of any Reserve officer or staff officer or employee serving under limited appointment at any time."

SEC. 20. Section 641 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 641. All promotions of staff officers and employees to a higher class shall be made at the same or at a higher salary on the basis of performance and merit in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe."

SEC. 21. Section 642 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 642. (a) Under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, any staff officer or employee whose services meet the standards required for the efficient conduct of the work of the Service shall receive an increase in salary at periodic intervals to the next higher salary rate for the class in which he is serving. Without regard to any other law the Secretary is authorized to grant any such officer or employee additional increases in salary within the salary range established for the class in which he is serving, based upon especially meritorious service.

"(b) Under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, any staff officer or employee who has achieved the maximum salary rate prescribed by section 415 for the class in which he is serving may be granted an additional in-class salary increment from time to time in recognition of longevity and proficiency in the Service. Each such salary increment shall be equal to the maximum step rate increment of the applicable class and no person shall receive more than four such salary increments while serving in the same class."

SEC. 22. Section 701 of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence which shall read as follows: "The Secretary may also provide appropriate orientation and language training to dependents of officers and employees of the Government if such officers and employees are assigned to foreign relations activities."

SEC. 23. Section 704 of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph (e) which shall read as follows:

"(e) The Secretary may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, in the absence of suitably qualified United States citizens, employ persons who are not citizens of the United States by appointment to the staff of the Institute either on a full- or part-time basis or by contract for services in the United States or abroad at rates not in excess of those provided by the Classification Act of 1949, as amended (5 U.S.C. 1071)".

SEC. 24. (a) Section 803(b)(2) of such act is amended to read as follows: "(2) have paid into the fund a special contribution for each year of such service in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (b) of section 852."

(b) Section 803 is further amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph (c) which shall read as follows:

"(c) (1) In accordance with such regulations as the President may prescribe, any Foreign Service staff officer or employee appointed by the Secretary of State who has completed at least 10 years of continuous service in the Department's Foreign Service, exclusive of military service, shall become a participant in the Foreign Service retirement and disability system and shall make a special contribution to the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund in accordance with the provisions of section 852.

"(2) Any such officer or employee who, under the provisions of paragraph (c)(1) of this section, becomes a participant in the Foreign Service retirement and disability system, shall be mandatorily retired for age during the first year after the effective date of this section if he attains age 64 or if he is over age 64; during the second year at age 63; during the third year at age 62; during the fourth year at age 61, and thereafter at age 60".

SEC. 25. Section 804 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 804. (a) Annuitants shall be persons who are receiving annuities from the fund on the effective date of this Act and all persons, including widows, widowers, dependent widowers, children, and beneficiaries of participants or annuitants who shall become entitled to receive annuities in accordance with the provisions of this Act, as amended, or in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of the Act of May 1, 1956 (70 Stat. 125).

"(b) When used in this title the term—

"(1) 'Widow' means the surviving wife of a participant who was married to such participant for at least 2 years immediately preceding his death or is the mother of issue by such marriage.

"(2) 'Widower' means the surviving husband of a participant who was married to such participant for at least 2 years immediately preceding her death or is the father of issue by such marriage.

"(3) 'Dependent widower' means the surviving husband of a participant who was married to such participant for at least 2 years immediately preceding her death or is the father of issue by such marriage, and who is incapable of self-support by reason of mental or physical disability, and who received more than one-half of his support from such participant.

"(4) 'Child' means an unmarried child, including (a) an adopted child, and (b) a stepchild or recognized natural child who received more than one-half of his support from the participant, under the age of 18 years, or such unmarried child regardless of age who because of physical or mental disability incurred before age 18 is incapable of self-support".

SEC. 26. Section 811 of such Act is amended by striking out the word "Five" and by inserting the words "Six and one-half".

SEC. 27. (a) Paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of section 821 of such Act are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 821. (a) The annuity of a participant shall be equal to 2 per centum of his average basic salary for the highest five consecutive years of service, for which full contributions have been made to the Fund, multiplied by the number of years, not exceeding thirty-five, of service credit obtained in accordance with the provisions of sections 851, 852, and 853. However, the highest five years of service for which full contributions have been made to the Fund shall be used in computing the annuity of any Foreign Service officer who serves as chief of mission and whose continuity of service as such is interrupted prior to retirement by appointment or assignment to any other position determined by the Secretary to be of comparable importance. In determining the aggregate period of service upon which the annuity is to be based, the fractional part of a month, if any, shall not be counted.

"(b) At the time of retirement, any participant may, except as otherwise provided by section 834(a), elect to receive a reduced annuity and to provide for an annuity payable to his widow or her widower, commencing on the date following such participant's death and terminating upon the death of such surviving widow or widower. The annuity payable to the surviving widow or widower after such participant's death shall be fifty per centum of the amount of the participant's annuity, up to the full amount of his annuity, specified by him as the base for the survivor benefits computed as prescribed in paragraph (a) of this section. The annuity of the participant making such election shall be reduced by 2½ per centum of any amount up to $2,400 he specifies as the base for the survivor benefit plus ten per centum of any amount over $2,400 up to the full amount of the participant's annuity so specified.

"(c)(1) If an annuitant who made the election provided for in paragraph (b) of this section dies and is survived by a widow or widower and by a child or children, there shall be paid to or on behalf of each child, in addition to the annuity payable to the surviving widow or widower under such election, an annuity equal to the smallest of: (i) 40 per centum of the annuitant's average salary divided by the number of children; (ii) $600; or (iii) $1,800 divided between the number of children.

"(2) If an annuitant who did not make the election provided for in paragraph (b) dies and is survived by a widow or widower and by a child or children, or if such annuitant is not survived by a widow or widower but by a child or children, each surviving child shall be paid an annuity equal to the smallest of: (i) 50 per centum of the annuitant's average salary divided by the number of children; (ii) $720; or (iii) $2,160 divided between the number of children".

(b) Section 821 of such Act is further amended by adding new paragraphs (d), (e), and (f) which shall read as follows:

"(d) If a surviving widow or widower who is receiving an annuity in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (b) of this section dies or the annuity of a child is terminated, the annuity of any other child or children shall be recomputed and paid as though such wife, husband, or child has not survived the participant.

"(e) The annuity payable to a child under paragraphs (c) or (d) of this section shall begin on the first day of the next month after the participant dies and such annuity or any right thereto shall be determined upon death, marriage, or attainment of the age of eighteen years, except that, if a child is incapable of self-support by reasons of mental or physical disability, the annuity shall be terminated only when such child dies, marries, or recovers from such disability.

"(f) A participant who is not entitled to designate a beneficiary in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (b) of this section may at the time of retirement elect to receive a reduced annuity for himself and to provide for an annuity payable after his or her death to a beneficiary whose name shall be notified in writing to the Secretary. The participant may elect that such beneficiary shall receive annuity payments either equal to 50 per centum of the participant's full annuity or to such lesser base sum as the participant shall designate. The annuity payable to a participant making such election shall be reduced by 10 per centum of an annuity computed as provided in subsection (a) of this section and by 5 per centum of an annuity so computed for each full five years the person designated is younger than the retiring participant, but such total reduction shall not exceed 40 per centum. Upon the death of the surviving beneficiary all payments shall cease and no further annuity payments shall be due or payable. No such election of a reduced annuity payable to a beneficiary shall be valid until the participant shall have satisfactorily passed a physical examination as prescribed by the Secretary."

SEC. 28. (a) Paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of section 831 of such Act are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 831. (a) Any participant who has five years of service credit toward retirement under the system, excluding military or naval service that is credited in accordance with the provisions of section 851 or 852(a)(2), and who becomes totally disabled or incapacitated for useful and efficient service by reason of disease, illness, or injury not due to vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct on his part, shall, upon his own application or upon order of the Secretary, be retired on an annuity computed as prescribed in section 821. If the disabled or incapacitated participant has less than twenty years of service credit toward his retirement under the system at the time he is retired, his annuity shall be computed on the assumption that he had had twenty years of service, but the additional service credit that may accrue to a participant under this provision shall in no case exceed the difference between his age at the time of retirement and the mandatory retirement age applicable to his class in the Service.

"(b) In each case such disability shall be determined by the Secretary upon the basis of the advice of one or more duly qualified physicians or surgeons, designated by the Secretary to conduct examinations. Unless the disability is permanent, like examinations shall be made annually until the annuitant has reached the statutory mandatory retirement age for his class in the Service. If the Secretary determines, on the basis of the advice of one or more duly qualified physicians or surgeons conducting such examinations that an annuitant has recovered to the extent that he can return to active duty, the annuitant shall be given the opportunity to be reinstated or reappointed in the Service. The Secretary may reinstate any such recovered disability annuitant in the class in which he was serving at time of retirement. The Secretary may, taking into consideration the age, qualifications, and experience of such officer and the rank of his contemporaries in the Service, recommend that the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint him to a class higher than the one in which he was serving prior to retirement. Payment of the annuity shall continue until a date six months after the date of the examination showing recovery or until the date of reinstatement to active duty in the Service, whichever is earlier. Fees for examinations under this provision, together with reasonable traveling and other expenses incurred in order to submit to examination, shall be paid out of the Fund. If the annuitant fails to submit to examination as required under this section, payment of the annuity shall be suspended until continuance of the disability is satisfactorily established.

"(c) If a recovered disability annuitant whose annuity is discontinued is for any reason not reinstated to active duty, or reappointed to a higher class in the Service, he shall be considered to have been separated within the meaning of section 834 as of the date he was retired for disability and he shall, after the discontinuance of the disability annuity, be entitled to the benefits of that section or of section 841(a) except that he may elect voluntary retirement in accordance with the provisions of section 636 if he can qualify under its provisions."

(b) Section 831 of such Act is further amended by adding new paragraphs (d), (e), and (f) which shall read as follows:

"(d) No participant shall be entitled to receive an annuity under this Act and compensation for injury or disability to himself under the Federal Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, as amended, covering the same period of time. This provision shall not bar the right of any claimant to the greater benefit conferred by either Act for any part of the same period of time. Neither this provision nor any provision of the Act of September 7, 1916, as amended, shall be so construed as to deny the right of any person to receive an annuity under this Act by reason of his own services and to receive concurrently any payment under such Act of September 7, 1916, as amended, by reason of the death of some other persons.

"(e) Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, the right of any participant entitled to an annuity under this Act shall not be affected because such participant has received an award of compensation in a lump sum under section 14 of the Act of September 7, 1916, as amended, except that where such annuity is payable on account of the same disability for which compensation under such section has been paid, so much of such compensation as has been paid for any period extended beyond the date such annuity becomes effective, as determined by the Secretary of Labor, shall be refunded to the Department of Labor, to be paid into the Federal Employees' Compensation Fund. Before such person shall receive such annuity he shall (1) refund to the Department of Labor the amount representing such computed payments for such extended period, or (2) authorize the deduction of such amount from the annuity payable to him under this Act, which amount shall be transmitted to such Department for reimbursement to such Fund. Deductions from such annuity may be made from accrued and accruing payments, or may be prorated against and paid from accruing payments in such manner as the Secretary of Labor shall determine, whenever he finds that the financial circumstances of the annuitant are such as to warrant such deferred refunding".

SEC. 29. Section 832 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 832. (a) In case a participant shall die and no valid claim for annuity is payable under the provisions of this Act, his contributions to the Fund, with interest, shall be paid in accordance with the provisions of sections 841(a) and 881.

"(b) If a participant who has at least 5 years of service credit toward retirement under the system, excluding military or naval service that is credited in accordance with the provisions of sections 851 or 852(a)(2), dies before separation or retirement from the Service and is survived by a widow or a dependent widower, who qualified for an annuity under the provisions of paragraph (b) of section 821, such widow or dependent widower shall be entitled to an annuity equal to 50 per centum of the annuity computed in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (e) of this section and paragraph (a) of section 821. The annuity of such widow or dependent widower shall commence on the date following death of the participant and shall terminate upon death of the widow or dependent widower, or upon the dependent widower's becoming capable of self-support.

"(c) If a participant who has at least 5 years of service credit toward retirement under the system, excluding military or naval service that is credited in accordance with the provisions of sections 851 or 852(a)(2), dies before separation or retirement from the service and is survived by a widow or a dependent widower, who qualifies for an annuity under the provisions of paragraph (b) of section 821, and a child or children, each surviving child shall be entitled to an annuity computed in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (c)(1) of section 821. The child's annuity shall begin and be terminated in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (e) of section 821. Upon the death of the surviving widow or dependent widower or termination of the annuity of a child, the annuity of any other child or children shall be recomputed and paid as though such widow or dependent widower or child had not survived the participant.

"(d) If a participant who has at least 5 years of service credit toward retirement under the system, excluding military or naval service that is credited in accordance with the provisions of sections 851 or 852(a)(2), dies before separation or retirement from the service and is not survived by a widow or widower, but by a child or children, each surviving child shall be entitled to an annuity computed in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (c)(2) of section 821.

"(e) If, at the time of his or her death, the deceased participant had less than 20 years of service credit toward retirement under the system, the annuities payable in accordance with paragraph (b) of this section shall be computed in accordance with the provisions of section 821 on the assumption he or she had had 20 years of service, but the additional service credit that may accrue to a deceased participant under this provision shall in no case exceed the difference between his or her age on the date of death and the mandatory retirement age applicable to his or her class in the Service. In all cases arising under paragraphs (b), (c), (d), or (e) of this section, it shall be assumed that the deceased participant was qualified for retirement on the date of his death".

SEC. 30. A new section 834 is hereby added to such Act as follows:

"DISCONTINUED SERVICE RETIREMENT

"SEC. 834. (a) Any participant who voluntarily separates from the Service after obtaining at least 5 years of service credit toward retirement under the system, excluding military or naval service that is credited in accordance with the provisions of sections 851 or 852(a)(2), may, upon separation from the Service or at any time prior to becoming eligible for an annuity, elect to have his contributions to the Fund returned to him in accordance with the provisions of section 841, or to leave his contributions in the Fund and receive an annuity, computed as prescribed in section 821 commencing at the age of 60 years. The provisions of paragraph (f) of section 821 shall not be applicable to such participants.

"(b) If a participant who has qualified in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section, to receive a deferred annuity commencing at the age of 60 dies before reaching the age of 60 his contributions to the Fund, with interest, shall be paid in accordance with the provisions of sections 841 and 881".

SEC. 31. Section 841 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 841. (a) Whenever a participant becomes separated from the Service without becoming eligible for an annuity or a deferred annuity in accordance with the provisions of this Act, the total amount of contributions from his salary with interest thereon at 4 per centum per annum, compounded annually at the end of each fiscal year through June 30, 1958; semiannually as of December 31, 1958; annually thereafter as of December 31, and proportionately for the period served during the year of separation including all contributions made during or for such period, except as provided in section 881, shall be returned to him.

"(b) In the event that the total contributions of a retired participant, other than voluntary contributions made in accordance with the provisions of section 881, with interest at 4 per centum per annum compounded annually as is provided in paragraph (a) of this section added thereto, exceed the total amount returned to such participant or to an annuitant claiming through him, in the form of annuities, accumulated at the same rate of interest up to the date the annuity payments cease under the terms of the annuity, the excess of the accumulated contributions over the accumulated annuity payments shall be paid in the following order of precedence, upon the establishment of a valid claim therefor, and such payment shall be a ban to recovery by any other person:

"(1) To the beneficiary or beneficiaries designated by the retired participant in writing to the Secretary;

"(2) If there be no such beneficiary, to the widow or widower of such participant;

"(3) If none of the above, to the child or children of such participant and descendants of deceased children by representation;

"(4) If none of the above, to the parents of such participant or the survivor of them;

"(5) If none of the above, to the duly appointed executor or administrator of the estate of such participant;

"(6) If none of the above, to other next of kin of such participant as may be determined by the Secretary in his judgment to be legally entitled thereto.

"(c) No payment shall be made pursuant to paragraph (b) (6) of this section until after the expiration of thirty days from the death of the retired participant or his surviving annuitant."

SEC. 32. Section 851 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 851. For the purposes of this title, the period of service of a participant shall be computed from the effective date of appointment as a Foreign Service officer, or, if appointed prior to July 1, 1924, as an officer or employee of the Diplomatic or Consular Service of the United States, or who becomes a participant under the provisions of this Act, as amended, but all periods of separation from the Service and so much of any leaves of absence without pay as may exceed six months in the aggregate in any calendar year shall be excluded, except leaves of absence while receiving benefits under the Federal Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916, as amended, and leaves of absence granted participants while performing active and honorable military or naval service in the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States".

SEC. 33. (a) Paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of section 852 of such Act are amended to read as follows:

"(a) A participant may, subject to the provisions of this section, include in his period of service—

"(1) service performed as a civilian officer or employee of the Government, including the municipal government of the District of Columbia, prior to becoming a participant; and

"(2) active and honorable military or naval service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force, or Coast Guard of the United States.

"(b) A person may obtain prior civilian service credit in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (a) (1) of this section by making a special contribution to the Fund equal to 5 per centum of his basic annual salary for each year of service for which credit is sought subsequent to July 1, 1924, and prior to the effective date of this Act, and at 6½ per centum thereafter with interest compounded annually at 4 per centum per annum to the date of payment. Any such participant may, under such conditions as may be determined in each instance by the Secretary, pay such special contributions in installments.

"(c) (1) If an officer or employee under some other government retirement system, becomes a participant in the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability System by direct transfer, such officer or employee's total contributions and deposits, including interest accrued thereon, except voluntary contributions, shall be transferred to the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund effective as of the date such officer or employee becomes a participant in the system. Each such officer or employee shall be deemed to consent to the transfer of such funds and such transfer shall be a complete discharge and acquittance of all claims and demands against the other government retirement fund on account of service rendered prior to becoming a participant in the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability System.

"(2) No officer or employee, whose contributions are transferred to the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (c) (1) of this section, shall be required to make contributions in addition to those transferred, for periods of service for which full contributions were made to the other government retirement fund, nor shall any refund be made to any such officer or employee on account of contributions made during any period to the other government retirement fund, at a higher rate than that fixed by section 811 of this Act for contributions to the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability System.

"(3) No officer or employee, whose contributions are transferred to the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (c) (1) of this section, shall receive credit for periods of prior service for which a refund of contributions has been made, or for which no contributions were made to the other Government retirement fund. A participant may, however, obtain credit for such prior service by making a special contribution to the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (b) of this section".

(b) Section 852 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof new paragraphs (d) and (e) which shall read as follows:

"(d) No participant may obtain prior civilian service credit toward retirement under the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability system for any period of civilian service on the basis of which he is receiving or will in the future be entitled to receive any annuity under another retirement system covering civilian personnel of the Government.

"(e) A participant may obtain prior military or naval service credit in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (a) (2) of this section by applying for it to the Secretary prior to retirement or separation from the Service, but in the case of a participant who is eligible for and receives retired pay on account of military or naval service, the period of service upon which such retired pay is based shall not be included except that in the case of a participant who is eligible for and receives retired pay on account of a service-connected disability incurred in combat with an enemy of the United States or resulting from an explosion of an instrument of war and incurred in line of duty during an enlistment or employment as provided in Veterans Regulation Numbered 1(a), part I, paragraph I, or is awarded under title III of Public Law 810, 80th Congress, the period of such military or naval service shall be included. No contributions to the Fund shall be required in connection with military or naval service credited to a participant in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (a) (2) of this section".

SEC. 34. The heading "Part H. Officers reinstated in the Service" under title VIII of such act is amended to read as follows: "Part H. Annuitants Recalled or Reinstated in the Service or Reemployed in the Government".

SEC. 35. Section 871 of such Act is amended and a heading is added thereto as follows:

"RECALL

"SEC. 871. Any annuitant recalled to active duty in the Service in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (b) of section 520 or paragraph (b) of section 831 shall, while so serving, be entitled in lieu of his retirement allowance to the full pay of the class in which he is serving. During such service, he shall make contributions to the Fund in accordance with the provisions of section 811. The amount of his annuity when he reverts to the retired list shall be recomputed in accordance with the provisions of section 821."

SEC. 36. A new section 872 is hereby added to such Act as follows:

"REEMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 872. (a) Nothwithstanding any other provision of law, any officer or employee of the Service, who has retired under this Act, as amended, and is receiving an annuity pursuant thereto, and who is reemployed in the Federal Government Service in any appointive position either on a part-time or full-time basis, shall be entitled to receive the salary of the position in which he is serving plus so much of his annuity payable under this Act, as amended, which when combined with such salary does not exceed during any calendar year the highest basic salary such officer or employee was entitled to receive under sections 412 or 415 of the Act, as amended, on the date of his retirement from the Service. Any such reemployed officer or employee who receives salary during any calendar year in excess of the maximum amount which he may be entitled to receive under this subparagraph shall be entitled to such salary in lieu of benefits hereunder.

"(b) When any such retired officer or employee of the Service is reemployed, the employer shall notify the Department of State of such reemployment together with all pertinent information relating thereto and shall cause to be paid, by transfer or otherwise, to the Department of State funds necessary to cover gross salary, employer contributions, and gross lump-sum leave payment relating to the employment of the reemployed officer or employee. The Department of State shall make to and on behalf of the reemployed officer or employee payments to which he is entitled under the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section, and shall make those withholdings and deductions authorized and required by law.

"(c) In the event of any overpayment under this section the Secretary of State is authorized to withhold the amount of such overpayment from the salary payable to such reemployed officer or employee or from his annuity".

SEC. 37. (a) Paragraph (a) of section 881 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 881. (a) Any participant may, at his option and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the President, deposit additional sums in multiples of 1 percent of his basic salary, but not in excess of 10 percent of such salary, which amounts together with interest at 3 percent per annum, compounded annually at the end of each fiscal year through June 30, 1958; semiannually as of December 31, 1958; annually thereafter as of December 31, and proportionately for the period served during the year of his retirement including all contributions made during or for such period, shall, at the date of his retirement and at his election, be—"

(b) Paragraph (c) of section 881 of such act is amended by deleting the word "annually" and inserting in lieu thereof the phrase "as is provided in paragraph (a) of this section".

SEC. 38. (a) Section 1021 of such act is amended by inserting the phrase "the Department including" immediately prior to the phrase "the Service" wherever it appears in this section.

(b) Section 1021(a) is further amended by striking out the phrase "if recommended by the Director General" and inserting in lieu thereof the phrase "at the discretion of the Secretary".

SEC. 39. Section 11 of Public Law 885, 84th Congress (70 Stat. 890) is hereby amended by inserting after the phrase "Government-owned vehicles" the phrase "or taxicabs" and by inserting after the phrase "public transportation facilities" the phrase "other than taxicabs".

SEC. 40. Paragraph (4) of section 104(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 104(a)(4)) (relating to the exclusion from gross income of compensation for injuries and sickness) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(4) amounts received as a pension, annuity, or similar allowance for personal injuries or sickness resulting from active service in the armed forces of any country or in the Coast and Geodetic Survey or the Public Health Service, or as a disability annuity payable under the provisions of section 831 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended (22 U.S.C. 1081; 60 Stat. 1021)."

SEC. 41. Foreign Service staff officers and employees receiving basic compensation immediately prior to the effective date of this Act at one of the scheduled rates provided by section 415 of such Act, as amended, shall be transferred to the new classes established by section 415 of such Act, as amended, and shall receive basic compensation on and after the effective date of this Act, as follows:

SEC. 42. The annuity of each former participant under the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability system, who retired prior to July 28, 1956, and who at the time of his retirement had creditable service in excess of thirty years, shall be recomputed on the basis of actual years of creditable service not in excess of thirty-five years. Service which was not creditable under the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability system on the date of a former participant retires, shall not be included as creditable service for the purpose of this recomputation. The annuities payable to such persons shall, when recomputed, be paid at the rates so determined, but no such recomputation or any other action taken pursuant to this section shall operate to reduce the rate of the annuity any such person is entitled to receive under the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability system.

SEC. 43. (a) The provisions of this Act shall become effective as of the first day of the first pay period which begins one month after the passage of this Act, except as provided in paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of this section.

(b) The provisions of paragraphs (c)(1) and (c)(2) of section 803 of the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended by section 24(b) of this Act, shall become effective on the first day of the first month which begins one year after the effective date of this Act, except that any Foreign Service staff officer or employee, who at the time this Act becomes effective meets the requirements for participation in the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability system may elect to become a participant in the system before the mandatory provisions become effective. Such Foreign Service staff officers and employees shall become participants effective on the first day of the second month following the date of their application for earlier participation.

(c) The amendment made by section 40 of this Act shall be effective with respect to taxable years ending after the date of enactment of this Act.

(d) The provisions of section 42 of this Act shall take effect on the first day of the first month which begins more than thirty days after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 44. Notwithstanding the provisions of this Act, existing rules, regulations of or applicable to the Foreign Service of the United States shall remain in effect until revoked or rescinded or until modified or superseded by regulations made in accordance with the provisions of this Act, unless clearly inconsistent with the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 45. The following headings and sections in the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended, are hereby repealed:

(1) Section 442 of such Act and the heading thereto.

(2) Section 525 of such Act and the heading thereto.

(3) Section 576 of such Act and the heading thereto.

(4) Sections 651 and 652 of such Act and the headings thereto including part F.

The letter presented by Mr. GREEN is as follows:

The Honorable RICHARD M. NIXON,
President of the Senate.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: In its continuing efforts to improve and strengthen the administration of the Foreign Service, the Department is submitting a proposed bill "To amend the Foreign Service Act of 1946, as amended, and for other purposes" (tab I) for consideration by the United States Senate.

The amendments proposed in this bill are urgently needed to improve and strengthen the administration of the Foreign Service. They would accomplish the following:

1. Provide an improved 10-class salary structure for the Foreign Service staff corps and authorize the Secretary to fix salary rates for United States citizens employed abroad.

2. Provide authority for appointment of Foreign Service staff personnel at in-class salary-step rates and authorize the fixing of appointment salary rates for short-supply categories of personnel.

3. Clarify provisions governing the termination of the services of chiefs of mission.

4. Provide greater flexibility in the classification of Foreign Service positions.

5. Provide authority to pay a hazardous duty salary differential to diplomatic couriers.

6. Clarify and improve provisions governing lateral entry into the Foreign Service.

7. Improve provisions relating to reinstatement and recall of Foreign Service officers and remove existing restrictions on the reemployment by any Government agency of retired participants in the Foreign Service retirement and disability system.

8. Provide authority for the continuation on the rolls of certain Foreign Service Reserve officers notwithstanding the usual limitation on duration of assignment.

9. Clarify and simplify provisions governing appointment, assignment, transfer, and promotion of Foreign Service staff personnel. Establish a system of longevity for staff personnel.

10. Clarify and simplify provisions governing the assignment of Foreign Service personnel to Government agencies.

11. Liberalize provisions relating to extension of services of Foreign Service officers beyond mandatory retirement age.

12. Provide a uniform basis for effecting separation for cause.

13. Provide specific authority for the termination of officers and employees serving under limited appointment.

14. Improve provisions governing the establishment of, the conduct of, and the use of the facilities of the Foreign Service Institute.

15. Provide for general improvement in the Foreign Service retirement and disability system, including such specific improvements as:

(a) Liberalization of survivorship benefits and coverage of surviving children;

(b) Provision for the participation of certain Foreign Service staff personnel in the system;

(c) Clarification of provisions for reinstatement of recovered disability annuitants;

(d) Clarification of provisions relating to death in service;

(e) Clarification of provisions governing prior service credit;

(f) Provision for the automatic transfer of contributions from one retirement fund to another; and

(g) An increase in rate of employee contributions from 5 to 6½ percent.

16. Improve provisions governing the acceptance of gifts.

17. Clarify provisions relating to the use of Government-owned vehicles at posts abroad.

18. Exempt disability annuities from income tax liability.

Throughout the proposed draft bill there are perfecting and clarifying technical changes that relate to the proposals listed above.

An explanation of each of the proposed amendments is enclosed (table II), together with an estimate of the cost involved in implementing the proposed legislation (table III).

Enactment of this proposed legislation will provide important improvements in the personnel system for the conduct of foreign affairs. The Department recommends the passage of this bill to accomplish the purposes set forth above and trusts that it may receive favorable consideration by the Congress.

The Department has been informed by the Bureau of the Budget that there is no objection to the submission of this draft legislation.

Sincerely yours,

CHRISTIAN A. HERTER,
Acting Secretary.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION RELATING TO CULTURAL AFFAIRS

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, two bills relating to cultural affairs. One is designed to promote the international cultural exchange, and the other fosters the development of the arts here at home.

The first measure would amend the International Cultural Exchange and Trade Fair Participation Act of 1956, to provide for participation by foreign governments and citizens of other countries in cultural activities in the United States. This law, which was sponsored by Representative FRANK THOMPSON, JR., of New Jersey, and myself, made the President's Special International Program of Cultural Exchange a permanent policy.

Unfortunately the President's program was primarily concerned with sending American cultural programs overseas and did not provide for a true exchange. In this connection I quote from the letter President Eisenhower sent to the Congress on July 27, 1954, which called for the establishment of such a program. It is clear from the letter that a program of cultural exchange was not contemplated at the time.

He requested the sum of $5 million to be expended at his discretion "to meet extraordinary or unusual circumstances arising in the international affairs of the Government." The President specifically stressed the need to participate in international trade fairs, where the Russians had achieved marked success in advertising their way of life through their products. Then the President said:

> In the cultural and artistic fields as well we need greater resources to assist and encourage private musical, dramatic, and other cultural groups to go forth and demonstrate that America too can lay claim to high cultural and artistic accomplishments.

In the 4 years that have elapsed since then, 111 attractions have been sent to 89 countries by the United States. Miracles have been accomplished by the modest sums allocated for this program. The New York Times recently noted that the 1959 allocation for the program is a mere $2,415,000, while a single intercontinental ballistic missile costs $2 million. At the conclusion of my remarks I shall include a brilliant review of this program and other cultural activities of the Federal Government which was carried in the New York Times in December 1958.

Unlike the Fulbright and Smith-Mundt Acts which have seen the exchange of some 35,000 students between the United States and other countries, the lack of a provision for reciprocity in Public Law 860, 84th Congress, has seriously hampered our relations with other countries. The amendment I am sponsoring is necessary to demonstrate that the United States is interested, and deeply so, in the cultural and artistic achievements of other countries. At the present time the box office is the final arbiter of the cultural attractions which are seen in our country.

As a result, the American public sees many artists from Europe and the Soviet Union, but very few from Asia despite the Orient's long and rich cultural heritage.

The amendment which I am offering, and which Representative FRANK THOMPSON is offering in the House, will correct this situation.

American cultural isolation goes deeper than ignorance of foreign languages. Malvina Lindsay, writing in the Washington Post of October 20, 1958, declared:

> Many Americans, young and old, are reluctant to come out of their cultural shells, to use their opportunities for informing themselves about foreign peoples. Yet unless they do this, they may not be able to preserve their own way of life, now being so widely challenged.

Most observers would agree, I am sure, that a cultural exchange program which includes the arts can be of great value in developing understanding between people.

Recently, Marian Anderson visited Asia under the aegis of the Humphrey-Thompson Act. She was received everywhere with enthusiastic acclaim. She did more than any other single person in recent years to change the unfriendly image of America which is held by many people abroad. She especially enhanced our prestige in Asia.

On the other hand, one of the great artists of Asia came to this country recently under commercial sponsorship and was a boxoffice flop. He went away feeling that Americans did not understand him or the people of his country.

These are some of the things that have persuaded me that my proposed amendment to Public Law 860, 84th Congress, is necessary and important. Representative THOMPSON of New Jersey has offered a companion bill in the House.

I turn now to the development of the arts here in the United States.

In his 1955 state of the Union message, President Eisenhower proposed the creation of a Federal Advisory Commission on the Arts. President Eisenhower declared:

> In the advancement of the various activities which will make our civilization endure and flourish, the Federal Government should do more to give official recognition to the importance of the arts and other cultural activities. I shall recommend the establishment of a Federal Advisory Commission on the Arts within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to advise the Federal Government on ways to encourage artistic and cultural endeavor and appreciation.

In the 84th Congress, pursuant to the President's request, a number of bills were introduced in both the House and Senate to achieve this result. Following hearing by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, S. 3419 was favorably reported—Report No. 2409—on July 3, 1956. The bill passed the Senate on July 6, 1956, but was defeated in the House Education and Labor Committee.

In an effort to meet objections raised by the House committee, consultations have been held with interested Members in both Houses. Consequently, the bill I introduce today is a slightly revised version of S. 3419 as it passed the Senate under the inspired leadership of Senator Herbert H. Lehman and with the cooperation of Senator H. Alexander Smith.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD an excerpt from the letter written by Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare M. B. Folsom, under date of March 25, 1957, which accompanied one draft of the bill to Congress:

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Throughout the great epochs of history civilization has been most importantly exemplified by masterworks of art and architecture, music and the dance, drama and literature. Indeed, the verdict of history judges a civilization most definitively by its cultivation of the arts. Encouragement of the arts is a demonstration to itself and to others, of a nation's belief in its spiritual resources and creative destiny.

The United States, despite its relative youth, is rich in artistic achievement. We have contributed new power of design in architecture, created new rhythms in music, and developed a literature which commands worldwide attention. In the theater and film, and in the ancient form of the dance we show a creative vitality. Our great museums, art galleries, and orchestras are the pride of our people. Yet, millions of Americans know painting and sculpture only in reproductions, and there are vast areas where living theater is never seen. We must search for new ways to bring the enjoyment of and participation in the arts to more of our people.

We must also find ways to stimulate our talented persons in the arts. We have at our disposal many persons of talent and genius, whose gifts need the encouragement and recognition which persons in other comparable fields enjoy. The artist, the actor, and the writer must exercise crafts which are mastered only after long technical training—a training equally as arduous as that which the doctor, the chemist, or the astronomer must undergo. To a great extent workers in the arts have had to find their own facilities which, except in rare and widely scattered instances, do not compare in availability, number, or quality with those available to other fields.

Philanthropic individuals and private and public organizations have provided strong support for the arts and properly so. On the other hand, our National Government has not lent its encouragement and prestige to the arts to the extent that is feasible and desirable.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am pleased to announce that Senators MURRAY, DOUGLAS, and JAVITS have joined me in offering this bill to the Senate as a bipartisan measure. In the House of Representatives a companion bill has been introduced by Representative FRANK THOMPSON, JR., of New Jersey, Representative EMANUEL CELLER, of New York, and Representative STUYVESANT WAINWRIGHT, of New York. I want to pay special tribute to Congressman FRANK THOMPSON, JR., of New Jersey for his splendid initiative in the whole field of the arts. As a result of his prodigious efforts there is a new understanding of this subject in the Congress today.

I ask unanimous consent that a brilliant article in the New York Times of December 8, 1958, by Milton Bracker, entitled "U.S. Role in the Arts Is Found To Have Increased in Decade Since World War II," be inserted at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. ROLE IN THE ARTS IS FOUND TO HAVE INCREASED IN DECADE SINCE WORLD WAR II

(By Milton Bracker)

In Washington a bill authorizing a National Cultural Center has been approved by Congress and signed by the President. The 9.4-acre site is there and someday—if about $25 million in private funds can be raised within 5 years—the building may be.

In another part of the capital a white-haired New Englander (who happened to be born in California) is paid by the Government to serve as consultant in poetry to the Library of Congress. His name is Robert Frost. He remarked with hearty irony in an interview that "I'm there chiefly to thank the Government for recognizing our existence."

In New York preparations are being completed for the departures on January 13 of the San Francisco Ballet for the Near East; on January 17 of the Westminster Choir for Africa, and on February 23 of the Little Orchestra Society for the Far East.

AIDED BY STATE DEPARTMENT

All will be backed by State Department funds, administered by the International Cultural Exchange Service of the American National Theatre and Academy. ANTA—like the American Red Cross—is a private body holding a charter from Congress.

In St. Louis—at the City Art Museum—a show of American painting of the last 25 years is being assembled for a tour to open in Italy next September. About 25 artists will be represented, in what one non-Government expert describes as potentially the "most important exhibition of American art to go abroad under Government auspices." This is a venture of the U.S. Information Agency.

In New Delhi on January 5, a new U.S. chancellery will be dedicated. It is a spectacular example of the work of a modern American architect, Edward Durell Stone, who was commissioned by the State Department through the Office of Foreign Buildings.

ANCIENT RELATIONSHIP

These disparate activities and hundreds of others, have as a common denominator the ancient relationship between the Federal Government and the arts. As it exists in the United States the relationship is virtually impossible to delineate sharply. Yet every time an American passes a coin or puts a stamp on a letter he is touched by it.

Overall truths of the relationship are hard to extract. But a month's look into many phases of it suggests the following:

There is no nationally backed opera like La Scala; no subsidized ballet like the Bolshoi; no state orchestra like the Vienna Philharmonic. Nor is there a central department or agency through which art matters are channeled. Within a given field—music, for example—even well-informed leaders are likely to confront each other with, "Oh, you mean the other committee," when discussing the myriad Government subdivisions that back one or more musical projects.

In recent years, impelled, according to some opinion, by the example of the dictatorships, this country has placed a strong emphasis on the promotion of art for export. This is often noted wryly by artists who would like to see their own particular art subsidized, or at least assisted, for domestic consumption. There is no doubt that the whole question of Government and the arts has tended to narrow into the question of the use of art as an instrument of the foreign policy of the United States in the cold war.

No matter what the Government does or does not do in relation to the arts, it is subject to a barrage of pros and cons. These concern the fear of censorship or control; the possible sponsorship of subversive art; the timeless disputes between conservatives and modernists in any art medium; and the individual or group equities of artists competing for commissions.

PARADOX AND CONTROVERSY

And this whole subject is fraught with paradox, misunderstanding, and controversy.

In Chicago, a Government subsidy amounting to about $16,000 was announced by the hard-pressed Lyric Opera Co. But the Government that made the subsidy had its seat not on the Potomac but on the Tiber. The grant, in lire, was to be used largely for travel expenses incurred by Italian singers hired by the Chicago company.

The triumph of Van Cliburn at the Tchaikovsky piano competition in Moscow last May is still commonly held to have been made possible by Government backing. Actually, the funds came from private sources. The Government contribution was a passport.

As for controversy, it has ranged from the political inclination of an individual artist to the design of a 3-cent stamp honoring the American poultry industry; and from the shape of a memorial on a distant beachhead to the recurrent question of whether there should be a Department of Fine Arts.

Abraham Chasins, in "Speaking of Pianists," remarks:

"American artists and intellectuals are the natural enemies of American politicians."

INCREASED LEGISLATION

Whether this is the case, the fact is that legislation by politicians presumably for the benefit of artists and intellectuals has tended to increase during the past decade. The pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are ripe with tributes to one or more of the nine muses, although the rhetoric has not been enough to forestall the death of most of the bills introduced.

In his state of the Union message in 1955, President Eisenhower asserted that the Federal Government should do more to give official recognition to the importance of the arts and other cultural activities.

He also proposed a permanent Federal Advisory Commission on the Arts, to come under the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. In one form or another, this idea had been—and is—backed by large numbers of individual artists and their organizations. It was—and is—opposed by a few.

The proposal was passed by the Senate but died in the House. More recently there have been renewed proposals for a Department of Fine Arts, headed by a leader of Cabinet rank; for an Assistant Secretary of State for Cultural Affairs; for a U.S. Art Foundation and a National Theater.

CULTURAL AIDE NAMED

Some of these recalled the Pepper-Coffee bill of 1938, for a Bureau of Fine Arts, or even older proposals. Some are sure to be introduced in the 86th Congress. It was announced yesterday that Robert H. Thayer, former Minister to Rumania, had been appointed Special Assistant to the Secretary of State for the coordination of international, educational and cultural relations.

Representative FRANK THOMPSON, JR., of New Jersey is one of the most active legislators in the field. Cynics dub him a "culture vulture." The fact remains that Mr. THOMPSON and Senatorial cosponsors have pushed some significant projects over all the usual obstacles into law.

These include the International Cultural Exchange and Trade Fair Participation Act of 1956, which covered the Brussels Fair; the bill to establish a new national art repository in the old Patent Office Building, and the bill for the National Cultural Center.

The cosponsor of the first of these was Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY of Minnesota.

It authorized on a permanent basis funds for the cultural presentations program that had been established in 1954 following a special request by President Eisenhower to Congress.

ATTRACTIONS TO 89 LANDS

This has meant that in 4 years, 111 attractions—ranging from Dizzy Gillespie to the New York Philharmonic; and from Marian Anderson to "The Skin of Our Teeth" —have been sent to 89 countries. This is the program directed by Robert C. Schnitzer, of ANTA, who observes that every so often some Congressman phones him to urge the booking of the "Flathead County Glee Club." Such pressure on behalf of hometown talent (and voters) has also been brought to bear on the office of E. Allan Lightner, Jr., Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs.

But the criterion remains "quality, quality, quality," according to those close to Mr. Lightner. And Mr. Schnitzer says that after he explains the rigid standards of the selection panels, the Congressman invariably recedes without even threatening to have the whole program canceled. Its 1959 allocation is $2,415,000. A single intercontinental ballistic missile costs $2 million.

Last March 28, the bill to save the Patent House Building for an art museum became law. It was backed by Representative THOMPSON and Senators HUMPHREY and CLINTON P. ANDERSON of New Mexico. The works to be housed in the Parthenon-like structure at Seventh and F Streets include the National Collection of Fine Arts, now in the Smithsonian Institution; a national portrait gallery; and a contemporary art program.

IN AN ARTISTIC LANDMARK

The Patent Office Building was designed by Robert Mills, who did the Washington Monument. For nearly 125 years it has been one of the Capital's artistic edifices. But this is not to say that the measures sparing it from being torn down for a parking lot has automatically satisfied all those who would like to see the National Collection of Fine Arts in a home of its own.

The measure came as the culmination of a long and involved controversy over another site—on the Mall, near the Smithsonian. This was ardently desired, and ultimately obtained by proponents of the National Air Museum. The latter is temporarily housed in the Smithsonian, too. The director of one of the country's greatest museums says that the best that can be said of the Patent Office Building is that "There are walls standing." If it is to serve as a showplace of fine art, he added, "they've got to renovate the whole thing."

On the other hand, Representative THOMPSON says he has been assured by experts that the conversion is "entirely feasible." It would be paid for by the General Services Administration. But for the moment, the plan is in abeyance.

The Civil Service Commission has occupied the Patent Office Building since 1932, when the Patent Office moved to the Department of Commerce. The Civil Service Commission is scheduled to move into a new building of its own, but the building is not yet built.

SITE FOR ENTERTAINING

Thus the transfer of the National Collection of Fine Arts remains indefinitely in the future. But a large floor plan of the Patent Office Building is already on the desk of Thomas M. Beggs, director of the National Collection. He is thinking ahead, even though he knows he will have to be patient.

The National Cultural Center authorized by law September 2, would symbolize the Nation's official interest in the arts and give the President a place to entertain foreign visitors in a setting identified with both the visual and the performing arts.

As cosponsored by Senator FULBRIGHT and Representative THOMPSON, the act sets up a board including the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and 15 general trustees. These have not yet been appointed. Eventually, there would also be an Advisory Committee on the Arts—similar to the one so often proposed—made up of specialists in the fields of art covered by the center.

The site is bounded by the Inner Loop Freeway, the Theodore Roosevelt Bridge approaches, Rock Creek Parkway, New Hampshire Avenue and F Street in the sector called Foggy Bottom. But apart from obtaining the site, the Government has so far done nothing to implement the project.

And by the act's own terms, it will come to nothing if the Smithsonian Institution does not find that sufficient funds to construct the National Cultural Center have been received within 5 years.

DOWLING TO PRESS PROJECT

Once the trustees are appointed, Robert W. Dowling, chairman of the board of ANTA, is likely to take a leading role in seeing to it that the act does not come to nothing. "I have been rooting for this [the Cultural Center] for a long time," he said. He has felt that if the Government would give the land, private citizens should give the money.

New legislation apart, the Government's continuing activities in the arts can best be outlined under four headings. These are international exchange, the design and decoration of public buildings, Government collections, and coins and stamps. The four are obviously not all inclusive. For example, the chamber music programs at the Library of Congress fit none of them. But most activities can be conveniently covered by the four.

The patronage of artists for the design and decoration of public buildings, the minting of coins and the issuance of stamps, goes back to the earliest days of the Republic. The Government role as a collector began somewhat later. The depression and the New Deal brought into being a new and still controversial concept, the use of Government funds not so much to commission specific art works as to support unemployed artists. This led to inevitable disputes over the supposed leftist propaganda painted on Government walls by artists on the Federal payroll.

As pointed out by Clarence Derwent, chairman of the National Council on the Arts and Government, the New Deal arts projects, "while productive of much fine work, fell short of the full recognition of the value of the arts to society because of the public relief aspects of the program."

Since World War II the emphasis has shifted to the utilization of the arts as an arm of diplomacy. The aim is candidly asserted: To promote competitively the free creative tendencies of a nation long accused of letting its capitalist ideology cramp artistic expression.

AMERICANS' NEW SIDE

As William Benton, former Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs, put it in the early stages of the program, it was to show that Americans, "accused throughout the world of being a materialistic, money-mad race, without interest in art and without appreciation of artists or music, have a side in our personality as a race other than materialism."

Or, as Mr. Schnitzer put it more recently, with regard to the performing arts, "It is propaganda—in the best sense. We are saying, 'Here are some artists whose work we enjoy' and we hope you'll enjoy it, too."

Actually, the State Department's Division of Cultural Relations dates to July 28, 1938. Three years later the first cultural officers were assigned to American diplomatic missions. In 1946 a major step was taken with the passage of legislation presented by Senator J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT, Democrat, of Arkansas. Becoming operative in 1948, the Fulbright plan draws on foreign currencies owed to or owned by the United States, chiefly for war surpluses, for a cooperative program of educational exchange.

Two exhibitions jointly called "Fulbright Painters," currently crossing the country, indicate how this program may operate to the benefit of individual artists. The shows are made up of samples of the work of candidates who qualified under the Fulbright Act to pursue their studies abroad.

TOURS BEGAN IN OCTOBER

One of the exhibitions opened at the Whitney Museum of Modern Art here on September 17. Both sections began tours in October. These were organized by the traveling exhibits service of the Smithsonian Institution in cooperation with the Institute of International Education. By contract with the State Department, IIE administers the Fulbright student exchange.

Here is a case, then, where a Government program has artistic implications both abroad, where the artists studied, and at home, where their work is being shown. The Fulbright scholarships cover all fields of study and that the painters represent only a small fraction of those who win them.

On the most sensitive level of exchange, in view of current East-West relations, there is the new status for American artists visiting the Soviet Union afforded by the agreement announced in Washington last January. This was signed by the State Department's William S. B. Lacy and the Soviet Ambassador at that time, Georgi N. Zaroubin, who died on November 24.

The accord did not initiate exchanges between the United States and the U.S.S.R. but facilitated them and gave them new importance. Long negotiations by Sol Hurok to bring the Moiseyev dancers here had preceded their arrival, after the conclusion of the Lacy-Zaroubin agreement. Similarly the "Porgy and Bess" company had reached Moscow on its own; Emil Gilels and David Oistrakh had played here; and the Boston Symphony went to Moscow in 1956 under the President's program as run by ANTA for the State Department.

But whereas the ANTA artists had only a "foot in the door" before the accord, according to one spokesman, the pact "opened the door wider" and gave official recognition to the visit of the Philadelphia Orchestra last May and June. This tour also had already been arranged when the accord was reached. But its auspices were enhanced by the new diplomatic understanding.

On the other hand, some cultural exchange experts see in the Lacy-Zaroubin accord an implicit quid pro quo that they regard as restrictive. These sources—within the State Department—feel that a generally freer and broader exchange is more to the point than a 50–50 balance of trade in terms of traveling artists.

Distinct from the State Department's direct role in the exchange program, there are the manifold activities of the U.S. Information Agency. Since 1953, USIA has had a major responsibility in the presentation of varied aspects of American life abroad.

This takes in the dissemination of both live and recorded music. For example, the Symphony of the Air not only played in Tokyo; a film of its tour has been popular on Japanese television. The entire Voice of America program comes under USIA and "Music U.S.A." is broadcast 7 nights a week, 52 weeks a year.

ART SHOW IN TURKEY

Meanwhile, the fine arts section of the exhibits division of the agency has a show called "Nine Generations of American Art" in Turkey. Another show, "Twentieth Century Highlights of American Painting," involved the distribution of 40 color reproductions virtually all over the world.

USIA has also arranged small overseas shows of American serigraphy (silk screen art) and stained glass. In prospect are an exhibition of prints being assembled by the Brooklyn Museum, due to go abroad in March or April, and the collection of modern painting being assembled by the City Art Museum of St. Louis.

The pertinent background fact in connection with the latter project is that early in 1956, USIA withdrew sponsorship of three collections of paintings that were to have been sent abroad. The trouble started with denunciation of a show called "Sport in Art" by the Dallas Patriotic Council.

This raised a flurry over subversive art and underlined the vulnerability of Government to political criticism whenever it was the sponsor of art activities.

Although there remain 9 months before the St. Louis collection starts on its way, such criticism is not expected this time. A museum man associated with the choice of some of the paintings said, "I've been assured that there will be no censorship." An interested official of USIA crosses his fingers when the question is raised.

The general implication is that the tensions of the period associated with the late Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, Republican, of Wisconsin, have been eased. But Government endeavor in any field of the arts remains subject to attack at almost any moment.

The design and decoration of public buildings is a timeless function of Government. On November 23, the General Services Administration announced selection of a site west of Foley Square for what will be the largest Federal office building outside the District of Columbia. Recently, there has been increasing awareness that American buildings abroad could symbolize the best of the contemporary American tradition.

Assignments to architects are made through the Office of Foreign Buildings of the State Department. The Department is completing the 5th year of a 10-year, $200 million program involving new embassies and consulates on four continents.

There is an advisory committee of three leading architects appointed on a rotational basis. The Department also has on hand about 800 brochures from architects. It makes its selection on the basis of the advice of the committee, on what it knows of the other architects, and on the special conditions applying in the country where the building is to be erected.

Thus Mr. Stone was commissioned to do the New Delhi chancellery. He was also architect of the U.S. pavilion at the Brussels Fair. In the case of the new Embassy in London, a different technique of choice was used. The department arranged a competition among eight American architects and a seven-man jury chose Eero Saarinen, of Michigan, as the winner.

An important agency, particularly with regard to public monuments and sculpture, is the Commission of Fine Arts, dating to 1910. When Congress created the American Battle Monuments Commission in 1923, it was provided that any design or material for a memorial had to be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts.

MINISTRY WAS OPPOSED

Moreover, pursuant to a Presidential request of January 1951, the Commission was the agency chosen to make the first and only survey of all the Government's activities in the field of art. The report was submitted in 1953. In an introduction, preceding excerpts from testimony of all Government agencies involved, the Commission said:

"It is a source of the deepest satisfaction to members of the Commission that here in this fortunate country we have freedom to choose what seems most worthwhile in the cultural life of our time, and that the artist, in creating works of art, is free to express his own inner convictions without compulsion on the part of the state or other outside forces.

"Here we have no centralized control of art activities on the part of the Government, such as exists in many other countries."

And the Commission went on to oppose efforts to create a Ministry of Fine Arts or to combine in a single bureau art activities now carried on effectively in a number of Government agencies.

Nevertheless, the Commission—headed since 1950 by David E. Finley, who was until 1956 also Director of the National Gallery of Art—is occasionally charged with exercising arbitrary influence. It has been asserted that the seven-man unit has a stranglehold on the design and decoration of all Federal buildings and monuments in Washington, and on the design of battle monuments anywhere.

Critics of the Commission have insisted that it hews to an academic line and has facilitated commissions for the generally conservative members of the National Sculpture Society as against nonmember sculptors.

A Commission source, aware of such charges, points out that since not only authorization, but also appropriation, for any monument stems from Congress, it is to be expected that the Commission's advice should follow conservative lines. One thing rarely said of Congressmen, the source suggests, is that they are personally inclined toward advanced tendencies in art.

Nevertheless, the supposed grip of the National Sculpture Society on Government commissions invariably comes up whenever the larger question of the Government and the arts is raised.

AGAINST CENTRALIZATION

From 1951 to 1954, the society was headed by Wheeler Williams, who since 1957 has been president of the American Artists Professional League. Both groups strongly oppose any centralization of Government art activities.

In a leaflet called "War Cry," the league declares, "We must continue our battle to see that art is not socialized under political bureaucracy."

The society and the league remain firmly aloof from groups like the Committee on Government and Art, and the National Council on the Arts and Government. These have backed legislation pointing toward a permanent advisory council for the arts.

According to Adali S. Hardin, president of the National Sculpture Society, "The minute there comes a Federal bureau with a capacity to advise, some freedom is going to be dissipated."

The Committee on Government and Art, founded in 1948 and made up of representatives of 12 national organizations, including the younger and less influential Sculptors Guild, declared in a statement of principles on May 25, 1956:

"We believe that governmental art policies should represent broad artistic viewpoints, and not the predominance of any particular school or schools.

"In order to aid in making available to the Government the best experience and knowledge of the art world, we believe that there should be advisory bodies composed chiefly of professionals in the respective fields; and that art organizations in these fields should have a voice in nominating the members of these bodies."

SEVEN FIELDS REPRESENTED

The National Council on the Arts and Government consists of individual representatives of seven major art fields. In general, it has been alined with the position of the Committee on Government and Art, whose chairman is Lloyd Goodrich, of the Whitney Museum.

Government art collections, which symbolize the Nation's official interest in the preservation and formal display of accrued treasures, include the National Gallery of Art, the National Collection of Fine Arts, and the Freer Gallery.

In his invaluable "Government and Art," Prof. Ralph Purcell writes that it was not until 1906 that the Government began its role as a collector. He notes that when the British burned the Capitol in 1814, the only two paintings owned by the United States—gifts of Louis XVI—were destroyed.

In 1906, a group of paintings known as the Johnston collection was given to the Government by Harriet Lane Johnston, niece of President James Buchanan and mistress of the White House during his administration.

The condition was that the small but valuable collection should be placed in a National Gallery of Art, when one was established. Professor Purcell recounts how a "friendly court action was instituted to determine if the art collection already in the Smithsonian Institution would legally constitute a National Gallery of Art."

The court ruled that it would. Thus the early Smithsonian collection, enhanced by the Johnston gift, was newly constituted as the National Gallery of Art.

Oddly enough, the art in the Smithsonian was to lose that title after all. In 1937, when the Mellon collection became the Nation's foremost, the title was transferred to it. The National Gallery of Art now comprises the original Mellon bequest, and subsequent additions.

The Smithsonian art was renamed the National Collection of Fine Arts. It is the art that is to be housed in the old Patent Office Building under the recent legislation. Pending settlement in its new home, the national collection has about 500 portraits and pieces of sculpture on loan to public buildings, including the White House and the chambers of the Chief Justice.

The Freer Gallery of Art, devoted principally to oriental fine arts and the works of Whistler, was the gift of Charles L. Freer in 1906. The gallery was not built until 1920; and the collection was opened to the public as a unit of the National Collection of Fine Arts. The Freer Gallery is administered by the National Collection, of which it is considered a unit, and does not have a separate board of trustees, like the National Gallery of Art.

MEDALS UNDER MINT

Coins and special medals come under the Bureau of the Mint. By law, no regular coin may have its design changed more than once in 25 years. The mint traditionally opposes commemorative coins, although not always successfully.

When a piece of medallic art is authorized, the mint may commission an artist directly, have a small competition (as with the Washington quarter in 1932) or a nationwide one (as with the Jefferson nickel in 1938). It may also utilize its own artists.

This it prefers, particularly in the case of coins, where distribution of the design and maintenance of rims higher than the design's highest point, are technical essentials.

The Commission of Fine Arts acts in an advisory capacity to the mint. But the director of the Bureau is ultimately responsible for the project, subject only to approval by the Secretary of the Treasury.

STAMP ART IMPROVED

The situation with stamps is somewhat different because of the vast and steadily increasing interest in United States commemorative issues. For many years, these were subject to strong criticism from philatelists, particularly as compared artistically with certain foreign stamps, such as the French.

On March 26, 1957, a seven-member Citizens' Stamp Advisory Committee was established. It has three artist members. Final decision on a new stamp rests with the Postmaster General. Philatelic and art circles generally agree that the pictorial quality of the commemoratives has tended to improve; although controversies over individual stamps continue.

And, indeed, the controversies continue over virtually every phase of the complex Government-Arts relationship in a democracy whose Puritan intellectual heritage started it off with what has been called (by John A. Kouwenhoven, among others) an antiesthetic bias.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will be received and appropriately referred.

The bills, introduced by Mr. HUMPHREY, were received, read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. HUMPHREY:

S. 446. A bill to amend the International Cultural Exchange and Trade Fair and Participation Act of 1956 to authorize the President to provide for participation by foreign governments and citizens of other countries in cultural and other activities in the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. HUMPHREY (for himself, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. DOUGLAS, and Mr. JAVITS):

S. 447. A bill to provide for the establishment of a Federal Advisory Council on the Arts to asist in the growth and development of the fine arts in the United States; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT, TO REMOVE LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF OUTSIDE INCOME

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to remove the existing limitation upon the amount of outside income which an individual may earn while receiving benefits thereunder.

It is my view that this limitation is unrealistic and absurd and should be removed by the Congress. In that connection, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article on this subject, by Mr. J. A. Livingston, appearing in the Washington Post of January 14, 1959, be printed at this point in the RECORD.

In this article, Mr. Livingston very pointedly outlines the absurdities of the law as it is now constituted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 453) to amend title II of the Social Security Act so as to remove the limitation upon the amount of outside income which an individual may earn while receiving benefits thereunder, introduced by Mr. FULBRIGHT, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The article presented by Mr. FULBRIGHT is as follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY PENALIZES THOSE WHO WORK

(By J. A. Livingston)

"Don't get out of humor with me for writing you again and don't be annoyed when I ask you not to use my name. When you have time please write another article about social security," writes Mrs. E. S. M.

"As a workingwoman (a widow), I am most concerned with the limitation on my earnings. People in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare insist they don't restrict my earnings. Yet they withhold social security checks when I earn more than $1,200 a year.

"I wrote you some time ago that when I earned $1,718, or $518 over the limit, seven social security checks amounting to $630.70 were held back. I was out of pocket $112.70.

"I have been with my present firm part time for 3 years. When my boss got me a 10-cent-an-hour raise without telling me, it pushed my income over the $1,200 mark.

"I am now in line for a raise, but I shall not take it. I'll lose more than I'll get. People like to feel their work is appreciated. A raise in salary is the way a boss shows appreciation. But that is not for those on social security.

"Women who live in the Hotel Plaza in New York, or the Barclay in Philadelphia, or the Sheraton Park in Washington collect social security benefits because they get their income from dividends or bond coupons. Some of them need their social security checks like an extra hole in the head. But I need every cent I can possibly earn, and I'm not allowed to earn what I can."

Mrs. M. can't quarrel with me. Eddie Cantor and his wife can roll up to a social security office in a Cadillac and collect a check, even though the month before Cantor appeared on a TV show and earned a reported $2,000. A man or a woman can qualify for social security on a $100,000 income if the income comes from dividends, bonds, rents, or royalties. The law is screwy. See if you can understand it.

The law penalizes the steady worker, the low-income earner. If you earn $1,200, you can collect your benefits in any 1 year in full. But if you earn $1,200.01, you lose 1 month's benefits.

You can collect a benefit in any month in which you earn no more than $100 a month. (Formerly it was $80 a month.) Thus, if you earn $4,000 in 1 month and $100 per month in the other 11 months, you can collect 11 pension checks even though your total earnings are $5,100. But if your total earnings come to $2,080.01, and in every month you earn more than $100, you can't collect a single benefit check.

Why? Because for each $80 or fraction thereof above $1,200, you lose one benefit check. And if your yearly earnings hit $1,280.01, you lose two checks; earnings of $2,080.01 would snatch away all checks because in every month you earned more than $100. (It's hard to believe the human mind could have devised anything so complex.)

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare is painfully and tortuously aware of the strings Congress has attached to benefit payments. It has prepared a memorandum which tries to placate the justifiably disgruntled:

"Since the old-age and survivors insurance program is designed to insure people against loss of earnings from work, it is appropriate that the retirement test take into account only an individual's earnings. It is a test of whether the worker has retired—not whether he is in need. By paying benefits without regard to other resources an individual may have built up during his working lifetime the old-age and survivors insurance system encourages private savings."

And, similarly, it discourages work.

When the Government has to defend a policy with such perverted logic, it's time to change the law. The cost of eliminating the retirement test is estimated at $2 to $3 billion a year, perhaps more. It's argued we can't afford it. As I see it, we can't afford the law as it stands.

If we can't pay old-age pensions as a matter of right, then we can't afford to pay the rich while penalizing the poor.

Congress should apply a straight income test, not a retirement test. If persons who are forced to work can't collect social security, then the well-off who don't have to work should not collect it.

Thank you, Mrs. M., for prodding me—and, I hope, the 86th Congress.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, and the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill which will provide for the appointment of an assistant to the Secretary of State to assure joint policy and planning and equitable budgeting of exchange of persons programs and administrative cooperation between staffs engaged in carrying out such programs.

A similar bill, S. 3112, of the 85th Congress, was passed unanimously by the Senate last year but failed to be considered in the House of Representatives during the closing days of the last session of the 85th Congress. This bill has the endorsement of the Department of State and, in view of the Senate's unanimous action of last year, I am hopeful that it will be scheduled for early consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 455) to provide for the appointment of an assistant to the Secretary of State to assure joint policy and planning and equitable budgeting of exchange of persons programs and administrative cooperation between staffs engaged in carrying out such programs, introduced by Mr. FULBRIGHT (for himself and Mr. HUMPHREY), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1957

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I introduce today for appropriate reference two measures. One is a bill, of which the principal cosponsor is my colleague from New York [Mr. KEATING], and which is also cosponsored by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. CASE] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], to amend the Civil Rights Act of 1957 by extending the life of the Civil Rights Commission until January 2, 1961.

The bill would give the Attorney General authority to initiate upon sworn complaint of affected individuals action for a civil injunction to prevent interference with civil rights, including the right to attend a nonsegregated public school, to enjoy equal opportunity to attend a public beach, public golf course, park, and other public facilities like restaurants and hotels, and to ride on trains, buses, and trolleys.

The other measure is a bill to amend the Civil Rights Act of 1957 by including therein part III, which was stricken when the bill was under consideration in the Senate in 1957. With respect to this bill, I am the principal sponsor. The other sponsors are my colleague from New York [Mr. KEATING], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. CASE], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT].

I ask unanimous consent that the bill may lie on the desk until the close of next Tuesday in order to permit other Senators to cosponsor it if they so desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. The restoration of part III is the fundamental civil rights measure which should be considered by this Congress. Its consideration will constitute the acid test of the claim of Senator JOHNSON that his resolution which passed yesterday modifying the Senate rules on debate that deal with filibusters has meaning and content. Events since 1957 have shown that the authority of the Federal Government is essential to insure the enjoyment of civil rights by individual citizens particularly in the South and to sustain the hand of moderates who wish the South to be law abiding and believe that this can be effected consistently with an effective and orderly transition from social conditions which have resulted in a segregation of the races and a denial of the equal opportunities guaranteed by the Constitution.

Along with the proposals to curb "hate bombings" and "hate mail" introduced last Friday, these bills constitute excellent examples of what were the real stakes in the effort to change significantly Senate rule XXII permitting filibusters.

Under such circumstances it seems most unlikely that we can expect real decreases in the resistance to public school desegregation which has already resulted in the closing of 13 public schools in 2 States. The resulting tension presents a climate in which flourish the activities of "hate bombers" and "hate propagandists" who operate in communities where the failure of officials to condemn one form of lawlessness tends to be taken by fanatics as encouraging other acts of violence. A repetition of 1958's inaction by Congress in the months ahead on civil rights measures may make us unwilling witnesses to a series of new crises in communities throughout the South.

Under the terms of the bill which I am introducing, the U.S. Attorney General would be empowered upon written complaint to begin civil injunctive proceedings against local officials or those conspiring with such officials to deprive a citizen of his constitutional civil rights under the 14th amendment. These include the right to attend a nonsegregated public school, to enjoy equal opportunity to attend a public beach, public golf course, park, and other public facilities like restaurants and hotels, and to ride on trains, buses, and trolleys. Other vital rights protected by the Constitution are the right to vote, to serve on a jury, the right to a fair trial, and the very right to be a litigant and to enjoy unintimidated and uncoerced access to the courts of justice.

Under present law, an individual may bring suit for civil injunction to protect his civil rights, but in many cases such a person may not be financially able to begin proceedings, and the antibarratry statutes now on the books in six Southern States make it increasingly difficult for those deprived of their rights to seek the help of others to get judicial redress. My bill would permit the Attorney General to act upon showing that the person about to be deprived is himself financially unable to prosecute a civil proceeding on his own behalf.

In addition, upon the request of a State or municipality seeking to carry out the provisions of the 14th amendment, but prevented from doing so because of a conspiracy or threats of violence, the Attorney General is granted specific authority to seek civil injunction suits on its behalf.

The Supreme Court in the Brown case in 1954 and in several subsequent decisions has decided on the law in respect to desegregation of the public schools, but the responisbility for implementing it through adequate Government organization rests primarily with Congress. The successful Senate passage of part III of the act as it originally passed the House of Representatives 2 years ago would fill a major gap in the Federal Government's ability to assure every child's constitutional right to a nonsegregated education.

President Eisenhower in his state of the Union message spoke with great concern of the image of America abroad and the price we must pay in terms of international prestige among our free world allies following the closing down of public schools to avoid desegregation. Partially counteracting some of that damaging publicity have been the recent activities of the Civil Rights Commission and its investigation into complaints of denial of voting rights starting in Alabama. However, it has begun to work on only about 20 percent of the tasks set for it and will have completed at best half its assignments if we permit it to expire in November of this year.

The proposed extension of the Commission to January 1961, as put forward by Senator KEATING, should give it sufficient time to discharge its primary responsibility to conduct similar voting investigations in other States and study attempts to deny equal protection of the law in matters ranging from education to voting, transportation, employment, housing, public accommodations, and amusements, Government facilities and State and local administration of justice.

Although the Commission did not initially receive full cooperation from local authorities in its Alabama investigation, and once again Federal court orders had to be obtained, the number of complaints involving voting rights rose from 10 at the start of public hearings to 50 before their conclusion. Clearly, the Civil Rights Commission should be continued so that members of minority groups who fear they are being deprived of their right to vote have ample opportunity to press their complaints openly before a Federal fact-finding body empowered to make on-the-spot investigations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will be received and appropriately referred.

The bills referred to by Mr. JAVITS were received, read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. KEATING (for himself, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. CASE of New Jersey, Mr. COOPER, and Mr. SCOTT):

S. 435. A bill to amend the Civil Rights Act of 1957 to provide that the Civil Rights Commission shall have until January 2, 1961, to submit its report, findings, and recommendations; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JAVITS (for himself, Mr. KEATING, Mr. CASE of New Jersey, Mr. COOPER, and Mr. SCOTT):

S. 456. A bill to amend part III of the Civil Rights Act of 1957; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONSTRUCTION OF A VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION HOSPITAL FOR SOUTH TEXAS

Mr. YARBOROUGH. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to authorize the erection of a U.S. Veterans' Administration hospital in south Texas.

This is an area with a population of well over 1,500,000 people residing in 40 counties, in a land area totaling over 40,000 square miles, most of them in the 14th and 15th Congressional Districts, south of San Antonio. In all of this area, there is not a single veterans' hospital—a situation which causes some veterans to travel more than 400 miles to secure medical attention.

Some veterans have died while traveling from this area to VA hospitals. Many veterans have been denied hospitalization benefits because they were unable to make the trip to the nearest facility.

The Veterans' Affairs Commission of Texas last year passed a resolution urging construction of a hospital in this area. The South Texas Veterans' Alliance also is working for solution of this problem.

The facility authorized under this bill would be a 300-bed unit. Such a facility is badly needed to extend to veterans of this area the hospitalization benefits envisioned for them under the Veterans' Administration program.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill providing for construction of a Veterans' Administration hospital in south Texas be printed at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 457) to authorize the erection of a U.S. Veterans' Administration hospital in the State of Texas, introduced by Mr. YARBOROUGH, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Commitee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in order to provide for the furnishing of general medical and surgical facilities to veterans entitled to hospitalization or domiciliary care, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a suitable site in south Texas, and to contract for the erection thereon of a hospital with a capacity of 300 beds, together with the necessary auxiliary structures, mechanical equipment, domiciliary and out-patient dispensary facilities, and accommodations for all personnel; and the Administrator is authorized and directed to acquire the necessary vehicles, furniture, equipment, and accessories to be used in the maintenance and operation of such hospital. The Administrator is authorized to accept gifts or donations to assist in defraying the costs of constructing and equipping such hospital.

SEC. 2. In order to carry out the provisions of this Act, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum of $26,000 per bed.

ADDITIONAL JUVENILE COURT JUDGESHIP

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senators BIBLE, MORSE, BEALL, and JAVITS, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for the appointment of an additional judge for the juvenile court for the District of Columbia.

A similar measure passed the House and Senate in the 85th Congress. The bill was referred to a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses; the Senate conferees accepted the version of the bill which passed the House, and the Senate adopted the conference report, but the report was not acted upon by the House prior to adjournment.

The need for an additional judge was urgent and demonstrable last August. It is even more so now.

The business of the juvenile court is broad in scope and important in nature. The court has jurisdiction over cases in which children under the age of 18 years are charged with crimes, truancy, conduct beyond parental control, and actions endangering their own or others' health, morals, or safety. It must deal with all cases involving the paternity of children born out of wedlock, violation of the child labor and compulsory education laws and contributing to the delinquency of minors. The court also has concurrent jurisdiction with the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia in criminal nonsupport cases.

The Congress has provided for 1 judge to handle the entire business of the juvenile court for the 800,000 people of the District.

The present juvenile court judge, Orman W. Ketcham, has labored well and tirelessly to perform the tasks assigned to him, and he deserves the thanks of the Congress and the Community.

But no man alone can carry the workload of the court today.

On September 1, 1958, the backlog of cases on the juvenile court hearing list numbered 890, including 329 cases of complaints against juveniles. To concentrate on the pressing juvenile matters, Judge Ketcham was forced to take certain drastic administrative measures. All nonsupport hearings were suspended for 2 months. Administrative hearings for wards of the court who committed new offenses were discontinued. An increasing number of cases were shifted to the district court for disposition.

By these means, a decrease in the backlog of juvenile cases was achieved at the expense of nonsupport cases, but when hearings of the latter type were resumed the backlog of juvenile cases, which are instituted at the rate of 75 per week, again climbed to its present record high. In spite of the hundreds of cases which have been heard by Judge Ketcham since last September, the total case backlog today number 1,032, an increase of almost 150 since Congress adjourned. If no new cases are considered it would still take Judge Ketcham months to dispose of the existing backlog.

Passage of this bill is not just needed for the relief of a badly overburdened judge. It is needed by the numerous children and destitute persons who come before the juvenile court in times of crisis and financial extremity in their lives. Their cases cannot receive the careful and prompt consideration by the court demanded by elementary justice under present conditions.

I urge favorable committee action upon this bill for the appointment of an additional judge for the juvenile court at an early date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 465) to provide for the appointment of an additional judge for the juvenile court of the District of Columbia, introduced by Mr. CLARK (for himself, Mr. BIBLE, Mr. MORSE, Mr. BEALL, and Mr. JAVITS), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

FINANCING POLITICAL CAMPAIGNS

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. President, I should like to speak briefly on a subject which is of interest to my Senate colleagues at least once every 6 years. This is the problem of financing political campaigns.

There are many ways of obtaining campaign funds. Most are honorable ways. Some, unfortunately, are not. Money, whatever the amount involved, does not taint political campaigns. Money received openly and spent openly casts no shadow of doubt. It is only when money is handled in secrecy, even in partial secrecy, that it becomes a political evil.

For that reason, Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE], and the Senator from California [Mr. ENGLE], I introduce for appropriate reference, a bill designed to make campaign financing and reporting the open and above board act which it should be and which American citizens have a right to expect it to be.

Mr. President, campaign financing, at this time, is regulated primarily by the Federal Corrupt Practices Act and the Hatch Act. These laws are based on the premise that clean elections depend on a full and complete disclosure of political contributions and expenditures and on limiting the dollars which may be spent in any one election. These are most worthy ideals and my bill does not deviate from their basic philosophy. The statutes themselves, however, are hopelessly out of tune with the times. They date back a quarter of a century or more. Their antiquity is exceeded only by their inadequacy.

The limits of campaign expenditures which the existing law imposes on congressional candidates are completely unrealistic. In the course of the past decade, the rise in the cost of services has changed our ideas as to just what constitutes excessive campaign spending.

When the present act was put into effect, after being passed by the Congress, we were thinking and talking in terms of a 1925 dollar. We are today thinking and talking in terms of a 1959 dollar. There are also many new devices, such as radio and television programs, with more intensive campaigning than took place in the mid-1920's.

New mediums of communications are available, and we now present political issues by radio and television. The cost of a brief broadcast today exceeds the costliest item of campaign expenditures known to us in the 1920's.

These obsolete limitations on campaign spending are completely unrealistic and must be brought up to date. But even worse, they are unenforceable. They invite circumvention. They may force an honest office seeker to skirt close to the path of dishonesty.

Mr. President, we are well aware that large amounts of money are handled by many types of political committees which operate on a local level. Yet only committees which are branches of a national organization are subject to the requirements in the reporting law.

In recent weeks, the amount of money spent by both of our major political parties in the past elections was reported. The sums involved were huge. But I have no doubt that they were but a fraction of the total amount spent by committees and campaign organizations of all kinds operating at all levels.

In several States, primary elections are the only elections which count. Yet according to the existing law, primaries are not within Federal statutes, and no political committees are required to report contributions and expenditures in connection with primaries.

Furthermore, the existing law contains no provision for the mandatory publication of the data which is reported to the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate. The reports are relatively inaccessible to the public, unless some enterprising newspaper reporter digs them out and publishes them. Thus, the law fails in its primary intent.

Mr. President, I have, in the course of years, introduced several "clean election bills" each aimed at strengthening and safeguarding our national elections.

The first bill was introduced during the 1st session of the 84th Congress (S. 636); the second in the opening days of the 1st session of the 85th Congress

(S. 426); and the third on May 23, 1957 (S. 2150).

This is the fourth bill I have introduced on this subject, Mr. President. At this time I should like to solicit cosponsorship of other Senators who are of the same views. The bill of course may in some respects be modified and amended. That may be done in committee. The bill is subject to amendment or modification by the Senate. It may even be enlarged in scope.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill lie on the desk for 1 week, in order to give Senators the opportunity of sponsoring it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HENNINGS. The Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, of which I had the honor to be chairman, held extensive hearings on S. 636, and the bill was favorably reported by that subcommittee and by the full Committee on Rules and Administration. Unfortunately, the Senate as a whole never had an opportunity to act on that bill.

In 1956 Federal elections were subjected to further investigations by the Special Committee To Investigate Political Activities, Lobbying, and Campaign Contributions under the able chairmanship of the senior Senator from Arkansas and by the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections under the chairmanship of the junior Senator from Tennessee.

In June and July 1957, the Committee on Rules and Administration took up Senate bill 2150 and submitted it to a section-by-section scrutiny. As a result, the bill was reported to the Senate on July 3, 1957. Despite numerous efforts, I was unable, in the next 15 months to have it removed from the calendar and taken up by the Senate.

Mr. President, I have long been disturbed by that section of public opinion which holds that political campaigns are suspect—in some way unclean. I am anxious to see the field of politics returned to the position of prestige and respect that it formerly occupied in our society. Better election laws can do much to bring about such a return.

I have been honored and thankful that my endeavors in this field have resulted in bipartisan support. S. 2150 was reported favorably by a bipartisan vote of 7 to 2 in the Rules and Administration Committee. Clean elections are not of partisan concern, and I feel sure that each of our major political parties will benefit from revision of the laws. More important, the Nation, as a whole, will benefit.

It is my hope that the 86th Congress will see fit to enact a new set of laws to enhance the dignity of the National Legislature. Now is the time to do it. This is the year—a year when no Member of Congress is faced with immediate election problems.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 466) to revise the Federal election laws, to prevent corrupt practices in Federal elections, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. HENNINGS (for himself, Mr. PROXMIRE, and Mr. ENGLE), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

FUNDS FOR PAN AMERICAN GAMES

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to authorize the appropriation of $500,000 for the purpose of promoting and insuring the success of the Pan American games to be held at Chicago, Ill., August 27 through September 7 of this year.

The Pan American games are held every 4 years under the direction of the Pan American Sports Organization. The member countries are those countries of the Americas whose national Olympics committees are members of the International Olympic Association.

At present, countries eligible for participation in the games are Argentina, Bahamas, Bermuda, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Chile, Dominican Republic, Dutch West Indies, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Jamaica, Mexico, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Puerto Rico, Trinidad, United States of America, Uruguay, and Venezuela. It is probable that before the games take place Ecuador, Haiti, and Nicaragua will be added to the list of eligible countries.

The games program includes some 20 sports, in 7 of which there will be competitions for both men and women, consisting of baseball, basketball, boxing, cycling, equestrian, equestrian polo, fencing, gymnastics, modern pentathlon, rowing, shooting, skeet, soccer, swimming, tennis, track and field, volleyball, water polo, weightlifting, wrestling, and yachting.

Plans for the games are thus far incomplete, and precise budget estimates of the use of Federal funds are not yet available. It is, however, anticipated that a detailed justification will be submitted for consideration by the Committee on Appropriations of both the House and Senate before any funds are actually appropriated pursuant to this authority. Funds appropriated will be expended in the discretion of the organization sponsoring the games, subject to such audit as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States.

Sports facilities of the Chicago area will be used, including Soldier Field and the athletic facilities of Northwestern, Loyola, Chicago, and De Paul Universities. None of the funds authorized will be used to finance the building in Chicago of facilities which will be available for the recreational use of the city of Chicago after the games.

It is estimated that approximately 2,000 athletes will participate in the games.

The bringing together in friendly sports of 2,000 of tomorrow's leaders in the countries of the Western Hemisphere, under circumstances where they are going to come to know and understand one another better, is desirable from the point of view of U.S. foreign policy. The Department of State has indicated its approval of support of the games under the sponsorship of the city of Chicago in such amount as determined to be appropriate by the Congress.

President Eisenhower, in addressing Mayor Richard J. Daley, of Chicago, in accepting the chairmanship of the honorary committee for the Chicago Pan American games, recognized the games as a "clear opportunity to enhance our good relations with our neighbors in the hemisphere."

Mr. President, the success of the Pan American games in Chicago this year will certainly make a substantial contribution to the relations between the United States and other American Republics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 493) to authorize the appropriation of $500,000 to be spent for the purpose of the Pan American games to be held in Chicago, Ill., introduced by Mr. DIRKSEN (for himself and Mr. DOUGLAS), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

FEES PAYABLE TO PATENT OFFICE

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to fix the fees payable to the Patent Office, and for other purposes.

This measure, if enacted, would revise the fees collected by the U.S. Patent Office of the Department of Commerce involved in connection with patent applications, trademark applications and registrations, reissues, certificates of correction, copies of specification and drawings of patents, recording of assignments, agreements, and related matters. The revision would result generally in an increase of such fees.

The last major change in patent fees was back in 1932 when the application and issuance fees were raised to $30 each. Immediately after the 1932 revision of fees, the Patent Office was collecting in fees a sum exceeding 90 percent of the cost of operating the Patent Office. Since that time the costs of operation of the Patent Office have risen sharply, although no major adjustment in fees has been made to effect the same recovery of costs.

The Patent Office recovered in fees about 48 percent of its cost of operation in 1954, 1955, and 1956. The recovery in 1957 was about 40 percent. Because of increased expenditures for the operation of the Patent Office, this percentage will probably be less for the past and the current fiscal years. It is calculated during the next few years ahead that the fees under this proposal would cover only about 50 or 55 percent of expenditures of the Patent Office, compared with the 90-percent recovery in 1932.

It should be pointed out that the fees which would be modified by this proposal are established by statute and, therefore, congressional action is necessary to effect changes.

During the 85th Congress the Secretary of Commerce urged congressional action on the proposal to enable the Government to effect greater recovery of costs from special beneficiaries of this Government program. The Bureau of the Budget concurred in that recommendation and further indicated that it would be in accord with the program of the President.

The enactment of this legislative proposal would be in keeping with the policy of the administration of charging special beneficiaries of Government programs for the cost of operation attributable to special beneficiaries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 494) to fix the fees payable to the Patent Office and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. DIRKSEN, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN PROPERTY TO STATE OF ILLINOIS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for the conveyance of the Hines Service Center at Hines, Ill., and the Lincoln Ordnance Plant at Springfield, Ill., to the State of Illinois.

The Department of the Army desires to retain 5½ acres, more or less, of the Illinois National Guard General Depot at Springfield for the purpose of having it available to construct an armory for the Armed Reserve units in Springfield, Ill., and the State of Illinois concurs in this retention by the Federal Government.

Maj. Gen. Leo M. Boyle, the adjutant general of the State of Illinois, who is also the adjutant general of the Illinois National Guard, strongly endorses the enactment of this proposal.

The Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended, authorized the transfer of property that was otherwise surplus by the United States to an individual State without payment therefor upon certification that the property was required for training and maintaining a civilian component of the Armed Forces. This authority was repealed by the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949. Thereafter, the Department of the Army, in connection with specific bills, indicated that it would interpose no objection to legislation proposing the transfer of property to a State if, first, there was no other Department of Defense requirement for the property; second, there is a long-range requirement in support of the National Guard; third, the State would agree to use the property solely for National Guard purposes; and, fourth, the property would be available for use by the United States without charge in the event of need therefor during a war or national emergency.

Since June 30, 1949, Congress has authorized and directed the transfer of separate parcels of land to many individual States, and the transfer of these particular parcels would not involve the expenditure of any Department of Defense funds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 495) to provide for the conveyance of Hines Service Center, Hines, Ill., and Lincoln Ordance Plant, Springfield, Ill., to the State of Illinois, introduced by Mr. DIRKSEN, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

AMENDMENT OF EMPLOYMENT ACT OF 1946

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill to amend the Employment Act of 1946 to provide for the coordinated consideration of monetary policies thereunder, and to bring to bear an informed public opinion upon price and wage increases which threaten economic stability. On yesterday Representative REUSS, of Wisconsin, introduced a similar bill in the House of Representatives.

The bill would do two things:

First. Require the President to include in his economic report and annual economic program and recommendations a discussion of monetary and credit policies "to the same extent as all other policies affecting employment, production, and purchasing power."

Second. Assign to the Council of Economic Advisers in the Executive Office of the President the responsibility for holding public hearings on price or wage increases which appear to seriously threaten economic stability and to issue advisory statements, where advisable, as to whether the proposed increases are justified.

Our imperative domestic task is to bring to realization the goals of the Employment Act of 1946—maximum employment, production, and purchasing power, without inflation.

The measure we have introduced would assist toward those goals by clarifying the President's responsibility for monetary and credit policies and by bringing an informed public opinion to bear upon price and wage increases which threaten economic stability.

The record for 1958 shows that we have not been achieving the goals of the Employment Act. More than 6 percent of the labor force is still unemployed, and the recession cost us some $50 billion of potential production. At the same time, we were not able to maintain price stability even during the recession. And while the indexes have appeared stable during the past few months, the averages conceal a continued serious inflation in certain sectors of the economy, particularly in the prices of manufactured goods.

While the fault lies largely in the way the Employment Act has been administered, it is nevertheless important to strengthen the act itself.

The first change which we propose would require the President to present to the Congress and the Nation an economic report and an economic program and recommendations which are truly comprehensive. At the present time, monetary and credit policy are left largely to the Federal Reserve Board, which is independent of the President, and the policies of the Board on the one hand and the President and his executive agencies on the other, may or may not be consistent with one another.

This bill would not impair the status of the Federal Reserve Board as an independent agency. It would, however, require the President to take monetary and credit policies into account to the same extent as all other policies affecting employment, production, and purchasing power, including price stability.

His report and recommendations would therefore be complete and comprehensive instead of limited and partial.

The bill specifies, however, that if the Federal Reserve Board or other independent agency disagrees with the President's program and recommendations, "the President shall report such disagreement to the Congress, together with a statement from the disagreeing agency of its reasons."

As the act is now construed by the President, he is not required to have any monetary policy at all, much less one that is coordinated with expenditure, tax, and other governmental policies. This defeats the very purpose of the act, which was to centralize in the President responsibility for coming forward with a coherent and coordinated program.

The second change in the Employment Act which we propose would assign to the Council of Economic Advisers in the Executive Office of the President the power and duty to bring to bear an informed public opinion on price or wage increases which appear to seriously threaten economic stability. The Council would request those proposing such increases to justify them at a public hearing as not constituting a threat to stability. Moreover, the bill states that "in cases where the Council deems it advisable, it may issue an advisory statement upon such justification."

Recent experience shows that even during the 1957–58 recession, strong industries were able to push through continuing price increases frequently preceded by wage increases. These increases have had serious effects upon the stability of the entire economy, not only because of their direct effects in the industries concerned but because these industries are pace setters for the economy as a whole. And they are relatively invulnerable to general monetary and fiscal controls.

Our bill would require action by the Council of Economic Advisers only in such pace-setting industries. The mere knowledge on the part of management and labor that they may be invited to justify price or wage action before a public body should encourage more consideration for the public interest in price stability. In a sense, the public will acquire at least some representation at the wage-bargaining and price-setting table. Finally, in cases where the Council is convinced of the lack of justification of the price or wage increase proposed, it can issue a public advisory statement which should be influential in restraining harmful action.

We hope that management and labor in the strong, pace-setting industries will recognize the necessity for this measure and give us their support. In any case, the interest of the general public in the stability of the economy is paramount and must take precedence over the right of private groups to take action injurious to the entire economy without restraint of any kind.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill may be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 497) to amend the Employment Act of 1946 to provide for the coordinated consideration of monetary policies thereunder, and to bring to bear an informed public opinion upon price and wage increases which threaten economic stability, introduced by Mr. CLARK, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 3 of the Employment Act of 1946 (15 U.S.C., sec. 1023) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) In order to clarify the President's responsibilities under this section, he shall consider, in his review under subsection (a)(3) of this section, and in his program and recommendations under subsections (a)(4) and (b) of this section, monetary and credit policies, to the same extent as all other policies affecting employment, production, and purchasing power. If the Federal agency directly responsible for the execution of such monetary and credit policies disagrees with such program and recommendations, the President shall report such disagreement to the Congress, together with a statement from the disagreeing agency of its reasons."

SEC. 2. Section 4(c) of the Employment Act of 1946 (15 U.S.C., sec. 1021 et seq.) is amended by adding an additional subsection (c)(6) as follows:

"(6) in order to bring to bear an informed public opinion upon price or wage increases which appear to seriously threaten economic stability;

"(i) to request persons proposing such price or wage increases to justify them at a public hearing as not in fact constituting such a threat; and

"(ii) in cases where the Council deems it advisable, to issue an advisory statement upon such justification."

AMERIGO VESPUCCI DAY

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and my distinguished colleague, the junior Senator from New York [Mr. KEATING], I introduce a joint resolution, designating the 9th day of March in each year as Amerigo Vespucci Day. Representative SANTANGELO, of New York, is introducing a similar resolution in the House.

Amerigo Vespucci, after whom our Western Hemisphere continues to be named, has made for himself a tremendous place in history as one of the discoverers of the land in South and Central America. It is particularly important because he was the first of 5 million of his countrymen from Italy—he was born in Florence, Italy, on March 9, 1451—to set foot on the continent of America.

He served as navigator on a voyage that in 1497 brought some of the first Europeans within sight of the mainland of what was later to be called America, in honor of his name. He made three further voyages to the shores of this continent and he participated in the fitting out of Christopher Columbus' second expedition. It is of special and timely interest to us, in this day of a new exploration which may lead us to the very stars which guided Amerigo Vespucci to our continent, that this man was the first explorer to sight Cape Canaveral. I think it is indeed fitting that the day of his birth be made a most special occasion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 15) designating the 9th day of March in each year as Amerigo Vespucci Day, introduced by Mr. JAVITS (for himself and Mr. KEATING), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SCHOOL SUPPORT ACT OF 1959—ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF BILL

Under authority of the order of the Senate of January 9, 1959, the names of Senators CARROLL, MUSKIE, and PASTORE were added as additional cosponsors of the bill (S. 2) to provide financial assistance for the support of public schools by appropriating funds to the States to be used for constructing school facilities and for teachers' salaries, introduced by Mr. MURRAY (for himself and other Senators), on January 9, 1959.

AMENDMENT OF CLAYTON ACT WITH REFERENCE TO EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY—ADDITIONAL COSPONSOR OF BILL

Under authority of the order of the Senate of January 9, 1959, the name of Mr. BYRD of West Virginia was added as an additional cosponsor of the bill (S. 11) to amend the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act with reference to equality of opportunity, introduced by Mr. KEFAUVER (for himself and other Senators), on January 9, 1959.

HOUSING ACT OF 1959—ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF BILL

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, on January 9, 1959, I introduced a housing bill which bears the number S. 57. There were some cosponsors of the bill. Unfortunately, however, two Senators who have been active in promoting housing legislation because of their great interest in it failed to have their names included as cosponsors of the bill. The bill has already been printed. However, I ask unanimous consent that on the next printing of the bill, should there be one, the names of the two Senators from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON and Mr. JACKSON] may be entered as cosponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TAX ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM FOR SMALL BUSINESS—ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF BILL

Under authority of the order of the Senate of January 9, 1959, the names of Senators RANDOLPH, COOPER, MOSS, MORSE, BIBLE, JAVITS, BYRD of West Virginia, DODD, GRUENING, and JACKSON were added as additional cosponsors of the bill (S. 59) to provide a program of tax adjustment for small business and for persons engaged in small business, introduced by Mr. SPARKMAN (for himself, Mr. HUMPHREY, and Mr. KEFAUVER), on January 9, 1959.

AMENDMENT OF HOUSING LAW—ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF BILL

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, at the request of the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. JACKSON], the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. MUSKIE], and the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG], I ask unanimous consent that their names be added to the list of cosponsors of the bill (S. 193) to amend and extend the laws relating to renewal of urban communities, and for other purposes, which I introduced, on behalf of myself and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] on January 12.

I understand that the bill has gone to the printer; so I request that when it is next printed, the names of the additional cosponsors be added.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEATING in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

COUNTRY LIFE COMMISSION—ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF BILL

Under authority of the order of the Senate of January 14, 1959, the names of Senators MORTON and MUNDT were added as additional cosponsors of the bill (S. 265) to establish a Commission on Country Life, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. WILEY on January 14, 1959.

EQUALIZATION OF PAY OF RETIRED MEMBERS OF UNIFORMED SERVICES—ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF BILL

Under authority of the order of the Senate of January 14, 1959, the names of Senators HUMPHREY, MOSS, YARBOROUGH, SCOTT, SPARKMAN, LANGER, ALLOTT, BUTLER, JAVITS, HRUSKA, KEATING, PROUTY, and Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota were added as additional cosponsors of the bill (S. 269) to equalize the pay of retired members of the uniformed services, introduced by Mr. GOLDWATER (for himself and other Senators) on January 14, 1959.

EXPRESSION OF SENSE OF THE SENATE ON LOANS MADE BY RURAL ELECTRIFICATION ADMINISTRATION—ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF RESOLUTION

Under authority of the order of the Senate of January 14, 1959, the names of Senators HENNINGS, CURTIS, MURRAY, LANGER, and CLARK were added as additional cosponsors of the resolution (S. Res. 21) expressing the sense of the Senate concerning the making of loans by the Rural Electrification Administration, submitted by Mr. AIKEN (for himself and other Senators) on January 14, 1959.

PRINTING OF REVIEW OF REPORTS ON GILA RIVER, CAMELBACK RESERVOIR SITE TO SALT RIVER, ARIZ. (S. DOC. NO. 5)

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I am about to submit a matter to which I particularly invite the attention of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER].

Mr. President, I present a letter from the Secretary of the Army, transmitting a report dated September 30, 1958, from the Chief of Engineers, Department of the Army, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on a review of reports on Gila River, Camelback Reservoir site to Salt River, Ariz., requested by a resolution of the Committee on Public Works, adopted August 7, 1956. I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed as a Senate document, with an illustration, and referred to the Committee on Public Works.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDRESSES, EDITORIALS, ARTICLES, ETC., PRINTED IN THE RECORD

On request, and by unanimous consent, addresses, editorials, articles, and so forth, were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. KUCHEL:

Address entitled "Public Interest Demands Clean Air," delivered by him before plenary session of national conference on air pollution, Washington, D.C., November 18, 1958.

By Mr. HUMPHREY:

Address delivered by Senator RANDOLPH before the annual civil service banquet of American Federation of Government Employees, Norfolk Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, Va., January 16, 1959.

NOTICE OF CONSIDERATION BY FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE ON SUNDRY NOMINATIONS

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I desire to announce that the Senate received today the following nominations:

C. Burke Elbrick, of Kentucky, a Foreign Service officer of the class of career minister, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Portugal;

James C. H. Bonbright, of New York, a Foreign Service officer of the class of career minister, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Sweden;

Richard B. Wigglesworth, of Massachusetts, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Canada;

Lampton Berry, of Mississippi, a Foreign Service officer of class 1, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Ceylon;

John D. Jernegan, of California, a Foreign Service officer of class 1, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Iraq;

Livingston T. Merchant, of the District of Columbia, to be an Assistant Secretary of State;

Harry A. Bullis, of Minnesota, to be Chairman of the International Development Advisory Board for a term of 2 years;

John O. Bell, of Maryland, to be Special Assistant for Mutual Security Coordination in the Department of State; and

Leonard J. Saccio, of Connecticut, to be Deputy Director of the International Cooperation Administration in the Department of State.

The Senate has also received the nominations of 120 persons for appointment to, or promotion in, the Foreign Service of the United States.

Notice is given that the Committee on Foreign Relations, at the expiration of 6 days, in accordance with the committee rule, will give consideration to these nominations.

BONDING OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have recently reviewed a report from the Treasury Department on operations in connection with the bonding of Government officers and employees, under the act of August 9, 1955.

The Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, of which I am chairman, during the 1st session of the 84th Congress recommended to the Congress legislation which I sponsored, and which was approved, authorizing the Treasury Department to cover Federal employees under bonds at Government expense.

Mr. President, this report shows that Federal employees have saved $1,732,000 annually and the Government itself has saved in administrative cost $478,000. These annual savings to the Government alone exceed the annual premium rate of Government bonds for all Federal employees by $180,000.

Mr. President, I am quite proud of the report on the operation of Public Law 323, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT ON OPERATIONS IN CONNECTION WITH THE BONDING OF GOVERNMENT OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES UNDER THE ACT OF AUGUST 9, 1955, FISCAL YEAR ENDED JUNE 30, 1958

Public Law 323, 84th Congress, 1st session, approved August 9, 1955, requires the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit to Congress on or before October 1 of each year a comprehensive report of operations under the act during the preceding fiscal year.

Pursuant to regulations of the Treasury Department, each of the executive departments and 49 independent offices, agencies and establishments covered by the act, submitted reports containing the specific information required by Public Law 323 for the current year. Reports were also received from the Architect of the Capitol (first report), General Accounting Office, Government Printing Office, House of Representatives (Sergeant at Arms), and Library of Congress, in the legislative branch, and from the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts and the Supreme Court of the United States relating to the judicial branch.

The following tables summarize the information reported:

NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES COVERED

As of June 30, 1958, 944,595 employees in the executive branch were covered by bonds procured under the act as compared with 957,585 employees covered as of June 30, 1957. Reports received from the legislative and judicial branches indicate that 122 legislative employees and 1,153 judicial employees were covered by bonds procured under the provisions of the act. A blanket bond of the Post Office Department covering 852,600 persons accounted for 90 percent of the bonded employees, which is the same percentage as for the previous year.

The following statement summarizes the number of employees covered by type of bond as at the close of the fiscal year 1958 compared with those at the close of the fiscal year 1957:

Type of bond	Executive		Legislative		Judicial		Total
	1958	1957	1958	1957	1958	1957	1958	1957
Position schedule	35,279	37,089	118	112	38	33	35,435	37,234
Blanket	908,873	919,934			1,105	1,105	909,978	921,039
Individual	443	562	4	1	10	12	457	575
Total	944,595	957,585	122	113	1,153	1,150	945,870	958,848

The reduction of 12,978 in the number of employees covered at the close of 1958 as compared with 1957 resulted primarily from decreases of 11,089 in the number of employees covered in the Post Office Department, 3,180 in the Department of the Air Force and 644 in the Federal Housing Administration. Other reporting units reflected increases and decreases of lesser magnitude involving an overall increase of 1,935.

NUMBER AND TYPE OF BONDS PROCURED

Agencies of the executive branch procured 560 bonds under the act. Of this number, 94 were position schedule, 23 were blanket, and 443 were individual bonds. The majority of the individual bonds were taken to cover travel advances.

The following statement summarizes the number and type of bonds in effect as of June 30, 1958, as compared with those in effect at the close of fiscal year 1957:

Type of bond	Executive		Legislative		Judicial		Total
	1958	1957	1958	1957	1958	1957	1958	1957
Position schedule	94	95	4	3	3	3	101	101
Blanket	23	23			1	1	24	24
Individual	443	562	4	1	10	12	457	575
Total	560	680	8	4	14	16	582	700

AMOUNTS OF PREMIUMS PAID FOR BONDS

The following summary shows the annual premium rate on bonds in force as of June 30, 1958, compared with June 30, 1957. The majority of the bonds, other than individual bonds, run for a period of 2 years. Premiums on these bonds are shown on the basis of the proportionate cost for 1 year, together with the premiums on 1-year bonds, in order to arrive at an annual rate:

Type of bond	As of June 30, 1958				Total as of June 30, 1957
	Executive	Legislative	Judicial	Total
Position schedule	$117,637	$538	$255	$118,430	$137,824
Blanket	169,675		3,459	173,134	234,579
Individual	6,147	82	160	6,389	6,455
Total	293,459	620	3,874	297,953	378,858

The reduction in the premium rate for 1958 as compared with 1957 is due primarily to the decrease in premium costs of the Post Office Department from $183,514 to $130,219. This reduction was occasioned by (1) a reduction of 11,089 in the number of employees covered, (2) a reduction in the unit cost of coverage per employee from $0.21 to $0.19, and (3) the receipt of dividends approximating $55,000 from the 2-year bond procured January 1, 1956. The Post Office Department expects a similar dividend of approximately $47,000 upon termination of the present 2-year bond procured January 1, 1958.

CLAIMS AGAINST SURETY COMPANIES

The following statement shows claims for the period from July 1, 1956, to June 30, 1957, and July 1, 1957, to June 30, 1958, as compared with a 12-month period prior to the effective date of the act:

	Fiscal year 1958	Fiscal year 1957	Average, fiscal years 1957-58	Jan. 1 to Dec. 31, 1955
Amount of claims	$126,585	$74,203	$100,394	$123,608
Amounts recovered	93,030	63,149	78,090	101,986
Amount of claims pending	33,555	11,054	22,304	[1] 21,618

[1] One claim paid in the amount of $3.43 less than submitted.

ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES

Administrative costs of surety bond procurement and related operations (including expenses in connection with handling, examination, filing and correspondence) for the fiscal year 1958, amounted to $29,506 for all agencies reporting. These expenses were greater for the fiscal year 1958 since most 2-year bonds expired December 31, 1957, and new bonds were procured. However, the average for the 2 years is less than $481,973 than the administrative expenses prior to the approval of Public Law 323.

The following table summarizes administrative costs for the fiscal year 1958, compared with figures available for prior years:

	Fiscal year 1958	Fiscal year 1957	Average, fiscal years 1957-58	Fiscal year 1955	Increase (+) or decrease (−) 2-year average of fiscal year 1957—fiscal year 1958 compared to fiscal year 1955
Personal services	$27,229	$19,615	$23,422	$502,961	−$479,539
Printing and reproduction	896	546	721	1,638	−917
Other expense	1,381	587	984	2,501	−1,517
Total	29,506	20,748	25,127	507,100	−481,973

COMPARATIVE STATEMENT

A comparative statement of certain items relating to bonds in force December 31, 1955 (not procured under the act of August 9, 1955) and those in force as of June 30, 1958, procured under the act of August 9, 1955, follows:

	Bonds in force Dec. 31, 1955, not procured under act of Aug. 9, 1955 [1]	Bonds procured under act of Aug. 9, 1955, in force as of June 30, 1958	Increase (+) or decrease (−)
Number of officers and employees covered	909,808	945,870	+36,062
Aggregate penal sums	$2,056,954,540	$3,415,712,311	+$1,358,757,771
Annual premium rate:
Paid by employees	$1,732,748		−$1,732,748
Paid by U.S. Government		$297,953	+$297,953
Administrative expenses paid by U.S. Government	$507,100	$29,506	−$477,594

[1] Includes employees of Internal Revenue Service who were formerly covered under bonds procured under 7803(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

SUMMARY

The majority of the bonds procured under the act, subsequent to its passage in the fiscal year 1956, covered a 2-year term, and, therefore, there was substantial bond procurement activity during the fiscal year 1958, which resulted in an increase of administrative expenses over the preceding year of $8,758. However, savings in administrative costs during the fiscal year 1958, as compared to the fiscal year ended June 30, 1955, the last full fiscal year prior to the act, amounted to $477,594. These annual savings exceed the annual premium rate of $297,953 for bonds in force as of June 30, 1958, by $179,641. In addition to these savings, employees were relieved of paying premiums which, during the fiscal year 1955, amounted to $1,732,748.

There is attached a detailed statement showing for each reporting agency the number of bonds procured, number of officers and employees bonded, amount of premiums paid, and total penal sums relating to bonds in force as of June 30, 1958.

The individual reports received from agencies are available in the Treasury Department.

ALLEGED LAG IN MISSILE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. President, in recent days we have heard much about the alleged lag in our missile-development program. There are those who contend that our missile program is adequate. There are those who contend that we are lagging behind the Soviet Union in this field. Certainly the Soviets have startled the world by sending tons of steel into orbit about the earth and by firing rockets beyond the moon. On the surface, at least, our success in this field has not been so spectacular.

Mr. Drew Pearson and Mr. Jack Anderson have published a book which deals, in part, with this alleged missile lag. The book, "U.S.A.—Second Class Power?" makes many statements about our missile programs. I am not a missile or military expert, but the authors of this book are men who stand behind their statements. Moreover, the book's general view of our missile-development program has been backed up by the report of a House of Representatives committee which found that the United States trails the Soviet Union by more than a year and that it will take at least 5 years for us to catch up.

Despite the difference of opinions which have recently been expressed on this matter, the book is food for thought and, for this reason, I call it to the attention of all of my colleagues in the Senate and commend this work, based upon extensive research and observation, to all who are concerned with the destined role of the United States as the leader of the free world and the hope of mankind.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HENNINGS. I am very happy to yield from the time remaining to me.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am very happy that the Senator has mentioned this very informative piece of writing. I notice that there has been quite an exchange of argument recently in the Congress concerning some of the problems of the defense program, particularly in the area of missile production. I commend to my colleagues the reading of this particular book, which it has been my privilege to read. I received a copy from one of my good neighbors in Minnesota.

I have taken a particular interest in that book because of the dispute which has taken place of late over the so-called lag in missile production. I refer my colleagues to pages 85, 86, 87, and 88, in the early part of the book, tracing the development of the missile program, and outlining some of the problems encountered in the Bureau of the Budget, as well as other agencies of the Government. I commend the Senator from Missouri for bringing this book to our attention, and I hope every Member of the Senate will read it.

Mr. HENNINGS. I thank the distinguished Senator, who is a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and who has recently been in Russia. He has written a fine article which was published in Life magazine, concerning his experiences. This book I mentioned was recently published, and I believe, is worth reading by every Member of this body and by the American public generally.

THE CHAPLAIN IN THE SPACE AGE

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, Maj. Gen. J. B. Medaris, who is Commanding General of the U.S. Army Ordnance Missile Command at Redstone Arsenal, in Huntsville, Ala., is known throughout the land—indeed, through the entire world—as one of the great figures in the expansion and development of the space age. I was greatly impressed to read in one of the Atlanta newspapers excerpts from an address which General Medaris delivered before the conference of chaplains of the Third U.S. Army, at Fort McPherson.

The excerpts which I read reveal a deep and compelling conviction on the part of this great scientist that our country cannot see its way through difficulties which confront us without maintaining a firm spiritual foundation. No matter how much we may progress in the field of technology, if our country is spiritually weak, it will not survive.

For many years I have believed that we were as much threatened in this country by the weakening of our spiritual life as we were by admitted shortcomings of our military defense.

I wrote to General Medaris and asked him to send me a copy of this outstanding statement in order that I might be privileged to have it printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I ask that this great address, exemplifying the fact that this great scientist clings to the simple faith of our Fathers, may be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CHAPLAIN IN THE SPACE AGE

I welcomed the opportunity to address the chaplains of the Third U.S. Army because of my deep conviction that man's survival in the space age will depend entirely upon his active faith in God and his willingness to permit the basic concepts of Judaic-Christian religion to influence his behavior. Nothing short of that ready consent will protect the people of earth from the awesome consequences inherent in coupling the long-range missile with the released power of the atom—a possibility which is not solely within our power to forestall.

There is real danger that the intellectual excitement aroused by the imminence of space exploration, and the almost limitless energies available through nuclear reaction may intoxicate men to such a degree that they might forget the blunt alternatives—either they act in accordance with divine guidance or they invite destruction.

Time will permit only a very brief examination of the impact of science and technology upon the minds of men, but I will try to indicate what this has been in the past and what we may expect in the future. Then I will attempt to suggest what I believe to be the true function of religion in this situation, and relate that to the role of the Army chaplain as we approach decisions which can open up a future rich with promise or wipe out the human race.

Let us first consider the broad influence of science upon many aspects of society. Scientific discovery is never an isolated event. Always from any new knowledge emerge new concepts in political, economic, and ethical philosophies. These new social forces must be attuned to fundamental religious beliefs. If not so supported they invite mental or physical conflicts. Especially must we anticipate spiritual crises as man enters worlds beyond our own. Lacking a firm foundation in religious faith, he will surely grope blindly as he is besieged by strange hypotheses and radical philosophies, spawned by new discoveries and theories, which often defy easy comprehension. We can find many precedents to support this likelihood—a few will suffice.

In the era when Columbus boldly steered his tiny ships upon uncharted seas, Copernicus described the orbital movements of the Moon and challenged the popular belief that the Earth was a flat body, stationary in the heavens, around which the Sun revolved.

A century later Galileo employed telescopes of his own design and reported celestial phenomena which supported the Copernican theory. He ignored the accepted superstitions of the time insisting that the Milky Way consisted of a mass of stars so numerous as to be almost beyond belief. He challenged the ancient Aristotelian theories by reporting that the Moon was not smooth, that in fact its surface was marked by mountains and valleys and did not produce light, but reflected it.

The fearful reaction inspired by publication of these discoveries and extrapolations caused a bitter conflict between church and science, the echoes of which were heard many times in subsequent ages. Inquisitorial restraint was imposed upon Galileo's pronouncements, and the work of Copernicus was placed on the index where it remained for 200 years. Yet Copernicus argued that his discoveries and theories confirmed the magnitude of God. He spoke of the order which he found and translated into mathematical formulas as more devine than human science.

"The reason for the order in which all these things succeed one another," he wrote, "and the harmony of the whole world teaches us their truth—if only we would look at the thing with both eyes."

Thus the conflict arose not from scientific discovery itself but rather from the bigoted attacks of ignorant men who refused to accept truth, and who would not interpret new knowledge in such manner as to make religion even more meaningful.

As we consider the implications of extending human activity into space, and the rapid progress of science and technology in other areas as well, let us, as Copernicus urged, "look at the thing with both eyes."

It has been said that man's entry into space will provide new opportunity for the display of barbarism and stupidity. Cynical comment of this sort, while it may have a certain popular appeal, overlooks the existence in America today of a spiritual and intellectual climate more conducive to the endless search for truth than has prevailed at any other time in history. Leading figures of all the major faiths, including the late Pius XII, saw no defiance of Divinity in our initial ventures into areas beyond the sensible atmosphere. It is my own belief, and I am entirely sincere in this, that the door would have closed in our faces if what we are attempting contravened God's design.

Some concern has been indicated because man will enter space in an atmosphere of international rivalry and tension. Well founded as this concern may be, it is a situation which cannot be resolved by unilateral action. The sense of urgency with which we approach these projects will not tolerate delay.

In some quarters there is hesitancy to accept the logical and necessary relationship between purely scientific space exploration and the development of long-range rocket weapons essential to national security. This latter objection is all the more puzzling because the Armed Forces have always shared in major scientific and technological programs and progress. For example, former Army engineers built the transcontinental railroads. The Panama Canal was largely a military accomplishment. The Navy promoted the development of shipping. The Army, later the Air Force, spurred the development of aircraft which, although initially adapted to defense purposes, became the prototypes of civilian carriers. Exigencies of national defense have often prompted developmental programs which led to notable contributions to the national economy. The release of nuclear energy under proper control for peaceful purposes followed the development of atomic bombs. The mushrooming electronics industry grew out of military programs. A host of similar instances could be cited.

In the field with which I am identified only the urgent defense need justified the enormous cost and effort required for the development of long-range missile systems. Out of the mainstream of this program have emerged many useful devices—the electronic computer, the magnetic tape programing of production, automatic data processing and others. Benefits of even greater magnitude can be anticipated from the exploitation of presently known space technology. Earth satellites can provide accurate knowledge of weather making factors, which will improve the forecasting service and furnish timely storm warnings, thus saving countless lives and billions of dollars worth of property and crops. Instrumented satellites can facilitate worldwide communications for the instantaneous transmission of video and signals. Orbiters can refine the navigation of ships and aircraft.

I think the Explorer satellites dramatically illustrated the way in which military capabilities can serve scientific interests. For this program the Army made available, for quite a different purpose, existing missile systems and components, and the unique experience and facilities developed for its weapon program. The results speak for themselves, whether you evaluate them in terms of the scientific data obtained or the boost provided to national prestige, and the restoration of something akin to a balance between rival technologies. If the United States alone were engaged in the exploration of space for altogether peaceful objectives, I believe we could quickly dismiss any fears about the fruits of our joint efforts—military and scientific.

However, we are confronted by the technological capabilities of a godless state whose international policies would not permit man to move forward in untrammeled freedom. There is mounting concern over the intentions of international communism as it extends its activities beyond earth. Like their earth-bound predecessors, space vehicles can be employed advantageously for aggressive ends as well as for research and exploration.

Fear of the growing menace of communism arises from the ideological conflict between the free world and the Communist states dating back to the Russian Revolution of 1917. Four decades later the Communist goal, world conquest, remains unchanged. On numerous occasions this force for evil, in extending its dominion over hapless lands and peoples, has shown a total disregard for ethical and moral considerations. We can find no evidence to suggest a more humane attitude on the part of these dictators as they invade outer space.

It is shocking to read fainthearted suggestions that it might be better to accept the idea of military and scientific supremacy by the Soviets than to risk the prospect of nuclear devastation from outer space. Any such acceptance of domination is entirely repugnant to our national will and altogether unacceptable to the American people.

The alternative is to face up to this challenge, wherever it occurs, because it is directed at us. We have attained a position of international leadership largely because, while shaping our own destiny in freedom, we have encouraged others to do likewise, and have shared our bounty with them. When their security has been endangered we have stood by them. We have become the only hope of millions beyond our shores and their sole guarantee against oppression and eventual slavery.

It is that urgent need which impels our weapons programs and which should accelerate our efforts in space. But neither scientific enlightenment nor technological achievements, of whatever magnitude, will of themselves establish a more stable peace. Nor can man, by the exercise of his own powers, raise himself from the earth to the stars. He must turn to God to find a way by which to replace equality with superiority in the international arena and exchange tolerance for prejudice, cooperation for rivalry, trust for suspicion, love for hate, and peace for conflict.

In this grave predicament involving nations determined to remain free, and others determined to enslave them, every element of our civilization has been brought into the battle. For the church, and I speak of the universal church of all faiths who accept the principle of a Divine Being, this is a day of tremendous opportunity and challenge. Man must find a rock on which to lean which offers him solace in time of stress and assurance in time of anxiety. There is a reaching out for God apparent in many regions, a searching for the kind of message Isaiah gave his troubled nation:

"Even the youths shall faint and be weary and the young men shall utterly fall. But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint."

Our first steps into the vacuum of space have reemphasized the beatuy and order of creation, which increased the reverence of men like Copernicus, and have verified the natural laws which govern all existence. As he ponders these things, man must come to believe anew, as once he did before false intellectualism, bigotry and superstition turned him away from truth. The Ten Commandments have guided men and brought them safely through the upheavals of the past. They should be the rock of decision today and through all our tomorrows.

And now I want to offer some personal comments and suggestions about the role which you, ministers in uniform, will play in the space age.

I consider it of paramount importance that we get back to fundamentals, that we inculcate in our children the respect for God and his omniscience which will be their everlasting reliance throughout their lives. I have observed a tendency in some churches, and I am not singling out Army chapels, to sugar-coat religion, to dress it up, make it more palatable, give it the rock-and-roll treatment and thus try to inveigle young people into the House of God. I think this is a mistake of the same kind which has our public school system foundering in a mass of social activities far removed from true education. This is not the fault of these churches alone, nor, for that matter, of those schools. It goes much deeper—into the very fabric of our country—into the home, where all too many parents have blithely transferred their basic responsibilities to anyone willing to pick up the ball.

No one has the right to persuade young minds that faith is an easy matter, to be sloughed off or retrieved as suits individual fancy. Instead, we should be emphasizing that it takes courage and stamina and perseverance to live our lives as God wants us to, just as it takes work and determination and strength to earn those things every man wants and will provide to his family. I would like to see more talk about personal dedication and sacrifice, and more talk about the living hell men build for themselves in this life when they stray from the paths of truth and righteousness.

I believe the times call for boldness and vision, with God's words resounding like a clarion call to rally those who are troubled and fearful. Man in this enlightened atmosphere is less interested in the forms and formulas of denominationalism. He will not concern himself with abtruse theological debates. He has a right to expect that the divisive influences which have retarded the Christian church will disappear, even as cultural and social differences will vanish, as technology shrinks the world further and opens up new communications possibilities.

I believe the clergy must grasp the hands of the scientists and, shoulder to shoulder, interpret new knowledge in consonance with the fundamentals of Protestant, Catholic, or Jewish faith.

We must accept the fact that the confusion which exists in people's minds, caused in no small measure by the kaleidoscopic happenings in science and technology, will continue and may increase as a result of the rapid changes in our environment. The point to remember is that these environmental changes should not, in the slightest, alter our fundamental concepts and principles. The chaplain can render great service by inculcating the need for flexibility in mental outlook—the ability to grasp and comprehend totally strange things, and to react intelligently, not hysterically or fearfully, to them. Flexibility without flounderings, adaptability without weakness, are and will be the need. It is your duty and privilege to help the military community understand and accept these changes in environment without ever losing sight of the fundamentals.

Upon you, as chaplains, the space age imposes the same responsibilities which have been faithfully discharged by your predecessors since the early days of the American Revolution—to sustain the faith of the man in uniform, to minister to him and his family and provide them with moral and spiritual leadership. Your task will be more difficult and more complicated because of the impact of science and technology, but you will know and keep ever in mind that the same virtues which have always carried man higher are still applicable—the virtues of reverence, humility, justice, fortitude, and tolerance.

Since the Continental Congress gave official standing to the chaplaincy in 1775, you have served unselfishly in peace and war. You have shared the hardship and anguish of combat and the stresses and strains imposed by victory. I know that this proud tradition of service to God and country will sustain you in the years ahead.

INVITATION TO REPUBLICAN AND DEMOCRATIC PARTIES TO HOLD 1960 NATIONAL CONVENTIONS IN NEW YORK CITY

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I make this statement on behalf of my colleague [Mr. KEATING] and myself.

On Monday next the Republican National Committee will meet at Des Moines, Iowa, to decide on a site for the Republican National Convention of 1960. In view of the fact that the Republican and Democratic National Conventions are now considered to be an essential part of the Government machinery of the United States, on behalf of the city of New York we are extending to the Republican and Democratic Parties invitations to hold their 1960 national conventions there. New York City has unexcelled facilities for a national political convention. It has the finest hotel accommodations in the world. It has the most modern, and the most spacious meeting halls the country can offer. It is speedily and easily reached from all parts of the country. It has been intimately connected with the political development of our Nation from the time when it was the Nation's first capital. As one of the most populous States in the Nation, with active, informed and articulate voters, it has given many outstanding men and women to the service of our Nation. Yet New York City has never been host to a Republican National Convention, and not since 1924 have the Democrats met there.

In midtown Manhattan are the finest air conditioned hotels in the world, 20,000 restaurants to suit every taste and pocketbook, 32 broadcasting studios and the entertainment center of the hemisphere. In the same area are found Madison Square Garden, and also the newly erected $35 million New York Coliseum, all air conditioned. In this area are the centers of the country's communications and publishing networks. New York City, as the headquarters of the United Nations, is a world capital as well.

Let me outline briefly for myself and my colleague what I believe are the salient points in New York's favor. First, as we all know, a national political convention is of necessity an exhausting time for everyone connected with it. If the parties convene in New York City in 1960, the participants will have the extremely important advantage of being able to consolidate all their activities in a relatively small area of midtown Manhattan. This will practically eliminate time-consuming travel between hotels, convention hall, headquarters suites and radio and television studios which would confront us in any other city.

Madison Square Garden, which can seat 18,000 delegates and offers an additional 85,000 square feet of space for press, radio, and television, is in the very heart of Manhattan, as is the new New York Coliseum. Within walking distance of the Garden are most of the seven hotels which are being offered as headquarters. Either one can be reached from any part of the city by subway or bus, for only 15 cents. Cabs, too, are cheaper than in any other city; 25 cents for the first one-fifth mile and 5 cents for each one-fifth mile after that. There are no additional charges for extra passengers.

The second point of great importance, since the conventions will be held in the summer, is that New York is an air conditioned city. Thirty thousand hotel rooms available to delegates are air conditioned. Madison Square Garden is air conditioned. All public meeting space in hotels is air conditioned. Restaurants, theaters, movies, museums—in fact, just about any place one would go in New York City in the summer—are comfortably cool.

Third, New York is the undisputed center of our country's great communications industry. News is disseminated faster in New York than in any other city. A political convention is a news-making event of the first magnitude, and should the conventions be held in New York City, I am convinced that their activities would receive more comprehensive news coverage than ever before. New York is the home of the major television and radio networks and the important wire services and syndicates. It is the headquarters of book and magazine publishing in the United States. Its seven daily newspapers are read by more than 5 million people a day. Thousands more read the specialized business publications such as the Wall Street Journal, our trade papers, and the nearly 50 foreign language papers published in New York City. Here are molded national opinion and thinking on a myriad of issues.

Fourth. New York City is one of the easiest cities to reach from any part of the country. It is served by all major airlines, railroads, buslines. It is the focal point of a network of superb highways and throughways. By 1960, with jetplane travel a reality, New York will be just 4½ hours from the west coast.

Fifth. New York City offers the country's finest hotels, restaurants, and theaters, many of the world's greatest museums, and outstanding sightseeing attractions. Although we know that delegates to a national political convention will have relatively little time to spend on amusements, it is, nevertheless, important to point out that conventions usually have a higher attendance when they are held in New York because delegates realize that whatever free time they do have can be profitably and entertainingly spent seeing the wonders of one of the world's great cities. And, incidentally, New York, the world's financial and commercial center, offers opportunities for delegates to make personally profitable their attendance at the national conventions by taking care of any business they have in New York City.

More than 750 convention groups a year attest to the fact that a New York City convention is a successful convention.

It is my sincere hope, speaking as a New Yorker, that my city will be honored by being chosen as the site of the 1960 Republican and Democratic National Conventions. Senator KEATING and I bespeak, I feel certain, the wishes of the some 20 million Americans who live in the city's metropolitan area, an area which includes also part of Connecticut and New Jersey. New York City is in the midst of the Nation's population heartland; it is a world capital; it is the cultural and communications center of the Nation; it is the biggest city; it will welcome the national conventions in 1960.

NOMINATION OF ROGER W. JONES AS CHAIRMAN OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, this morning the President submitted to the Senate for confirmation the nomination of Roger W. Jones to be a member of the Civil Service Commission. Following the confirmation of his nomination, Mr. Jones will become Chairman of the Commission.

Mr. Jones is excellently qualified for this position, and his nomination should meet with the unanimous approval of all. He is a career public servant, having first entered the Federal service in 1933.

Not only does he know the problems of the civil service employee, but his many years of contacts with the executive and legislative branches of the Government will make for better relations between the different branches of the Government and the Government employee.

It is with genuine pleasure that I urge confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Jones. I suggest that the chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service call a meeting of the committee at the earliest opportunity for the consideration of this nomination.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a biographical sketch of Roger W. Jones be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the biographical sketch was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ROGER W. JONES

Roger W. Jones took office as Deputy Director of the Bureau of the Budget on September 11, 1958. Prior to his appointment to this post by the President, he had been one of the Bureau's three statutory assistant directors for 6 months.

A career civil servant, Mr. Jones was Assistant Director for Legislative Reference from February 1949 to March 1958. He entered the Federal service in 1933, and served in a series of posts with the Central Statistical Board before joining the staff of the Bureau in 1939. When the United States entered World War II, Mr. Jones was Administrative Officer of the Bureau.

He was ordered to active duty as a captain in the Officers Reserve Corps in March 1942, assigned to duty with the Combined Chiefs of Staff, Munitions Assignments Board. He was promoted to major in May of that year, to lieutenant colonel in March 1943, and to colonel in May 1945. He was released to inactive duty in December 1945, and served in several capacities in the Bureau of the Budget until 1949.

He was born in New Hartford, Conn., on February 3, 1908. He received a bachelor of arts degree from Cornell University in 1928, and a master of arts degree from Columbia University in 1931.

He has been awarded the Legion of Merit, the Order of the British Empire, the National Civil Service League's Career Service Award, and the President's Award for Distinguished Federal Civilian Service.

He is married and has three children, a daughter, Mrs. John Hodges of Cumberland, Md.; and two sons, Roger H. Jones, a graduate student at Cornell University; and Airman Edward C. Jones, USAF.

STATEMENTS BY SECRETARY OF STATE BEFORE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, the Committee on Foreign Relations has had a most discouraging experience recently in trying to obtain information from the Secretary of State on which to ground our thinking about foreign policy issues facing this country.

It is customary for the Secretary to appear before the committee at the beginning of each session of the Congress and review the problem areas for which he is responsible. These statements have sometimes been so generalized as to be of little help to the committee. Our distinguished chairman made an effort this year to sharpen the discussion a little. He wrote to the President and asked for a series of briefings on the state of U.S. relations with the rest of the world, the state of our military defenses, and the state of our economic relations. The chairman attached to his letter an outline of the subjects, some 13 of them, which he hoped would be touched upon during these briefings. The President replied that he would be glad to have Secretary Dulles coordinate such presentations in executive sessions of the committee.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this exchange of correspondence be inserted at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the correspondence was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
December 16, 1958.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In past years it has been customary for the Secretary of State to appear in executive session before the Committee on Foreign Relations early in each new session of Congress to give members the benefit of his views with respect to the state of our international relations. The committee has found the Secretary's testimony of great value in the discharge of its responsibilities in the field of foreign relations.

In order for the committee to have a full picture of our relations with the rest of the world, it seems to me that the Secretary's statement should be supplemented by testimony concerning the state of our military defenses and the state of our economic relations with the rest of the world. Furthermore, it is important, I believe, that the committee acquire an intelligent evaluation of our world posture as it is related to that of the Soviet bloc. The coordinated national estimate which such testimony would provide seems to me to be essential to enable the committee intelligently to consider foreign policy issues that will come before the Senate this year.

Would it be possible this year to arrange for appropriate officers of the executive branch to brief the committee along the general lines of the enclosed outline?

I am sure members of the committee would be most grateful for the assistance of the Executive, thus making it possible to begin deliberations this session on a broad foundation of mutual understanding.

Most respectfully.

Sincerely yours,

THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN,
Chairman.

PROPOSED OUTLINE FOR EXECUTIVE SESSION HEARINGS OF COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

GENERAL PURPOSE

To provide the Committee on Foreign Relations with a broad understanding of the total strategic situation of the United States in 1959 so that the committee may properly discharge its duties in the field of foreign policy.

HEARING I. THE STATUS OF U.S. RELATIONS WITH OTHER COUNTRIES

1. Relations with the Soviet bloc and estimates of the tactics and pressures which may be encountered in 1959.
2. Relations with uncommitted Asian and African nations.
3. The status of our alliances.
4. Probable areas of change in U.S. policies in 1959.

HEARING II. THE DEFENSE POSITION OF THE UNITED STATES

1. Potential defensive responsibilities of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force.
2. Estimate of the state of readiness of each service to discharge its responsibilities today and in the future.

HEARING III. ECONOMICS AND FOREIGN POLICY

1. The domestic impact of U.S. aid programs.
2. Relationship between trade policy and foreign policy.
3. Soviet bloc activities in trade and aid.
4. Probable areas of U.S. initiative in 1959.

HEARING IV. INTELLIGENCE ESTIMATES

1. Estimate of Soviet bloc intentions.
2. Estimate of Soviet bloc capabilities—military, economic, political, and scientific.
3. Estimate of nature and direction of nationalist movements in Asia and Africa.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, December 22, 1958.

The Honorable THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GREEN: Thank you for your December 16 letter. I appreciate your committee's interest in meeting with the Secretary of State and with the other executive branch officials who can discuss with you in executive session the matters outlined in your letter to me. Accordingly, I have asked Secretary Dulles to coordinate this matter, so that the officials concerned may meet with your committee at a mutually satisfactory time.

With best wishes for the holiday season,

Sincerely,

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, Senators will note that Chairman GREEN suggested that the Secretary of State deal in his briefing with the following four subjects:

1. Relations with the Soviet bloc and estimates of the tactics and pressures which may be encountered in 1959.
2. Relations with "uncommitted" Asian and African nations.
3. The status of our alliances.
4. Probable areas of change in U.S. policies in 1959.

Secretary Dulles appeared before the Committee on January 14. The meeting was in executive session. As usual, it was understood that nothing which the Secretary might say would be published without his having an opportunity to suggest deletions for security reasons. Members of the committee awaited with more than usual interest due to the advance preparation for the meeting which I have referred to—to what the Secretary might say.

The principal remarks of the Secretary of State were contained in a lengthy prepared statement which he diligently read. I have gone through these remarks with a pencil and underlined those sentences in which there was contained some new information or some revealing insight or some provocative idea or some analytical assistance. I found six sentences. Only six sentences in the whole statement could, by any stretch of definition, be considered new or provocative. The rest was a rehash of old press releases and old speeches.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD the Secretary's statement before the committee with the six sentences which I have referred to in italic.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY THE HONORABLE JOHN FOSTER DULLES, SECRETARY OF STATE, BEFORE THE SENATE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 14, 1959

I. INTRODUCTION

The world is today changing more rapidly than ever before. But the fact that much is changing does not mean that everything has changed. There are certain values, certain principles, that are enduring. Among these are the concepts of individual human dignity and the supremacy of moral law.

In a changing world our task is to strive resolutely that change shall increasingly reflect the basic principles to which our Nation has, from its origin, been dedicated.

II. OUR BASIC PURPOSES

1. At a time when war involves unacceptable risks for all humanity, we work to build a stable world order.
2. We seek for general acceptance of the concept of individual dignity which will lead to the spread of responsible freedom and personal liberty.
3. We seek that the free nations shall attain a more rapid rate of economic growth, so that their independence will be more secure and vigorous and so that there will be greater opportunities for cultural and spiritual development.

III. THE PRIMARY THREAT

The Soviet Union and Communist China are expanding their economic and industrial power at a very rapid pace. They do so by a system which combines governmental rule of all labor with imposed austerity. This makes it possible greatly to accelerate capital developments.

There is emphasis, too, on quality. A spectacular product of Soviet material accomplishment was its recent space probe. In this field, the United States is still trying to "catch up" and make up for the head start of the Soviets. Our space accomplishments during the past year justify the belief that we are making good relative progress.

The Chinese Communists seem to be going into a dark night of massed regimentation and forced labor. What they call the great leap forward is in reality a tragic fall backward into the abyss of human slavery.

Asian nations are experiencing one aspect of Communist economic development: The Communist tactic of flooding their market places with goods at less than prevailing prices. This has widespread effects, some of which reach into our own country. As one example only, the dumping of cotton textiles in southeast Asia has reduced Japanese exports in that area and is already reducing exports of cotton from the United States to Japan. As Communist economic power grows, we must anticipate and plan for further shocks to the free world economic structure from the Communist trade offensive.

Communist economic methods involve costs in human privation and misery that, for us, are not only repugnant but completely unacceptable. We believe that over the long run such a process must inevitably be altered. Already there are indications that the Soviet leaders are beginning to realize this. There is some scaling down of their heavy industry ambitions. They are beginning to heed demands by workers and peasants for more leisure and for a greater share in the fruits of their labor. Peoples sufficiently educated to operate a modern industrial state may be expected also to acquire the desire for freedom and the capacity to get it. History gives us good reason to believe that the Soviet peoples will not indefinitely submit to dictatorial rule by the International Communist Party leadership. It would appear that the Communists will encounter difficulties increasing in the long run.

But for the short run—and this may be a period of years—the situation is full of danger.

That means that we may face a period even harder than we have become used to. To get advantage from time we shall have to stand on our course. We shall need the national will to stand firm in the face of aggressive threats and probings from the Sino-Soviet bloc. We shall need to make whatever unusual sacrifices may be necessary. People respond to this kind of demand when they understand that a temporary emergency requires it. But these burdens seem to grow heavier the longer they must be borne during a period of relative peace. Our people will need to show what freedom can mean in terms of self-sacrifice and self-discipline; and in terms of fortitude and perseverance.

IV. WORLD ORDER

Let me speak now about world order. This requires an elimination of the use or threat of force to accomplish international change. This was always a bad method. It has become an intolerable method because the force at man's disposal could now practically obliterate human life on this planet.

The United States and other free world nations have, by their conduct, done much to establish, for themselves, the principle of the renunciation of aggressive force; and they have shown their ability and will to deter such use of force by others.

At the time of the Suez affair and the Israeli-Egyptian hostilities, the United Kingdom and France, and then Israel, responding to the overwhelming opinion of the United Nations, withdrew their armed forces and accepted a United Nations solution. This may well prove to be a historical landmark.

During the past year the United States and its partners have further shown their opposition to change through force or the threat of force.

When Lebanon and Jordan seemed threatened from without and appealed to the United States and the United Kingdom for emergency aid, we responded with promptness and efficiency. When the emergency was relieved by United Nations action, we promptly withdrew our forces.

Throughout the world small nations felt a profound sense of reassurance.

In the Far East the Chinese Communists, with Soviet backing, initiated military action designed, as they put it, to expel the United States from the western Pacific. We stood beside the Republic of China as it resisted what seemed the preliminaries of that attack. Our free world associates generally supported our position that change in that area should not be effected by force of arms.

The Government of the Republic of China itself made a notable contribution when, last October, it declared that it relied primarily upon peaceful principles and not upon force to secure the freeing of the mainland. This courageous and statesmanlike act has strengthened the free world's cause in the western Pacific.

Now in Berlin we face an effort to expel the small western contingents in West Berlin. Their presence constitutes an indispensable safeguard to the freedom of that city. The NATO powers, at their December meeting, unanimously vowed that such expulsion should be resisted.

Step by step, discernible progress continues to be made in consolidating a system of collective security which will effectively operate to exclude the use of force to effect international changes.

The mutual security arrangements which we have with free world countries no longer assume the aspect of mere military alliances. They are the framework of consultative processes that, day by day, are steadily reforming the society of free nations.

In primitive and frontier societies, security is on an individual basis. Each householder defends himself by his own means. That primitive formula is now obsolete domestically. It is becoming obsolete internationally. Many free nations combine to help each other. The resultant power is not a power which can be or would be used for any aggressive or nationalistic purpose. It is a power dedicated to the common welfare as mutually agreed.

The United States has repeatedly made clear—and I said this again at the last December NATO meeting—that we regard our own military power as being a trust for the benefit of our free world partnerships; that we are ready to make known to all the defensive purposes and circumstances under which that force might be used; and that we shall heed in this respect, the advice and counsel of our partners just as we would expect them to heed our advice and counsel with respect to the international use of their force.

Thus, out of what may originally have been conceived primarily as military alliances, there is developing an international structure which provides collective security on the basis of organized and continuous collective consultation. That is something new in history.

I might add that accomplishment is not always easy, given the variety of national development, and national viewpoints. Nevertheless, the free world practice in this regard constantly grows in efficiency.

World order is not, however, assured merely by the elimination of violence. There must be processes of peaceful change. These, too, are rapidly developing within the free world. The General Assembly of the United Nations is a forum where these needs find effective expression. The General Assembly does not have the power to legislate change. But it has a capacity to induce change, at least in the case of governments which have respect for, and are responsive to, world opinion.

The peace of the free world is not a peace of political stagnation or a peace which sanctifies the status quo. It is a peace characterized by peaceful change reflecting new human aspirations and potentialities.

There is, of course, need not only for processes which permit of peaceful change, but there is equally a need for stability in adherence to basic values, including that of respecting international agreements and treaties. This requires that, unless international law and treaty engagements are changed by common agreement, they should be respected.

There has not been as great a development of international law and recourse to judicial processes as would be desirable. The United Nations General Assembly Committee on the codification of international law has made little progress. Some significant progress in law development was made at the recent Law of the Sea Conference, and that Conference will be resumed in 1960. Inadequate use has been made of the International Court of Justice. As the President said last week in the state of the Union address, we envisage further steps to encourage the greater use of that Court.

In such ways as I describe progress is being made toward establishing a world order where peace rests, not on mere expediency or on a balance of power, but on a basis of sound institutions.

This evolution is not spectacular and rarely considered news. What attracts attention are the aggressive probings of the Communists and the free world reactions thereto. That gives the impression that our foreign policy consists primarily of reacting to Communist initiatives.

Nothing could be further from the truth. The fact is that day by day, month by month, and year by year, we are building, quietly but steadily, in the United Nations, in NATO, in the OAS, in SEATO, and other organs of consultation, the solid foundations of an international order based upon justice and law as substitutes for force.

The Communist rulers do not share in this effort to build a stable world order based upon justice and law. International communism avowedly seeks worldwide dictatorship. The concept of justice is alien to the Communist creed, and law, in our sense of that word, is unknown. The free world and Communist concepts are mutually antagonistic.

This, however, does not mean that there cannot be useful contacts and negotiations with the Communists. We have had many such. We are striving to make progress in the field of disarmament and in that connection deal with the Soviets, particularly in relation to the controlled discontinuance of nuclear weapons tests. We also seek agreement on possible measures which might be helpful in preventing surprise attack.

At Warsaw we negotiate with the Chinese Communists.

We have made clear our willingness to negotiate about the German question.

We have now an agreement with the Soviet Union on cultural and scientific exchanges which is operating satisfactorily. Also important are the visits to and from Russia of influential citizens.

President Eisenhower urged this in his letter of February 16, 1958, to the then Soviet Premier. Following this initiative, there have been useful visits on both sides, and we are glad that the First Deputy Premier of the Soviet Union, Mr. Mikoyan, is now here learning about our country. We would like to see a broader exchange of students. We believe that in such ways false premises and miscalculations can be reduced in the interest of peace.

V. THE INEVITABLE MOVEMENT TOWARD FREEDOM

I turn now to our second major purpose.

One of the strongest forces working in the world today is the movement toward independence and freedom.

This force is notably manifest in Africa. Here change is rapid, new states are arising almost overnight. This great continent presents a challenge to the United States to do its best to assist the peoples now emerging into independence and new opportunity.

Another such area is our hemisphere to the south. The peoples of Latin America are making clear their determination to control their own destinies. One by one dictatorships have made way for governments more responsive to the popular will.

This worldwide movement toward freedom is accompanied by a growing awareness of the deadly nature of Sino-Soviet imperialism. The leaders of the new freedom are coming more and more to see international communism as an immediate threat to their liberties, not, as some have thought, a mere bogeyman of so-called Western imperialism.

The Communists are paying a price for the forced growth of their material power: There is a developing fear in the less powerful nations around the world of the dangerous combination of burgeoning economic and military power with the imperialist drive of the Communists for world dominion. This menacing combination brings home with force the threat which, when the Communists were not so strong, was but a matter of vague and largely academic concern.

There has recently been a surprising clarification of understanding around the world of the real purpose of Communist leaders—to subject all the world to the dominant influence and control of international communism, with its primary power centers at Moscow and Peiping.

In the Middle East the deadly designs of communism are now far more clearly realized than a year ago.

In southeast Asia liberty-loving peoples are struggling—and with success—to remain masters in their newly built national homes.

In general, I believe the leaders and peoples of Asia now understand better the sincerity of American policy favoring their independence and our willingness to support unconditionally their efforts to stay free and do so in their own way, which may indeed be a non-Western way.

In France, we are witnessing an inspiring example of national renewal.

The tide of freedom is running strong in Western Europe as Communist strength there ebbs.

Even in Communist countries there is a powerful and persistent craving for greater national freedom. Yugoslavia has been steadfast against all threats and blandishments from Moscow and has courageously maintained its independence. Hungary's great effort to throw off its shackles, even though crushed by force, has been an inspiration and a tribute to man's unquenchable thirst for liberty. And throughout the bloc, even in the U.S.S.R., revisionism is a living force and ferment. Moscow considers it a deadly enemy, and with reason.

The pull of freedom is daily manifested in the flow of refugees from the Communist bloc to the free world.

The free people of West Berlin have, during years of uncertainty and danger, been an inspiring beacon light for all those whose liberties have been lost to Communist tyranny. We are determined that this light shall not fail, and that Berlin shall not be engulfed in the Red undertow.

As we look ahead, we see freedom as a predominant force, shaping our 20th-century world. As Americans, we have faith that the aspiration, deep within the soul of man, to live freely and with dignity in a just and peaceful world is stronger than all the material forces which the Communists invoke as the pledge and promise of their power.

VI. ECONOMIC PROGRESS

I turn now to our third basic purpose.

We believe that economic progress is a necessary condition of stable and free nations. There must also be acceptance of economic interdependence of nations. No nation can live completely to itself.

Unless and until the less developed areas reach the stage of self-sustaining economic growth, the world as a whole will suffer.

For the inhabitants of those areas, an increasing rate of economic development has become an essential condition of free societies. The demand for economic and social betterment is now universal, and if progress cannot be achieved in freedom, it will be sought by methods that jeopardize freedom.

The Communists are fully aware of the universal demand for progress, and they point to the Soviet and Chinese Communist acomplishments in industrialization as proof that their way is better than the way of freedom.

Our aid and investment must continue to support the efforts of the leaders of the developing free nations to sustain their peoples' confidence that economic progress can be attained in freedom.

We have not been alone in providing such support. Other highly industrialized states have made significant contributions.

These industrialized nations have also shown a growing awareness of interdependence among themselves. This is particularly gratifying to us. A common market for Europe was one of the policy objectives stated in the preamble to the European Recovery Act of 1948. Now, after 10 years, the six-nation European Common Market is a fact. The Western European currencies have become more freely exchangeable and there is a strong movement for broader economic cooperation in Western Europe.

Free world economic progress does not permit complacency or relaxation. It calls instead for renewed effort to increase the forward momentum.

In the years ahead, we must through our trade and financial policies continue to promote recognition and positive use of the benefits of interdependence. These benefits, and the inevitability, of economic interdependence become more clear each year. What is being done in the European Community of Six provides an example and an inspiration for greater economic cooperation elsewhere in the world.

We must continue to apply our will, energy, treasure, and techniques to the problems of the less developed areas. The cause of freedom can be won—or could be lost—in these areas.

VII. CONCLUSION

Let me in conclusion recall the basic purposes underlying our policies:

(1) The renunciation of aggressive force and the substitutions of collective institutions of peace, justice, and law among nations;

(2) Promotion of the concept of human dignity, worth, and freedom;

(3) Stimulation of economic growth and interdependence to create enlarged opportunities for realization of cultural and spiritual values.

These goals are not attainable in a few years, but will require decades and, perhaps even generations. Why is this so? We are but one nation among nearly a hundred sovereignties, and but a scant 6 percent of the world's land surface and population. Our foreign policy is not something we can enact into world law or dictate to other peoples. It means rather constant adjustment to forces which, though beyond our control to direct, we can influence through wise statesmanship and adherence to sound principles. With our immense wealth and power, and even more because of our spiritual heritage of faith and freedom, we can exert a shaping influence on the world of the future.

The price of failure would be the destruction of all our other national objectives. While mustering all our resources, both material and spiritual, we must press on with courage to build surer foundations for the interdependent world community of which we are part. This will call for austerity and sacrifice on the part of all. We must put first things first.

Our purpose, ultimately and at all times, should be to use our great power, without abusing or presuming upon it, to move steadily toward lasting peace, orderly freedom, and growing opportunity. Thus do we achieve our constitutional purpose "to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, Senators will find in this statement no forecast of tactics and pressures from the Soviet bloc which may be encountered in 1959, which Secretary Dulles was asked for. Senators will find only one sentence concerning relations with uncommitted African nations, another subject on which the Secretary was asked to speak. There is no discussion in any detail of current issues which may be straining U.S. alliances. There is only the vaguest discussion of any possible changes in U.S. policies in 1959.

With some executive branch witnesses it is possible to pry out information and intelligent discussion of issues with the help of strenuous cross-examination. This takes a great deal of time, and it is wasteful of the energies of both the committee and the witness. I think that the executive branch should know, however, that members of the committee are willing to do this if we must, and do so in public session.

Members of the Committee on Foreign Relations read the newspapers. We read the statements of the President and the Secretary of State. We know generally what is going on in the world. What we need are those additional facts and considerations which make the difference between the casual reader of the newspaper and the well-informed Member of Congress who is trying to discharge his responsibility to understand the actions taken and the proposals made by the executive branch. We need, above all, to hear analytical discussions of the advantages and disadvantages of taking this or that possible course of action with respect to current problems. We also need to know the speculations of the Secretary of State, and other Cabinet members having responsibilities bearing on foreign relation, about the future.

Mr. President, I have made this statement in the hope that succeeding executive branch witnesses in briefings before the Committee on Foreign Relations may pay some attention to our disappointment over past performance.

LIMITATION OF DEBATE DURING MORNING HOUR

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I have been listening very patiently to the statements of Senators during the morning hour. I think such statements should be limited to the 3 minutes prescribed in the unanimous-consent agreement. I hope that the present occupant of the chair or any other occupant of the chair will limit the statements of Senators to 3 minutes during the morning hour. Some Senators have exceeded the limitation. A Senator could occupy the entire morning hour by using 3 minutes on each of a series of subjects. Many other Senators still desire to place matters in the RECORD. I myself desire to speak for about 5 minutes. I shall courteously wait until the other Senators have placed their matters in the RECORD. But I think the Chair should limit Senators to the 3 minutes provided for in the unanimous-consent agreement.

REOPENING OF CONSULATE AT BRAZZAVILLE, FRENCH EQUATORIAL AFRICA

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I wish to express my great pleasure in hearing that the United States on January 1 reopened its consulate at Brazzaville, French Equatorial Africa. The consulate has the four newly autonomous republics of French Equatorial Africa within its consular jurisdiction, an area of almost 1 million square miles running from the Sahara Desert to the rain forest of the Congo.

Because of budgetary limitations, as of last year, not even a single American representative was stationed in a region one-third the size of the United States. I am sorry to say that even the names of these political entities, which recently have chosen to remain linked with France, are relatively unfamiliar in this country. Yet these, and almost all other African areas, are astir with new desires and movements for political and economic development.

The free world countries, and especially the United States, must watch trends in Africa with close and sympathetic attention. We urgently need more observers in the area. This is why I am so pleased to learn that we have opened a new post headed by a career Foreign Service officer who already has experience in the region.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD the State Department press release concerning the reopening of this consulate.

There being no objection, the press release was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 8, 1959.

UNITED STATES REOPENS AMERICAN CONSULATE AT BRAZZAVILLE, FRENCH EQUATORIAL AFRICA

The United States reopened its consulate at Brazzaville, French Equatorial Africa, on January 1, 1959. The consulate has all of French Equatorial Africa, including the autonomous Republics of Gabon, Middle Congo, Ubangi-Shari, and Chad, within its consular jurisdiction.

Francis N. Magliozzi, of Massachusetts, career Foreign Service officer, is the consul in charge. Mr. Magliozzi joined the Foreign Service in 1947. He has served at the American consulate general in Frankfort as well as American Embassies in Copenhagen, Baghdad, and Brussels in that order. His last post was the American consulate general in Leopoldville, where he actually was assigned as resident consul in Brazzaville prior to the formal reopening of the post.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF BOUNDARY WATERS TREATY OF 1909 BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND CANADA

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to an important occasion that has received little notice, namely, the 50th anniversary last Saturday of the signing of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 between the United States and Canada. The International Joint Commission set up under this treaty has played a vital role in enabling our nations to undertake such a great and mutually beneficial project as the St. Lawrence seaway.

It has been most appropriate that we should have had an eminent group of Canadian parliamentarians visiting us over the last weekend, and that important economic talks between Canada and the United States have just concluded after reaffirming our myriad common interests. These are additional examples of the friendly abiding ties between our two great countries. I hope we will do everything we can to nourish our already fertile relationship by giving it the closest possible attention.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a public statement by Secretary of State Dulles about this occasion be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 10, 1959.

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE ON THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SIGNING OF THE BOUNDARY WATERS TREATY OF 1909

Today, January 11, 1959, is the 50th anniversary of the signing of the treaty which established the International Joint Commission of the United States and Canada and provided that "* * * the navigation of all navigable boundary waters shall forever continue free."

This treaty and the Commission which it established have made an important contribution to the maintenance of the excellent relations which we have enjoyed with Canada over the years. It has provided a means of resolving problems connected with boundary waters through mutual cooperation, and it exemplifies the spirit with which we and our Canadian neighbors have approached many other questions of joint concern.

The problems which have come before the International Joint Commission since 1909 have touched the lives and interests of countless citizens on both sides of the border. They have ranged from consideration of relatively minor matters such as the proposal of an individual to block a transboundary stream to decisions controlling vast power and navigation projects of the St. Lawrence River, but all have received fair and thorough consideration by the Commission with a view to protecting the rights of all concerned.

On this 50th anniversary of the treaty it is indeed gratifying to observe that the high purpose of the contracting parties has been carried out effectively and to the great mutual benefit of the people of the United States and Canada.

BREAKFAST MEETING REMARKS BY SENATOR ROBERTSON

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, recently, our colleague, the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], made a few remarks to a group of Senators assembled for a breakfast meeting. Ordinarily, there is no publication of any proceedings at such meetings. However, Senator ROBERTSON'S remarks are so true, so timely, and present such a ringing challenge, as well as a contribution to our times, that I asked him to reduce them to writing. I would give a great deal to have been the author of this statement. I think these remarkable thoughts should be preserved and given to the American people. Accordingly, I ask that they be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRUE GREATNESS

(Remarks of Senator A. WILLIS ROBERTSON at meeting of Senate breakfast group January 14, 1959)

In welcoming new Members of the Senate who are meeting with us today for the first time may I express the hope that they will derive from devoting 1 hour each week to prayer and the study of God's word with their Senate colleagues the inspiration that these meetings have through a period of years been to me and share my fond belief that the prayers of contrite and humble hearts uttered in unison will ascend to that judgment throne where justice and mercy are reconciled and the judge and the brother are one.

In the 10 minutes allotted to me as discussion leader, I desire to propose as the theme for our roundtable discussion the Christian concept of true greatness. It is far different from the materialistic concept of physical, political or mental power, or the power and prestige of accumulated wealth. And it includes far more of unselfish love and unselfish service than the patriotic idealism of the Athenian statesman, Pericles, who said of the young men of Athens who died in repulsing the Persian invaders: "So they gave their bodies to the Commonwealth and received, each for his own memory, praise that will never die, and with it the grandest of all sepulchres, not that in which their mortal bones are laid, but a home in the minds of men, where their glory remains fresh to stir to speech or action as the occasion comes by. For the whole earth is the sepulchre of famous men; and their story is not graven only on stone over their native earth, but lives on far away, without visible symbol, woven into the stuff of other men's lives. * * *"

The fact that this is the 86th Congress of the United States indicates, of course, that there have been 85 previous Congresses which covered a span of 170 years. During that remarkable period in the world's history, the development of our material resources, of our wealth and of the power that normally goes with wealth has been on such a phenomenal scale that it is a bit difficult for us to realize two very vital facts of history, namely, 170 years is a brief span as compared with the period in which some nations of the past have been world powers before suffering total destruction and, secondly, there has never been until recently a period when it lay within the power of just one man to start a world conflict in which a substantial part of the entire world's population could be destroyed in a matter of days, leaving the remainder cowering behind a windbreak or in the diseased soaked ruins of a slum. Hence, my hope that this is an appropriate time and place for the Members of the Senate, who by their presence here this morning indicate a desire to have their lives conform to the teachings of the Bible, to ask as Benjamin Franklin did at the Philadelphia Constitutional Convention, that the Father of Light will illuminate our understanding with respect to our true objectives and our concept of the meaning of greatness.

As an appropriate theme for our consideration, I wish to remind you of what Jesus said to two of his disciples, James and John, who had expressed to him the very worldly ambition to be the two top men in His new kingdom: "Ye know that they who are accounted to rule over the Gentiles lord it over them; and their great ones exercise authority over them. But it is not so among you: but whosoever would become great among you, shall be your minister. And whosoever would be first among you, shall be servant of all. For the Son of Man also came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many."

It is a great honor to serve in the Senate of the United States, which still can be described properly as the greatest deliberative body in the world. No man ever reached the Senate without an ambition to be great. It is, of course, a well-known fact that after achieving the ambition of being a United States Senator, many Senators have entertained the ambition of becoming President and some have achieved it. But since, as I have indicated, we live in an age in which possession of unprecedented wealth and power is no longer a guaranty of our immediate peace, much less our ultimate security, I invite your attention to the fact that man's conception of greatness has changed through the ages, and then to ask a candid expression from you during the roundtable discussion—if you sincerely feel that the people of our Nation which claims to be a Christian Nation and which inscribes on its coins "In God We Trust" have finally subscribed to the principle of greatness based upon the Christian principle that he is greatest who best loves and best serves his fellow man.

God made the universe and so God is omnipotent. God made man in His image and God knew from the days of Adam down to the present time not only what every man was doing but what every man was thinking in his heart and so God is omniscient. But, over and above all else, God is love. Love is a gift, the expression of self, and man then is great when he can catch in his poor and futile life some rays of that glory which is the first of God's characteristics.

Those who have been members of this group for the past 12 years will recall how frequently I have discussed the great men of the Old Testament who through complete faith in God dedicated their lives to the service of their fellow man. They will recall my discussion of how God let the Devil strip Job, the richest and most powerful sheik of the desert, of both his wealth and his power and how out of those trials and tribulations Job got a new concept of God and a new vision of true greatness.

Then, some of you may recall the occasion on which I discussed David's conflict with Goliath. Goliath the Giant of the Philistines who typified the barbarian test of greatness—superlative human strength. In conquering Goliath, David relied neither upon his strength nor upon his wealth nor upon a superior intellect. He relied solely upon his implicit faith in God and a deep conviction that he had an opportunity to serve his people.

And then we studied the remarkable career of the Jewish captive named Daniel, who because of his desire to encourage other captive Jews to remain true to their faith was willing to incur the death penalty by refusing to obey the command of an oriental king to worship a false God.

We do not have to look only to the Bible or to the pages of ancient secular history for examples of those who achieved true greatness through unselfish service to others. Today, for instance, is the anniversary of the birth of one of our Nation's greatest scientists, Matthew Fontaine Maury, known as the pathfinder of the seas because he charted the tradewinds and the tides, he founded the U.S. Naval Observatory, he caused to be founded the U.S. Naval Academy, he gathered the data required for the laying of the first transatlantic cable, he organized the first League of Nations which successfully functioned for 50 years in the dissemination of maritime information, and he was the father of the present Weather Bureau. But after the unfortunate War Between the States, Matthew Fontaine Maury turned down flattering offers to head the imperial observatories of both France and Russia to accept the chair of physics at the Virginia Military Institute, in my hometown. Maury never accumulated wealth, he never had political power and during his lifetime no adequate recognition of his intellectual achievements, the three fields of greatness to which so many men aspire. But Maury is now listed among the alltime greats because like the immortal Robert E. Lee he had the Christian concept of true greatness whereby unselfish service to the training of the youth of the South was preferred to material rewards for the use of his distinguished name.

So I conclude by asking you to what extent are our current ambitions for greatness attuned to the accumulation of wealth, the exercise of political power or the public recognition of a superior intellect and what part attuned to the one who said, "I came not to be ministered unto but to minister." As a great London preacher said many years ago: "The physical strength of the Crucified ebbed with His life blood; His last earthly possessions were cast lots for by His executioners; Herod treated Him publicly as a fool when He was on His way to die. Yet His greatness remained; for His eternal strength indeed, His uncreated wealth, His clear and awful intellect, were not as men deemed, in that hour of darkness; His supreme greatness, that which was to give the law to the best human thought upon the subject, and to revolutionize the world, remained. It remained, that consummate act of service, offered by infinite charity to the Father on high, offered on behalf of man below: and henceforth all who, by faith and love, unite themselves to it, are initiated thereby into the true secret of man's greatness, and learn practically the meaning of the precept of Christ."

The recognition by this group of the Christian principle of true greatness and their believing and united prayers may help to lift the shadows from the road ahead.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN WISCONSIN

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I have just received from the Wisconsin State Employment Service a report that unemployment in Wisconsin during the past month amounted to 77,400. This is up by a whopping 16,000 over the number for the same time a year earlier. It is up by a solid 7,000 since November. In spite of these bleak figures, unemployment in my State is moderately less than in the rest of the country.

Mr. President, we hear much talk about Government waste, and we should. Certainly I deplore it. But the most tragic and the most irreplaceable waste in this country is the waste of men who want to work but cannot find employment. The work they were denied doing last month can never be made up. It is lost forever. It is lost at a time when America needs the work of men to build tens of thousands of schoolrooms, when we need literally hundreds of thousands of homes, and a rapid and vast stepup in our missile production and in our whole Defense Establishment.

Yes, indeed, Mr. President, waste—the waste of idle manpower in an America that needs the work of men—is the prime issue before this Congress. And this Senator intends to do everything in his power as a Senator to propose and persuade and vote to give these idle men a chance to work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEATING in the chair). Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

VISIT OF SOVIET UNION'S DEPUTY PREMIER ANASTAS MIKOYAN

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, after a good deal of soul searching, I simply cannot condone the activities of those who indulge in socializing with Deputy Premier Mikoyan. Were he here on some specific business I could understand formal talks with him by our officials who would be concerned with his proposals. It should be obvious to all that Mikoyan is here for a propaganda good will tour; first, to try to weaken our hitherto firm stand in regard to the Berlin situation, and, secondly, to attempt to soften us up for eventual proposals of increased trade with the Soviet Union, which can only have the effect of weakening our comparative position.

A few of our great industrialists and a few of our Wall Street bankers have given him the red-carpet treatment as a matter of obvious self-interest if his mission is successful. I, for one, certainly do not intend to aid him in the accomplishment of his mission, nor do I approve of their actions. I wonder if these same bankers and industrialists are aware of Lenin's statement that, "When we Communists are ready to hang the capitalists, they'll try to outbid each other for the sale of the hemp to us." That is pretty straight language. When will we learn that men cannot be both greedy and free? Why do we now pay tribute and social adulation for a temporary smile from a man whose every past word and deed indicates that he despises us and our way of life? Has his Communist-indoctrinated thinking of many years duration so suddenly changed?

I am distressed that some of my congressional colleagues have also accorded him recognition in social activities. It is especially disturbing that this man, one of the top plotters of our destruction, should have been given a luncheon under the very dome of the U.S. Capitol, which is the most important citadel of human freedom in the world today. Those of us in public life who have entrusted to us the safeguarding of the constitutional guarantees of human freedoms might better follow the course set by that astute and beloved leader of the Catholic Church, Cardinal Cushing of Boston, who recently said without equivocation, "I shall not receive Mikoyan nor attend any functions in his honor."

That should, indeed, be the course of our people, whose memories are not so dull that they have already forgotten an incident which occurred just a few brief months ago, and which characterizes the calculated course of that ruthless regime which Mikoyan represents. An American unarmed transport plane, on its way from Turkey to Iran, was shot down by Soviet fighter planes over Armenia, which happens to be Comrade Mikoyan's homeland. Eventually, Mr. Mikoyan's government was kind enough to return to us the bodies of four American soldiers. Where are the other ten? We do not know.

Instead of traipsing around the country exuding affable charm, I would be much more impressed if Mikoyan would address himself to giving us some information concerning the whereabouts of those sons of American mothers.

Cardinal Cushing's course is the one I had already set for myself from the time Mikoyan arrived in this country. In that decision, and in my whole course of action, I shall continue to do my utmost to convey to the Soviet enslaved peoples of the world that the torch which they bear in their never-ending struggle for freedom still shines brightly in the eyes of the vast majority of the people of this Nation.

It will be my purpose to demonstrate to those people of the world who look to us for leadership that the adulation and freewheeling publicity accorded Mikoyan in some quarters is only an expression of the views of a small fraction of the people of this country. A vast majority echo the words of Rudyard Kipling in that great anthem entitled "The Recessional," which concludes with—

> Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
> Lest we forget—lest we forget.

I have full faith that the people of this country have not forgotten.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I rise to disagree with the statement made by my distinguished and able and beloved friend from New Hampshire with regard to his colleagues visiting with the distinguished official of the Soviet Government.

Mr. President, I think very much of our system. I am so proud of it that there is nothing I have to hide and nothing I have to fear.

I think it was good that Mr. Mikoyan came to this country. I think the further he went, and the more he saw, the less he must have been impressed with his own system. I only wish that more people of his stature and his ability could see how the free-enterprise system works and how freedom is preserved. I also wish that men of equal stature in our country were given the same free privilege to travel through Russia and observe all areas there, instead of certain selected areas.

It was not many months ago when Mr. Khrushchev was carried on a television program in this country. I think his appearance on that program did much to unite our own people and to instill in them a new determination to preserve the freedom that our forefathers had fought for. I think it was well to have Mr. Khrushchev appear on the television screens, because no one who saw him wanted any part of either Mr. Khrushchev or the Russian system.

I believe in the Open Curtain policy, and I believe the more people can exchange views and exchange ideas and reason things out, the better off we shall be. This is a troubled world, but at least the people of this country and the leaders of this country want peace more than they want anything else.

I cannot help but believe that when Mr. Mikoyan returns to his own country he will at least have had a great impression of what free government really is; and I hope that he and his people will permit our President, and our Secretary of State, and our minority leader, and the leaders of both parties of our country, to appear on television, so the Russian people can see the difference.

One of the most respected Members of this body, and a friend of mine, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS], has just returned from travel in Russia. I listened to his report with great interest. I had heard the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] report on a study he had made there some years ago. What impressed me about the report of the Senator from Mississippi was that he went to the schools and saw the children, he went to the stores and saw the storekeepers, he saw people in all walks of life. He was impressed with the fact that 90 percent of the people were interested in our country and wanted to know more about it. He believed they were all determined to have peace. The trouble is that the other 10 percent happen to be those who are in charge of the Government.

I would rather have a few words dropped under the dome of the Capitol than have a few bombs dropped on it.

I certainly voice no approval of the Russians' system, of their actions, or of their ideas when I discuss matters with them, any more than I give approval to what the Senator is saying when I stand to try to reason with him. The Senator is entitled to his thoughts. I have great respect for them. A great deal of the time I agree with the Senator, but I do not agree with him that we ought to shut the curtain and try to stick our nose in the sand, to run under the tunnel and hide, to tuck our tails and say, "We are so insecure ourselves, and we have such an inferiority complex we are afraid to let anybody even come to see what we have; and, more than that, we are afraid to talk with them. Moreover, if we talk with them we are certainly not going to eat with them."

That is not, in my judgment, the way to have peace in the world, ever. I think the thing the American people and the people of the world want more than anything else is the opportunity for their children to live instead of to be destroyed by the means which we have developed, which can wipe out humanity overnight.

I thank my friend for his generous reference.

Mr. BRIDGES. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Texas, there is nobody I admire more for his Americanism and forthrightness than the distinguished Senator from Texas. I have a very deep affection for him.

I do not quarrel with people of our Government having official contact, but I do not think the Senator for one moment believes our officials are going to be invited to Russia, allowed to see everything, or are going to have banquets given in their honor, are going to have luncheons given in their honor, and are going to have the red carpet rolled out for them, and so forth and so on. Does the Senator so believe?

In addition to that, we in the U.S. Senate and we as a country in the United Nations have taken a definite position against what happened in Hungary. We are talking about the man who was the architect. He was the boss right on the job when the Hungarian massacre occurred. I think this situation is a little different.

The minority leader of the Senate, the Secretary of State, and the President of the United States have never been in the position of coming forward with such a record. I think the situation is wholly different.

I do not object to any official of the U.S. Government, including Senators of the United States, sitting down to discuss problems with a representative of a foreign power. I think that is as it should be.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. What I have objected to is the giving of luncheons and dinners in Mikoyan's honor, and particularly I object when certain big Wall Street bankers and certain big industrialists—those who would be the first victims of any Communist success in this Nation—rush in to glowingly receive Mikoyan. That is what I object to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I do not know anything about these Wall Street bankers. The Senator is more familiar with them, evidently, than I am.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have been reading about them lately.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I went to a luncheon yesterday, given so that a group of Senators could meet and discuss their impressions with the distinguished publisher of the Commercial Appeal in Memphis, Tenn.

I observe my delightful friend, the junior Senator from Tennessee, who was host at that luncheon, is present in the Chamber.

I broke bread at that luncheon. I broke more of it than I should have, and I have taken on more weight, but it was a delicious luncheon. I enjoyed it. We exchanged ideas back and forth.

At the conclusion of that luncheon I went to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The only reason why I had not gone to the committee earlier was that I had accepted the luncheon invitation of the Senator from Tennessee first. When I got to the committee I observed—I will say this to the Senator, since it is what he objects to—there was not even any water on the table. All had finished eating. There was no food around.

I observed the distinguished minority leader. I was glad he was present. I listened to the Deputy Premier. I heard him respond to some questions asked by members of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I did not ask any questions, but I heard some very penetrating questions asked, and some answers made. I am proud we have a country where we can sit down with the leaders of government—Republicans and Democrats, the majority leader and minority leader, and the chairman of the committee and the Republican members of the committee—and, through questions, fully and thoroughly demonstrate, I think, even to Mr. Mikoyan that our system is better than his.

I would not want this opportunity to pass without making such defense as I am capable of making of the conduct of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I am glad the President of the United States talked to Mr. Mikoyan. I am glad the Secretary of State talked to Mr. Mikoyan. I understand that the distinguished Vice President is anticipating a visit to Russia.

I think the more the Russian people can see us and the more we can see them the better opportunity we shall have to avoid destroying all humanity. As I said earlier, I would rather drop words than bombs.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will my distinguished colleague from New Hampshire yield to me?

Mr. BRIDGES. I am happy to yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I was invited to the luncheon yesterday by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate. It was my honor to sit next to the Deputy Premier. I asked a great many questions about agriculture, livestock, and feed grains before other questions dealing essentially with foreign relations were brought forth.

I have two emotions about the matter. The first can be best illustrated by what happened 50 years ago, because it was exactly 50 years ago that Theodore Roosevelt invited Booker T. Washington of Tuskegee Institute to the White House for lunch. The fulminations in the country reached to the heavens. In our own country what sharp difference of opinion there was over the fact that a man of color, a great educator and a great leader of his people, should even be invited to the White House by the President of the United States.

Yesterday we had as a guest the Deputy Premier of Russia. He came as a tourist, really; he did not come in his official status. It is often difficult to make the distinction as between the status of a man in one category and in another. That is neither here nor there. I was glad to attend officially. My greatest regret is that what was said and what was asked could not have been put on the record. Then our people would be able to make a good estimate.

Much was said by way of comment about the luncheon, so I think I am free, without violating any confidences, to make remarks on an item or two. My good friend from New Hampshire raises a question of 9 or 10 unretrieved, unexplained bodies in the difficulty which happened over Armenia. That very question was raised by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. LAUSCHE]. I followed his every word. I think the Senator will agree we did not get a very satisfactory answer to that question. The Berlin question was raised. I was glad to note the alertness of my distinguished friend from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] in pursuing the matter.

I wish our people could have observed the agitation and the sharply punctuated gestures of the Deputy Premier; the firmness which he manifested; and his forthrightness, in a sense, when he said, through his affable and very fluent young interpreter, "You mistrust us, and we mistrust you." It would have been very helpful. I wish our people could have listened. It would have given them great insight. It has made me, I think, more dedicated than ever before.

I want to say to my distinguished friend that as an official, invited guest, it was quite an eye opener for me. The one thought I brought away was: Let nobody in this country ever mistake the firm chin, the flashing eye, the absolute steadfastness without any opportunity of retreat on the part of the Premier, because he laid it right on the line. From that we can well know our duty and our responsibility will be to be firm in every situation which may arise, for if we vacillate, if we weaken, I shudder to think what the ultimate consequence may be.

So I concur with my friend that it was not a social function. I think we were merely extending official courtesies to the distinguished guest from the Soviet Union. However, the meeting was an eye-opener. I am glad I was there to hear him, to see him, and to get a few questions answered. My greatest regret is that there was not time enough for many other questions. I was primed to ask how many television stations the Russians had, and how many receiving sets they had; how many radio stations, and how many radio receivers. I wanted to find out, if I could, just how effective our U.S. Information Service is. My distinguished friend from Texas has listened many times to testimony on that subject.

I wondered whether we had what was necessary to match the Russians, whether or not our programs were being jumbled, and whether or not we were getting our money's worth for our expenditure of $100 million a year. But unfortunately time did not permit of asking all those questions. If it had been possible to remain there until 4 o'clock in the afternoon and let the questioning go around the table, and if the questions and answers could all have been reduced to writing, so that there would have been a transcript, it would have made most illuminating reading.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I believe in quid pro quo. I do not object to Mr. Mikoyan appearing on every television station in the country, or to every one of our 175 million people seeing him, because I believe that everyone who saw him or heard him would reject his philosophy, and become more dedicated to the system of which America is so proud.

What I object to is that we do not demand of Russia the same privileges we grant their people. She should extend to our people the same privileges which her people enjoy when they visit our country. If Mikoyan can go from one end of the land to the other, from one supermarket to another, from one super highway to another, I believe that those of equal stature in our Government should be permitted to go to Russia and to move about as freely as we have allowed Mikoyan to move.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I pay the same tribute to the distinguished Senator from Illinois that I extend to the distinguished Senator from Texas. I know that he is a great American, and I have real affection for him. I am not leveling personal criticism at any Member of the Senate. However, I was distressed that a luncheon honoring Mr. Mikoyan was given under the Capitol dome. Perhaps the exchange of ideas was healthy, but I agree with the Senator from Texas that we should demand the same privileges for our officials and citizens who travel in Russia. Reciprocity means a fair and equal exchange; and we have not had it in the past from Russia or the other Communist countries.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I understand the position which the Senator is taking. With reference to the luncheon yesterday, I was present. I did not consider it a luncheon honoring the Deputy Prime Minister of the Soviet Union. It was a luncheon given by the Foreign Relations Committee for the purpose of exchanging ideas. It was for the purpose of allowing us an opportunity to ask questions and get answers. The thought never entered my mind that the luncheon was in his honor at all. I did not so regard it.

Mr. BRIDGES. That is true. However, I thought it was a luncheon to honor him, because that is the way in which it was reported.

Mr. SPARKMAN. There is nothing unusual in the Foreign Relations Committee having an official from a foreign government appear before it. We do it often. I have long advocated not only having officials from foreign governments appear before the committee, but having ambassadors come and talk with us whenever they return home from foreign countries. We have done so in many instances.

I agree with what the distinguished Senator from Illinois has said about the exchange of ideas yesterday. I believe a great many members of the press were surprised at the general discussions we had concerning some things which were not sensational. Of course, the subject of disarmament was sensational, as was the Berlin question. There are many similar questions. However, we discussed a number of other things. We tried to obtain from Mr. Mikoyan his impression of the country, and he gave us a great many ideas.

I was particularly interested in talking with him about housing. He told us a great deal about housing, and indicated how far behind us the Russians are in that field. I think most of us were surprised to learn that the minimum housing standards in Russia for a new house for a family are so far below what they are in this country that the two situations cannot be compared.

Those are not headline or glamorous subjects, but I think the discussion meant a great deal. A little more than 3 years ago I had the privilege of visiting Russia with my wife. We went there in an entirely unofficial capacity. At times travel in Russia is discouraged. We went on our own. We went to see what we could see, to talk with the people, and receive our own impressions.

I returned home with the feeling that if we ever hoped to make any headway toward bringing about a change in the way of doing things in Russia, it would have to be done through the exchange of ideas, the penetration of ideas. My opinion is that it is useless to hope that the Russian people will rise up. They will not.

As has been stated here, I found that the Russian people were interested in knowing about things in our country. What a fine thing it would be if we could get across to them all the facts.

I am glad that the Deputy Prime Minister of the Soviet Union came to this country, not because of the deplorable general record which the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire has pointed out—I deplore that as much as he does—but because he is a high official in his own Government, and because he is one who lives there. I wish more of them would come. I wish great numbers of them would come, and I wish more of our people would go over there and try to demonstrate the difference between our two ways of life.

I am pleased to learn that the distinguished Vice President of the United States will probably visit Russia this spring or summer. I am glad he is going. I presume that his rank is about the same as that of the Soviet visitor. I hope dinners will be given in his honor. I hope he will be given opportunities for discussions such as we had yesterday in the Foreign Relations Committee. I hope the Soviets will allow the Vice President to appear on television. I understand that the Deputy Prime Minister is to meet the press tomorrow afternoon. I hope that Vice President NIXON may have the opportunity of appearing on television in Russia, that he will be quoted in the press, and that he will be able to get the story across. I hope hundreds of thousands of others will follow his course. I hope many more of the Russian people will come over here.

With regard to the question of functions honoring the Deputy Premier—and I do not rule out that possibility, in view of the high position which he holds in his government—let us try to get across to him some of the ideas which will do some good. We must find a way of dealing with those people. We cannot go along forever in a cold war. I shudder to think what would happen to all of us in case of a hot war. So I say that we must grasp at every straw we can, in the hope that it may lead to the development of something which will allow us to live together in the same world.

Mr. DIRKSEN, Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, and Mr. HUMPHREY addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield first to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's yielding to me for a half minute, so that I may explain my reason for now leaving the floor.

I realize more than anyone else that I am a legislator, not a diplomat. However, as a man I wish always to be courteous. Hardly a day passes that an official of a foreign government does not come to call upon the leaders of both parties. At this very moment there is sitting in my office the Honorable Felix von Eckart, the State Secretary of the Republic of Germany, and Mr. Richard Balken, Secretary of the German Embassy.

They are meeting with the Speaker of the House at 2 o'clock. I have been detained because of this discussion. Unfortunately, I shall miss everything the Senators have to say. I hope, however, that Senators will realize that I am frequently called upon to extend courtesies to foreign visitors and that upon occasions I must eat with officials of other lands, but that that does not mean in any respect that I am embracing their philosophies.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I merely wish to improve the arithmetic with respect to the time devoted to discussions with foreign visitors. Yesterday 17 persons were present in a 2-hour discussion. I have not calculated each person's time on the basis of minutes. However, my distinguished friend from Minnesota had 8 hours, as I understand, for his discussion in Moscow. We should approximate the matter a little bit more and try to make certain that the next time we have a luncheon of the kind we had yesterday we devote a whole afternoon to it, and that we first prepare ourselves with questions, and then make notes, and in that way try to get the whole story. That would be informative to the people of this country.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. First of all I want to say that the minority leader has put his finger on a very important point with respect to the discussion of yesterday, namely, that the Deputy Premier of the Soviet Union is tough to deal with, that he is a competent man, and that he demonstrates to us the kind of intellectual toughness and moral strength our country needs if it is to stand up and win in the cold war, and that, therefore, we must step up our activity in this regard.

One thought occurs to me particularly with respect to the length of the luncheon yesterday, and that is that it is about time the Government of the United States realizes it is not possible to discuss problems of the world in a brief session. Our country seems to have become addicted to what is called briefs. The problems of our country and of other countries cannot be fully discussed in brief discussions lasting about 2 hours.

For example, the other day the Secretary of State appeared before the Committee on Foreign Relations to give the committee a general review of American foreign policy. He spent 2 hours with the committee. If the foreign policy of our country can be discussed in a meeting that lasts no more than 2 hours, then, indeed it is not much of a foreign policy. I am not complaining about the Secretary of State. I thought he made a good presentation. I merely say that everyone around here believes he is too busy and does not have the time for a discussion of fundamental, basic issues. The Senator from Illinois is right; yesterday the time could have been profitably spent in a discussion not of 2 hours or 4 hours, but in a discussion lasting all day, and then some. It would have been to the advantage and profit of both parties.

I believe Mr. Mikoyan's visit has been helpful to the cause of peace, and I will tell the Senators why I think so.

Mr. BRIDGES. To interrupt the Senator briefly, I merely wish to observe that I had the impression the Senator was opposed to lengthy statements, judging by his votes on the so-called filibusters and changing the rules of the Senate. I thought he had made his position very clear on these issues. I am therefore a little surprised that he should favor so much time being spent on this subject.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am surprised that the Senator from New Hampshire should think that I would let any theory get in the way of what he knows to be the practice of the Senator from Minnesota. [Laughter.]

The distinguished Senator from Illinois just whispered to me that there was a little filibustering at yesterday's meeting with the Deputy Premier of the Soviet Union. The Deputy Premier was asked a question by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and he proceeded to talk for about 25 minutes. After he had spoken for approximately that time I decided to interrupt him by asking some other questions.

However, I wish to get back to my main point, that of courtesy. I believe that the visit to the United States by the Deputy Premier of the Soviet Union has resulted in a better hope for peace. I should like to tell the Senators why I think so.

I believe the Deputy Premier found out something about America which other observers of America in other reports to the Soviet Union officials did not honestly state. He found out that this great, powerful, rich, and strong country is hard at work. He was impressed, as he said several times, by the fantastic amount of industrial construction. He also found out that our people are essentially united. He also found out that in foreign relations, whether we are Democrats or Republicans, we are united so far as the great fundamental issues involved in our foreign policy are concerned, and that we have in that respect basic agreements. We may have some differences of opinion with respect to some of the details, but on the German issue, on the Berlin issue—and particularly on the Berlin issue—our position is clear. I am sure that the Deputy Premier, Mr. Mikoyan, will go back to Mr. Khrushchev with a clear understanding that the American people are united on that isue. It was my effort to try to make that clear to Mr. Khrushchev when I was in the Soviet Union.

I believe in politeness. I do not believe it is an indication of courage to be impolite. Only a weakling feels he needs to be impolite. It is not necessary for anyone to insult another person in order to prove his point. It is possible to ask penetrating questions responsively and politely and with intelligence and courtesy and courage. It is the insulting person who is the weakling and the ranter and the demagogue. I believe America did itself proud by showing that it had no fear whatsoever.

I should also like to call attention to the fact that the people who have been picketing and demonstrating against the Deputy Premier's visit have shown to all the world that we have freedom of speech in America. It is good for the Deputy Premier of the Soviet Union to know that our people have the right to protest, and that our people are not shoved around or beaten over the head or put in jail for protesting and picketing. I believe he received a good demonstration of Americana. I am all for it.

Finally I should like to say that more of these exchanges are needed. One of the weaknesses of our country today is its timidity. I, for one, am not afraid of Communists. All too often we give the impression that somehow we should not be seen talking to them or be seen in their company. Mr. President, the propagation of the faith, whatever the faith may be, is not accomplished by talking only to the converted. If we are to save any souls, we must go to work on the sinners. If it is our intention and hope to spread democracy and freedom, we must be willing to walk into the den of those who oppose them. It is necessary for us to take our peace program into the citadel of our opponent.

One of the weaknesses of our Government today is its timidity with respect to Iron Curtain countries. In the Senate we are strong in talking against the Soviets. One word said inside the Soviet Union on the subject of democracy is worth 10 CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS full of the same talk.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, does the Senator believe that Mr. Mikoyan will go back to the Soviet Union and tell the people there what he saw here and what he learned about us?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I believe that the Russians understand power even better than Americans. I believe the Russians are able to calculate on the basis of truth. Public opinion, so far as it relates to Russia, means about 11 ministers and about 200 members of the central committee. Those are the people to whom Mr. Mikoyan will talk. Those are the grassroots, so-called, in the Soviet Union. Those grassroots, or public opinion, are the central committee. He is returning to Russia and he will talk to them around January 27.

It should not be forgotten that Mr. Mikoyan has been a minister in Russia for 32 years. He is one member of the entire central committee who can never threaten the leader. The reason is that he is a member of the minority which, regrettably in Russia, can never hope to have one of its members succeed to the top position of premier. He is an Armenian. We in this country admire Armenians. They are first-class citizens in America. However, in Russia they have been a persecuted minority for many years. Mr. Mikoyan, for 32 years, since 1926, has had the agility and ability to go through the many changes which have taken place in the Kremlin, primarily because he is a brain truster and because he can never be a threat to the No. 1 man.

When Mr. Mikoyan returns to Russia he will carry his report inside closed rooms. Do Senators know what he will say publicly? Publicly, he will talk the way some people talk in public in America. What is important is what he will say inside closed rooms. I say again that we gave him a demonstration of political solidarity and political unity, which is all to the good. I made myself quite clear on that issue when I was in Russia. I stood up for our President. I made it clear that, regardless of partisan politics, I stood by the Secretary of State. When the Secretary of State was condemned in my presence in the Soviet Union, I said, "I will hear no more of it." It is far more important to say that inside the Kremlin than it is to say it on Constitution Avenue. When I asked for some time on Moscow TV, I was given time. I talked about President Eisenhower and about America and about justice and human dignity and spiritual values, as well as physical well-being. That is what I talked about on the Moscow TV. How did I get on it? By asking them for the opportunity.

If we are to go around the world and act like wallflowers, the Soviets will be mighty glad to put us behind a closed cage and keep us there.

I suggest that we need a little more of good, old-fashioned American spunk, to make those fellows over there wake up to what is going on over here.

I remember when I went to the United Nations. I was advised by our Government not to make myself too available; not to have my picture taken with the Soviets, if any of them came around. I was never more humiliated in my life when, one time, a Soviet official came up and stuck out his hand like a dreaded robot. I withdrew mine. Then I remembered: I am a man. So I put out my hand. Why should I have been afraid? Why should I have acted like a wallflower?

I think it is about time that we stand up and let the Russians know that we have the finest government in the world. There is not a Senator who has come back from a trip to Russia who can say that he was not treated courteously. There is not one who did not find out that the people with whom he talked were simply dying to find out something about America.

What did they want to know? "Where do you live? Do you have a house? Do you drive a car? Really? How many rooms do you have in your house? Where do your children go to school? Do you have electricity?"

That was what they wanted to know. They had heard about these things, but they did not believe them. I know that when I was able to take out a picture of our home, show them a picture of our car, and show the children a picture of our family, I was able to demonstrate to them that we were simply plain, ordinary people, who were earning our way through life.

Such conversations made an impression, maybe not on Khrushchev, but on the 16- and 17-year-olds. I met hundreds of them. I talked to hundreds of them through our own interpreter, Dr. Michel Shimkin, of the National Institutes of Health. He will testify that in railroad stations and bus stations, in the subway, in the shops, we had no difficulty at all, unmolested, in talking to hundreds of the Russian people.

Mr. BRIDGES. But the Senator has just said that they are not the grassroots of Russia. He said that so far as having any eventual effect is concerned, the grassroots is the organization of some 200 people at the top.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is why I think Mr. Mikoyan's visit will prove to be beneficial with all the opportunities he has had to plead his case. And, believe me, he is a keen observer. He was surely using the opportunities, as the Senator has pointed out, opportunities to convince and persuade the American people. There is no official of the Soviet Government who is better qualified and more competent in the field of economics and the field of trade in his country than Mr. Mikoyan. I am confident that he will go home, after having seen the plants in Detroit and Cleveland, and remind some of the members of the Soviet hierarchy that America is a mighty strong country—that is, if he has not done so before.

But we should not lose sight of the fact, as some of us have had the chance to observe, that when we see some of the construction which is taking place in Russia, we begin to wonder about how much power they themselves have.

Mr. BRIDGES. But the Senator from Minnesota closes his eyes to the entire background and record of Mikoyan.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I do not. I know that he is a part of the Communist conspiracy. I know the record of the Communist Party from the day it started its revolution to this very hour. Everything the Senator from New Hampshire has said about the Communist Party is true. But it so happens that those people are in charge of a government. It so happens that the Soviet Union is the second strongest country on the face of the earth in terms of sheer military power. I say we are still the strongest. I hope we will continue to be the strongest.

But when we have to face up to those fellows, I think we ought to face up to them as realists: first, to let them know what we are; second, to let them know that we know what kind of people they are. We should let them know that we do not intend to run away; that simply because they can do certain things in Russia, they cannot get by with them here.

Mr. BRIDGES. I now yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. I had almost forgotten what I intended to say. The colloquy on the floor has been extremely interesting.

I do wish that the Senator from New Hampshire, as well as every other Senator, could have attended the courtesy luncheon, because that was what it was, given for the Deputy Premier of the Soviet Union yesterday. If each Senator could have been there, he would have come away with greater pride in his democratic form of government and the democratic institutions which we have in this country. He would have a greater determination to protect them against the inroads of communism.

Mr. Mikoyan was very interesting. He spoke frankly. He admitted the weaknesses of Russia. He admired our strength in many respects. But he did not yield in any respect concerning the Soviet form of government—at least, he did not do so openly, and I feel certain he did not do so to himself at any time. But I could not help thinking that he will return to Russia with a feeling of envy and admiration for what he saw in the United States. As the Senator from Minnesota has said, I assume Mr. Mikoyan will make an honest, accurate report to the comparatively small group to whom he will make his report. What the Russian people will be told, I do not know.

I think the only way in which we can get our story over to the Russian people is through an exchange of visits, which will take many years, perhaps as long as a generation. We all know that the Russian people are out on a limb, so far as their government is concerned. We all know that it will probably take longer to get the entire nation off the limb than it takes some of the Members of this body, who frequently run on limbs, to get off. Some get back very agilely; others have to be helped at times.

But it seemed to me that Mr. Mikoyan's visit—and I know he did not win one convert—has confirmed our determination, if it has done nothing else, to resist his form of government, by which he still stands.

But it is well to meet with those people and to talk with them, because it is only if we know them that we will be able to deal with them most effectively. If we do not meet with them, we will not know how to deal with them.

I think, on the whole, Mr. Mikoyan will return to Russia and probably admit or concede, as he did to us, that the United States is a great country. He freely admitted that comparing our standards of living, our housing, our highway system, and so forth, with those of Russia, Russia had a long, long way to go to catch up with us. I wish he would admit that to all the Russian people, but he probably will not. But I feel certain that he will so inform the top level officials of the Soviet Government. To that extent, I think, probably some good many come. But I am not looking for overnight miracles.

I do not think Russia is in any danger of a revolution for a long time to come. In that respect, it may be quite different from China. We cannot overlook the fact that in the past there have been blood baths in Russia, as well as in Hungary and the other satellite countries. I suppose those blood baths are small compared with what is taking place in China. But since there are so many Chinese, perhaps the Chinese Government feels that it can spare 20 or 30 million people.

On the whole, I should think there has been some gain, some better understanding, from the Mikoyan visit. I hope we may continue to learn more about the Russians, and perhaps in the future our own grandchildren may be much closer to a complete understanding of the Russians than we are.

Mr. BRIDGES. I now yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. The composite face of our country in the face of the Mikoyan visit, exposed to the world, could be the composite face of everything that has been said in the Senate. I emphasize "everything" because there is one thing I have not heard emphasized, namely, that this country in the last 10 or 12 days has been a country covered with a glass dome, under acute observation by every nation in the world, not only the Soviet Union, but every other nation in the world.

They are trying to see, first, if we are naive. The Senator from New Hampshire has been pointing out that we are not. Second, they are waiting to see if we are willing to talk to the Russians.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], the Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], have pointed out that we are willing to talk with them.

Then, the rest of the world is waiting to see whether we will get yanked into a conference of the two superpowers, in which America will abandon her position in the world, or whether we will remain firm in our alliances and treat our allies with the greatest dignity.

I respectfully submit to my colleagues, therefore, that the world should know that we Americans are courteous and, indeed, are hospitable. In fact, we may overdo it occasionally; and in this case the Senator from New Hampshire thinks perhaps we have done so. At the same time, we understand the crimes committed by the regime represented by Mr. Mikoyan, and perhaps, as the Senator from New Hampshire has described, Mr. Mikoyan himself participated in some of them. But we are perfectly willing to talk, although we are not willing to be hoodwinked, and we are not surrendering our position and are not lowering our guard, but are maintaining our regard for our allies in the respect that they have to be full partners of ours. If we can do all of these things at the same time, then I submit that, on balance, the visit has been a good one. But I submit that all these things are required in order to make the point which needs to be made to the world.

I thank the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

Mr. BRIDGES. I gladly yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I wish to say, regarding the action of the committee—I am not sure whether any Senator has referred to this point—that the luncheon was first cleared with the State Department, and had its approval. It was also cleared by the chairman of the committee, and I believe with all the committee members. Certainly, the chairman asked me, and I thought it was a good idea. After having participated in the luncheon, I still think it was a good idea.

I shall not burden the RECORD by repeating many of the things which already have been stated by my colleagues. There are several observations which I should like to make. One of them, I think, has not previously been made.

One of the colleagues of Mr. Mikoyan—I believe it was the head of the American desk in the foreign office of the Russian Government, Mr. Soldator—happened to sit next to me. He said to me that he was impressed that not many questions had been asked about Hungary, and therefore he concluded that Hungary was of no great concern to Americans. He was not referring to the conversations at the luncheon. In fact, his remark was made to me prior to the questioning at the luncheon. Instead, he was referring to his experience during his trip in our country.

I tried to make clear to this Russian official, as I try to make clear now, that such an impression on his part was a false interpretation of the situation in our country—even if we grant that it is true that few questions were asked. I think the proper interpretation is that the Hungarian situation is so bad that, in cases of courtesy luncheons, such as the one we had yesterday, those who participate hesitate, when the occasion is semibusiness and semisocial, let us say—in this case, a courtesy luncheon; I like the language the Senator from Vermont used—to precipitate the most disagreeable and inhospitable question of all. That is my interpretation of why that matter had not been dwelt upon at greater length. If this RECORD is called to the attention of that official—and in view of the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire had led the debate, I have no doubt that it will be—I wish to call the attention of that official to the fact that I think the impression he described to me is a misunderstanding of the situation. Instead, the people of America are very much concerned about Hungary.

I am certain that to all Americans it is most puzzling that a country with the responsibility of Russia would do what was done in Hungary. That is one of the things about which we must have some understanding if there is to be any possibility of improving relations between the United States and Russia. Americans are deeply concerned about Hungary and all that it implies as to the motives and character of the Soviet Government. I wish to make that statement for the RECORD.

I also wish to say that if one follows the theory of the Senator from New Hampshire to its logical conclusion, it is rather difficult to justify the luncheons which have been held in the past with representatives of the German Government or representatives of the Japanese Government. Recently, I was in Japan. I think the Japanese are very great people. I think they did some things which were inexcusable, and I believe they are not at all proud of them. But I do not think we can hold such things against the Japanese people today, to the point that we refuse to do business with them or refuse to have courtesy luncheons or conferences with them. Of course, in the case of the Japanese, we have long since passed that point. I consider that today the Japanese are very good friends of ours—and also that the Germans are very good friends of ours.

But let us keep those relations in mind in connection with the situation confronting us today in the case of the Russians. I hope that our relations with them may be improved and in such a way that we do not sacrifice our position in regard to the rest of Europe.

Furthermore, there is something we can learn from Mr. Mikoyan—namely, that the Russians have found a way to obtain very highly trained professionals to represent their country.

In the United States and in England the tradition has been that politics and diplomacy are for gentlemen, that they are primarily for amateurs, often people who do not need to work to live. On the other hand, many of our best brains go into big business, into the professions, and so forth.

As a matter of fact, I think the nearest to professionals we have in our Government, in a sense, are the Members of Congress, because, generally speaking, more Members of Congress spend their lives in politics than do the members of the executive branch of the Government.

I believe we can learn from this man that if we are going to compete in the world with the Russians we must insist on having far more intensive training for our diplomats, those who represent us in the Foreign Service. I particularly bring this matter to the attention of the ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee, the Senator from New Hampshire, because year after year the Congress has struggled over appropriations for the State Department; and the items which have been stricken out or reduced time after time have been the ones providing for the training of our diplomats, for training in languages, and for upgrading the professional quality of the service, so as to make it more attractive as a longtime undertaking, and so as to induce more of our highly qualified citizens to enter the diplomatic service.

Last of all, let me refer briefly to the exchange program. It has been very difficult to get the Congress to keep it alive. However, that has not been because of any action on the part of the Senate. I believe a successful exchange program can contribute very much in this situation. At the luncheon, Mr. Mikoyan said very willingly that he thought it would be a good thing to increase the number of those who participate in the exchange program. Today that number, insofar as Russia is concerned, is 25. It is proposed that it be increased to 30. I asked him whether he thought it would be well to increase it to 100. He said he thought so.

If the Russians are willing to expose some of their young people to association with Americans, I am perfectly willing to trust the future of our country to some of our outstanding young people, who, we hope, will visit Russia and will draw the proper conclusions regarding the validity of the two different forms of society.

So, I think that, on the whole, such a meeting is beneficial to both sides.

I thank the Senator from New Hampshire for yielding to me.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I did not have an opportunity to hear all of the speech made by the Senator from New Hampshire, but I am quite sure that I would agree with most of it.

I think Americans have a tendency to carry everything to extremes. I recall that prior to World War II, Americans were very much opposed to Russian communism. Then America entered the war, and our Government took the Russians to our bosom, they became great partners of ours, and we are responsible for building up Russia to the strong position it occupies now. Then, later, we refused to have anything at all to do with them; we even refused to talk to them.

I remember that 3 years ago, when I was in Russia, our Ambassador, Mr. Bohlen, thought it was terrible for American officials such as we to even talk to the Russian Government heads. Mr. Bohlen was one of those who helped build up the Russians to their present strong position, during and immediately after World War II.

While I was in Russia we had a meeting with Khrushchev, Bulganin, and others; and I think much good has come from it. Since then more Americans have gone to Russia, and more Russians have come to the United States.

Such discussions can solve many of our problems. However, it is certain that the leaders of nations cannot solve problems by refusing to talk to each other.

But I think at the present time we may be carrying this business of friendship too far by wining and dining a top ranking official of a government which still plans to conquer the entire world.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think the Senator from North Dakota is very sound in his observations.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

SENDING OF U.S. MARINES TO HAITI

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I should like to make a comment, for about 1 minute, upon the sending of a contingent of Marines to Haiti. I noticed an editorial in the Washington Post this morning, bearing the caption "Again the Marines," the first sentence of which reads:

> What useful purpose is served by sending a U.S. military mission to rebuild the armed forces of Haiti—particularly by sending, of all things, a unit of 54 marines?

Mr. President, that does not tell the whole story, by any means. The fact is that we have had an air and naval mission in Haiti for the last 10 years, although I must make clear that did not extend to the ground forces. But it was in the spring of 1958 that Haiti requested a contingent and specifically asked for the Marines. This country sent a survey party there, I think last spring. It was finally agreed we should send a detachment of Marine officers and enlisted men.

I have no doubt they have done a little training, perhaps, but those men are specialists, in the main. That is not their true main function. The Marines are going to Haiti on problems of communications, sanitation, health, public works, and a great many other such purposes. They go at the request of the President of Haiti, Mr. Duvalier, who is a doctor, incidentally.

I see, by an article in the New York Times, that on January 30, President Duvalier is going to relinquish all the extraordinary and dictatorial powers he has. There is going to be a change, and it is hoped, on the basis of their request, we can relieve some of the tensions. I believe we can help establish some stability. It would be in our mutual interest to do so.

In connection therewith, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a news article from the New York Times of January 16, 1959, under the title "Haiti Chief To End Dictatorial Rule."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HAITI CHIEF TO END DICTATORIAL RULE—DUVALIER SAYS HE WILL LET DECREE POWERS EXPIRE ON SCHEDULE JANUARY 30

(By Peter Kihss)

PORT-AU-PRINCE, HAITI, January 15.—President Francois Duvalier, of Haiti, declared today that he would allow dictatorial powers by which he has ruled by decree for 6 months to expire on schedule January 30. The country will return to democratic rule, he said.

In an interview, the 48-year-old President said a state of siege would continue technically until Congress reconvened April 13.

The state of siege, which allows trials by military as well as civilian tribunals, is no longer needed, but was put in by Congress last May 2 after discovery of a bomb plot, the President asserted. The decree powers granted him by Congress after an eight-man invasion last July 29 are no longer needed because the country is peaceful, he added.

POLITICAL PRISONERS FREED

In the interview, which lasted an hour and a half, President Duvalier amplified the decrees by which he granted full pardons last week to 10 men convicted of political offenses. He said all political prisoners had been freed as a sign of good faith and national unity. Clement Jumelle, outlawed former president candidate, can safely return from hiding, he said.

Dr. Duvalier, a physician in private life, also said opposition leaders were free to resume printing newspapers and could again hold indoor meetings. He said an old Haitian law barred open air political rallies except during electoral campaigns.

The President freely discussed Haiti's financial mess. This was attributed to a heritage of old debt, strained relations with the United States, which he said had improved completely, and a one-crop economy hard hit by low coffee prices and 2 years of drought. He praised the United States for having started a $2 million grant program to rehabilitate a northern area near Cap-Haïtien.

President Duvalier expressed hope for early U.S. approval of $43,800,000 in projects before the Development Loan Fund.

PROPOSED DEVELOPMENTS

However, Louis R. Leveque, Permanent Secretary of the Grand Technical Council of National Resources and Economic Development, the country's chief planning agency, said later that only $21,800,000 had been formally applied for. He said this included $6,500,000 for Artibonite Valley irrigation and drainage, $12,300,000 for southern roads, and $3,000 for a sugar mill.

President Duvalier had also referred to an Artibonite power project, and airport, wharf, telephone and water programs for Port-au-Prince.

Separately, Marc Charles, Minister of Agriculture, called the Artibonite program economicaly crucial. M. Charles expressed concern that Haitan oppositionists abroad might be delaying the loan in an attempt to oust President Duvalier.

The President said Communist businessmen from East Germany and Hungary had approached Haiti recently with offers of credit and projects, but had been rebuffed.

Explaining why he had replaced two army commanders while staying in power since October 22, 1957, the President said this army had been overhauled to bring in young brains. A special U.S. Marine mission completed a month's training of the Army last month, and a new mission is due January 19, Foreign Minister Louis Mars said.

President Duvalier asserted that he had used the decree powers mainly in the field of economics, to reorganize departments. However, there were also penal edicts, including an August 6 decree providing imprisonment for spreading false news or rumors likely to breach public peace. Censorship was lifted December 6.

The President said repeatedly that he wished his opponents would join him for the national welfare.

"I am not a strong man," he insisted. "I am not a dictator. I consider myself a country doctor. I want to build up Haiti."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I am glad, under the circumstances, that the Marines are going. It puts the whole matter in a different light. It is not another step in gunboat diplomacy, as the Washington Post has said.

THE NECESSITY FOR A BALANCED BUDGET

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD, an article by David Lawrence entitled "Battle Over Stable Dollar Seen Affecting All World," which appeared in the New York Herald Tribune of January 13, 1959.

As we well know, the Soviet Union, as well as challenging us in space and advanced weapons, has declared total economic war on us. The free world watches the strength of our dollar as carefully as it watches our military ability. The President's state of the Union message emphasized the need of defense effort within the framework of a balanced budget recognizing full well how completely integrated are the matters of national security and economic stability. Mr. Lawrence's article is a most timely and thoughtful one in complete confirmation of the President's position. The cause of economic stability so well charted in the President's message and repeated in Mr. Lawrence's article, is one to which I have dedicated myself.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BATTLE OVER STABLE DOLLAR SEEN AFFECTING ALL WORLD

(By David Lawrence)

WASHINGTON, January 12.—The battle of the century has begun. How it turns out will affect the future of the American dollar for decades to come. On the way the die is cast in the next few months depends the purchasing power of the pay envelopes of millions of Americans. Will the dollar remain stable or will it decline still further? For today the dollar is worth 48 cents in terms of what it was worth just 20 years ago, and if the forces of confiscation have their way, it could go down to 25 cents in another decade. The whole world is watching to see what America does. It affects trade everywhere.

The battle against a stable dollar is being waged here right now under respectable auspices by men in Congress who scorn the label "radical" but who would commit the United States to expenditures far beyond the President's budget.

OPPONENTS ACTIVE

Already the American people are being told by the political partisans that a "balanced budget" means insecurity or indifference to the military safety of the country. To play upon such fears, the devotees of the doctrine of spending evidently believe, is to get sanction for big appropriations—more billions for missiles or expeditions to the moon.

The insidious argument made is that the President gives too much weight to the balanced-budget idea and that he is neglecting "national defense." Will this campaign undermine the President's influence and open the floodgates in Congress so that billions more than he recommends will be appropriated even in the face of a $12 billion deficit this year?

Mr. Eisenhower has been absorbed for months formulating the new budget. He has held lengthy conferences with our military leaders and with our economic experts. Honest, patriotic, experienced military men, without any political bias, helped to make the new budget. It was no casual decision by one man that led the President to announce that he believed the budget for the next fiscal year could be balanced.

ECONOMIC DEFENSE

What is the biggest single fact about our military position? The intercontinental missile is not yet perfected, but the intermediate missile can be fired from bases in Europe close to Soviet Russia.

The truth is, moreover, the Soviet leaders know their country can be devastated in a matter of hours. Both sides know a mutual deterrent has come into being. There's a stalemate on the military side.

The urgent question now, therefore, is not the spending of unlimited amounts on military defense, but giving more attention than ever before to economic defense. As for those who say that military spending should be expanded, no matter what it costs, there is a simple test of sincerity. Would they support heavier taxes and—more important even than higher taxes—would they vote for governmental wage-and-price controls?

DEFENSE COSTS SOAR

Why, if the cold war is so hot, shouldn't American labor unions and business corporations be held in check so that the price of the same bomber that the Government buys today will not be twice as much 2 years hence? For that's what has happened in the last 5 years to push a large part of our defense budget upward.

President Eisenhower's well-reasoned state of the Union message was printed in full text only here and there in a few newspapers of the country. He will have to go on the television, again and again, and issue more and more written expositions of his policy to make real headway against his opponents. The critics get more space in the press and on the air than do the defenders.

CONFIDENCE IN PRESIDENT

What is needed now is confidence in the Nation's Chief Executive—the very man who commanded all the allied armies in Europe just a few years ago, and whose integrity and lifetime devotion to the military security of his country ought not to be questioned. Would Dwight Eisenhower ever fail to recommend any military proposal that was really needed? Would he neglect the defense of America?

Partisan-minded people and those Members of Congress with a vested interest in currying favor in their home States and districts through more and more spending on defense factories and local facilities, which could mean bigger payrolls for their constituents, are demanding more defense and arousing fears about the Nation's security. Only an informed public opinion can win this crucial battle against bankruptcy. For this is what the battle of the century in Washington really means.

Unless the American people can see through the maze of propaganda and alarmist talk, and put into proper perspective the selfish ambitions of some of their legislators, Macaulay's prophecy of more than 100 years ago that the American Ship of State is doomed to destroy itself because it is "all sail and no anchor" could, indeed, come true.

THE CASE OF ANNIE LEE MOSS

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an editorial appearing in the December 27, 1958, issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

This editorial has to do with the Annie Lee Moss case, which came before the permanent Subcommittee on Investigations which, in 1954, was headed by the late Senator McCarthy. At that time, Mrs. Moss denied under oath that she had ever been a Communist Party member, and she succeeded in convincing committee members that she was telling the truth. This particular incident comes to mind because of a recent revelation which seems to have been all too little publicized. As a result of the decision in the Jencks case, the Communist Party demanded and received the right to look at the FBI files during a recent proceeding before the Subversive Activities Control Board. The interesting result of this effort on the part of the Communist Party was a complete boomerang.

Mr. President, I am asking the privilege of inserting this article for two reasons.

The first is to show those who are inclined to be soft on communism just how wrong they can be and how completely they can be taken in because there is nothing sacred about oaths and agreements to anyone imbued with the Communist cause.

The second reason why I wish to see this inserted in the RECORD is because I consider the revelations in this case at once both a vindication and a tribute to the dedicated members of the FBI, and the complete accuracy and painstaking carefulness of their investigations.

Upon a perusal of the files, there was found in copies of the Communist Party's own record, the authenticity of which it does not dispute, evidence that one Annie Lee Moss was a party member beyond a doubt. It is ironic that the word of Annie Lee Moss was believed instead of that of Mrs. Markward, the dedicated undercover FBI agent who had infiltrated the Communist Party organization in Washington and had testified as to Mrs. Moss' membership.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HERE'S AN "INFORMER" THE REDS SHOULD NOT HAVE TANGLED WITH

Once in a blue moon the Communists pull a rock, as the expression is. In a recent proceeding before the Subversive Activities Control Board the Communist Party demanded a look at the FBI files, which the Supreme Court, in the Jencks case, had decreed they might have. How this privilege bounced back in their faces makes a fascinating tale.

In February 1954 a great stew was created over charges that a Mrs. Annie Lee Moss, who was employed in the code room of the Pentagon, was a Communist. The charges were based on testimony before Senator McCarthy's Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations by Mrs. Mary Markward, an FBI undercover agent who had infiltrated the Communist Party in Washington. A few weeks later Mrs. Moss took the stand and, in a dramatic session of the committee, denied under oath that she was or ever had been a Communist Party member. She convinced committee members that she was telling the truth.

In due course Mrs. Moss became the heroine of an Edward R. Murrow program on television, a program which moved TV critic John Crosby so deeply that he wrote: "The American people fought a revolution to defend, among other things, the right of Annie Lee Moss to earn a living, and Senator McCarthy now decided she had no such right." Mrs. Markward was smeared by liberals as an "informer."

Back now, as they say on the air, to the recent hearings before the Subversive Activities Control Board, which has been trying for years to compel the U.S. Communist Party to register as the agent of a foreign power, which it undoubtedly is. Twice the Federal courts have turned back the Board's judgments on the ground that certain testimony against the party was "tainted."

One allegedly tainted witness was supposed to be Mrs. Markward, whose information in the FBI files the party wanted to see. What the party learned was that the evidence on Mrs. Moss' Communist membership did not rest on Mrs. Markward's testimony alone. The story, which was dug out of the documents by Mrs. Alice Widener's U.S.A. magazine and followed up by Edward J. Mowery in the Newark Star-Ledger, has received too little public attention.

Says the Board: "Markward's FBI reports concerning Moss, the majority being copies of actual Communist Party records such as club and branch attendance, membership and dues rosters, were received in evidence. * * * Exhibits 499–511 corroborate Mrs. Markward's testimony in the Moss security hearing. The situation that has resulted on the Moss question is that the party's own records, copies of which are now in evidence, and the authenticity of which it does not dispute, show an Annie Lee Moss, 72 R Street SW., Washington, D.C., was a party member in the mid-1940's." That was one of the addresses given by the Mrs. Moss who was employed at the Pentagon.

Thus Mrs. Markward stands vindicated as one who performed a difficult and unrewarding mission for her country. Vindicated also is the FBI, which the Communists are sworn to destroy, and—in this instance at least—the labors of a much-abused congressional committee.

Mrs. Moss, who appears to be still in the Pentagon in a "nonsensitive" job, may be small potatoes. But the episode suggests that Congress would do well to explore the possibility that our bureaucracy contains Communists in "sensitive" areas.

USE OF LOAN FUNDS UNDER RURAL ELECTRIFICATION PROGRAM

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, on August 19, 1958, I submitted in the Senate Senate Resolution 385, to authorize the Committee on the Judiciary to make a full and complete study and investigation of the Comptroller General's holding in a letter to the Secretary of Agriculture dated July 21, 1958—B134138—relating to the use of loan funds under the rural electrification program.

Mr. President, many REA people from the State of North Dakota and other parts of the country were greatly concerned by the Comptroller General's letter to the Secretary of Agriculture, above mentioned, in that it would have greatly curtailed the REA program throughout the United States relating to the use of loan funds under the REA program.

I am happy to advise the Senate that I am joining my colleague, the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], who on Wednesday, January 14, submitted a Senate resolution to make clear beyond any question the intent of the Senate of the United States regarding this matter. The Comptroller General, in his letter to the Secretary of Agriculture of December 8, said he would not attempt to enforce decisions of a nature similar to the Iowa REA loan case in the absence of expression of the intent of Congress.

I am pleased that the distinguished Senator from Vermont placed into the RECORD the analysis of the Comptroller General's opinion, which was the basis for the submission of my resolution, Senate Resolution 385, in the 85th Congress.

TRANSIT SYSTEM IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, on Wednesday, January 14, the distinguished minority leader, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], introduced S. 304, which was cosponsored by Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. YARBOROUGH, Mr. THURMOND, and myself, to insure effective regulation of the D.C. Transit System, Inc., and fair and equal competition between D.C. Transit System, Inc., and its competitors.

I joined the sentiments expressed by the distinguished minority leader when he introduced S. 304, and had I been on the floor at the time, I would also have wished to make some extended remarks pertaining to this problem, which results in the grossly unfair use of the taxpayers' dollars for the subsidization of the D.C. Transit System, Inc., as long as that corporation utilizes its resources to lessen competition in the charter and sightseeing business, and any other free enterprise with which the transit company may wish to compete, when those competing companies do not enjoy the same privileges and exemptions.

For the information of the Members of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two letters to the Public Utilities Commission through its Chairman, the Honorable George E. C. Hayes, dated November 18 and December 4, urging that the Public Utilities Commission assert its own authority in enjoining the D.C. Transit System, Inc., from taking advantage of its competitors by virtue of a franchise granted to it by the Congress of the United States.

It is hoped that the Public Utilities Commission will take its own initiative in this matter, so that the small business people affected by the action of the D.C. Transit Company will be protected from immediate ruin, which has been the result to several competitors of the D.C. Transit System, Inc., in the past several months. I am afraid that by the time this bill is acted upon by the Congress of the United States, several more small businesses competing with the D.C. Transit System will also have been forced to go out of business.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOVEMBER 18, 1958.

Hon. GEORGE E. C. HAYES,
Chairman, Public Utilities Commission, District of Columbia, Municipal Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As ranking minority member of the U.S. Senate Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee, I am very much concerned with the impact on small businessmen in the District of Columbia who compete with the D.C. Transit System, Inc., in charter, sightseeing and Government contract services. It appears from the record in the hearings before the Select Committee on Small Business, House of Representatives, that the D.C. Transit System, Inc., is intertwined in extraneous activities with its monopoly transit operations and going beyond the contemplation of Congress' franchise in the transit companies expansion into collateral ventures financed and operated with the assets and personnel of a company which came to Congress asking for a franchise to operate a transit enterprise.

It would be grossly unfair to use taxpayers' dollars for the subsidization of the D.C. Transit System, Inc., as long as that corporation utilizes its resources to lessen competition in the charter and sightseeing business and any other free enterprise with which the transit company may wish to compete against, when those competing companies do not enjoy the same privileges and exemptions. During the last session of the Congress, Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN, of Texas, introduced H.R. 13767 which bill would prohibit the District of Columbia Transit System, Inc., from using its assets and personnel employed in providing the services of miscellaneous transportation of passengers for hire from being used or employed in whole or in part in any other service in competition with the service of any other company.

I have been advised that the charter and sightseeing small business companies in the District of Columbia are facing extinction if the D.C. Transit System, Inc., is permitted to continue the practices of misusing its privileges and exemptions granted by congressional franchise.

I would appreciate hearing from you as soon as possible if the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia is considering issuing any orders restraining the D.C. Transit System, Inc., from misusing its privileges and exemptions granted by the franchise to the detriment of competing charter and sightseeing companies who do not possess those privileges and exemptions granted by the Congress. I would also appreciate your views on Congressman Patman's bill, H.R. 13767.

With kind regards and every good wish. I am,

Sincerely,

WILLIAM LANGER.

DECEMBER 4, 1958.

Hon. GEORGE E. C. HAYES,
Chairman, Public Utilities Commission, District of Columbia, Municipal Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for your letter of November 20, regarding the problems of D.C. Transit System's competitors, in charter, sightseeing, limousine, and Government contract services.

After reviewing the testimony given at the House Small Business Committee hearings on May 12, 16, and 19, 1958, I am puzzled by the inaction of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia. As you know, the Honorable Robert E. McLaughlin, president, District of Columbia Board of Commissioners, and former Chairman, District of Columbia Public Utilities Commission, testified as follows (House Small Business Committee hearings, pp. 27 and 160):

"Well, sir, I think that they are not likely to have any very strong competition from new companies, and I would even go so far as to say that I think this is quite monopolistic. I think this situation that exists will eventually certainly drive competition out of the field (p. 27).

"I don't know whether counsel would agree with me, but under paragraph 4 of the Public Utilities Commission Act, the Public Utilities Commission may and is charged with requiring public utilities to comply with the laws of the United States applicable to them.

"Now, it seems to me as though since the Public Utilities Commission Act is expressly supposed to be construed in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution and sections of law pursuant to the Constitution as relating to interstate commerce, which of course the antitrust laws are, it seems to me as though the PUC has the jurisdiction to issue orders of the nature of antitrust court orders. I mean issuing orders which would have the effect of restraining D.C. Transit System from actions which are monopolistic in nature" (p. 100).

I note that none of the Public Utilities Commission officials present at the hearings disagreed with the above testimony by President McLaughlin. Hence, I shall appreciate it if you will advise me as to why the Public Utilities Commission has not issued orders which would restrain D.C. Transit System, Inc., from monopolistic actions.

Competitors of D.C. Transit System are being hurt and, unquestionably, their situation will become more acute in the months ahead. Certainly, the Public Utilities Commission need not wait until there is no competition before acting.

The D.C. Transit System, Inc., has announced future development plans that can only serve to eliminate competition and create monopoly conditions in fields other than mass transit in the District of Columbia.

It seems to me that to permit D.C. Transit System's competitive practices in charter and sightseeing makes a mockery of the antitrust laws and other laws which the Congress has enacted to help small business and to preserve our competitive system.

The record indicates that the special privileges accorded the D.C. Transit System, Inc., by the 84th Congress are not the only advantages the corporation possesses. An important advantage is the ability of the corporation to use its personnel, equipment, facilities, financial resources, and maintenance in charter and sightseeing services. Mr. O. Roy Chalk, president, D.C. Transit System, Inc., has stated, "It is not only taxes but our maintenance is lower. We can't help it. Our ability to do lower cost maintenance—that is the basic difference between us." (House Small Business Committee hearings, p. 11.)

In the light of D.C. Transit System's $200,000 loss last year in charter, limousine, and sightseeing services (House Small Business Committee hearings, p. 21), I am not persuaded that the only way the corporation can be healthy is to engage in charter and sightseeing services.

Indeed, it would appear that the D.C. Transit System, Inc., by far the giant in the industry in terms of financial resources, could very easily adjust itself to a withdrawal from competition with charter, sightseeing, and related services.

I am hopeful that the Public Utilities Commision will act promptly on this matter, so that D.C. Transit's competitors will not be subjected to further hardships, with irretrievable loss of opportunities and morale.

With kindest regards, I am,

Sincerely,

WILLIAM LANGER.

BENEFITS TO TAXPAYERS FROM STATE OWNERSHIP OF INDUSTRIES

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, upon several occasions speeches have been made upon the Senate floor against State ownership, and I have always defended the public ownership of State industries in my own State, where they have been outstandingly successful.

The Senate will be interested in learning of the latest attempt by those who would assist the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce and others in "skinning" the North Dakota farmer.

As the sole survivor of the first Industrial Commission of North Dakota, consisting of the Governor, Secretary of Agriculture and Labor, and the Attorney General, I, as the then Attorney General, and later as Governor, am more familiar than is any other person with the history of these State-owned industries and the many millions of dollars they have saved the taxpayers.

Three weeks ago, a State Senator threatened to introduce a bill to sell the State Mill and Elevator. After much publicity, he has now announced he will not introduce the bill, but in the meantime a group headed by the very able and competent Fritz Nelson, of Grand Forks, has announced they will circulate initiating petitions, affecting not only the Mill and Elevator, but also the Bank of North Dakota, the Workmen's Compensation bureau, and the State hail Insurance Department. Today I shall speak only about the Mill and Elevator, and at later times will take up the other three industries, because I want my fellow Senators to be fully aware of the very successful progress North Dakota has made in their operation.

Some of the newspapers opposed to the sale stated that the operation of the mill has been very successful under former Governors Moses, Aandahl, and Brunsdale; that the annual profits were about $350,000 a year. Unfortunately, these newspapers do not tell the full story about the great institution, which was organized, not to make money, but to see to it that the farmers got a fair, honest price for the grain they raised. However, the Mill and Elevator provided protection to the farmers, and at the same time proved to be a great financial success.

Now listen carefully, Senators, because under my administration as Governor of the State, the State Mill and Elevator paid for itself more than 3 times over, and saved the people between $12 million and $14 million, according to A. J. Scott, the former Manager of the Mill and Elevator. Had we not had this State-owned Mill and Elevator, the "grain gamblers" in Minneapolis would have robbed the farmers of at least $12 million, and possibly $14 million, in one of the most daring, crooked, disgraceful attempts ever made to rob an honest people. No one who will read and study what I have to say here will ever sign a petition or vote to close or sell the State-owned Mill and Elevator, and I believe that the people of the State can be trusted to take care politically of those politicians who advocate the selling of this great institution. The folks who advocate the selling of the Mill and Elevator are not friends of the people, but are their enemies, who would sell out the people of North Dakota by permitting the grain trade of Minneapolis to stick their long, slimy, filthy hands into the pockets of the people and rob them.

Now I say to my fellow Senators, here are the facts to hear. On July 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, 1937, while I was Governor, the State was apparently producing one of the finest wheat crops in all its history. During those 5 days we had real hot winds—the wheat was in the milk, and because of the heat, it shriveled, with the result that we, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, only produced 54,984,000 bushels—practically none of it weighing 60 pounds to the bushel. The grain trade in Minneapolis thought that they saw their chance to "pluck" the farmer. During the night, they reduced the price of 37-pound wheat from 89 cents per bushel to 37 cents per bushel, a drop of 52 cents per bushel overnight. This went into effect at 9 o'clock in the morning of July 22, and wheat of other grades dropped accordingly. By 11 o'clock I, as Governor, was at full steam ahead. By telephone I had arranged a meeting at the Waldorf Hotel at Fargo composed of Mr. R. M. Stangler, manager of the Bank of North Dakota; A. J. Scott, Manager of the Mill and Elevator; 2 grainmen from Minneapolis, recommended to me by Gov. Floyd Olson, of Minnesota; 2 men from Canada, recommended to me as grain experts; the 3 members of the Railroad Commission; the Secretary of Agriculture; the Attorney General, and myself as Governor, and also 3 first-class lawyers, Francis Murphy, of Fargo; J. K. Murray, of Bismarck; and the late Harrison A. Bronson, later Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of North Dakota; also an expert radio annouuncer, Irving Wallace, now residing in Mason City, Iowa; and others—23 men in all. We employed scores of men to call from farm to farm to pick up 2-pound samples of heads of wheat from each farm and labeled each sample with the farmer's name. These samples were rushed to the State Mill and Elevator, where each sample was threshed separately and the flour produced from each one of the more than 1,000 samples that had been gathered was used to bake over 1,000 loaves of bread—1 loaf of bread from each sample—by the expert chemist employed by the Mill and Elevator, so that we could arrive definitely at the exact milling value of this shriveled wheat. Within a few days, we knew to the tenth of a penny the milling value of that lightweight wheat.

Acting as promptly as possible, the Industrial Commission, consisting of Pete Sathre as Attorney General, John Hagen as Commissioner of Agriculture and Labor, and myself, raised the price of 37-pound wheat 35 cents a bushel, which I announced over the radio. Shortly thereafter the Bismarck Tribune finally broke the spell of silence of the opposition on the 3d day of August 1937 printing the following on its front page:

NORTH DAKOTA MILL OFFERS TO BUY WHEAT OF LIGHTER WEIGHTS—INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION SEEKING TO RAISE PRICE BASED ON JULY 26 RANGE

Beginning today the North Dakota mill and elevator at Grand Forks offers to buy all lightweight wheat produced by the farmers of North Dakota, Gov. William Langer, speaking for the industrial commission, announced Monday night.

Declaring it is the purpose of the industrial commission "to checkmate the grain gamblers who dropped the price of 37-pound wheat 52 cents in 24 hours," Governor Langer asserted the commission has secured storage space in Duluth, Minneapolis, and Grand Forks, sufficient to handle every bushel of lightweight wheat produced in North Dakota.

"Through the Bank of North Dakota we have arranged for millions of dollars of credit. We can buy every bushel of lightweight wheat in North Dakota and pay cash for it. We want the wheat unless the grain market will pay the farmers what it is worth." Producers of other States were barred, the Governor said.

SEEKS HONEST PRICE

The Governor declared that the commission had no fight with any other elevator in North Dakota, but that it is determined to obtain "an honest price, a price that means the difference as to whether thousands of North Dakota farmers will be able to support themselves or whether they will again be forced to go on relief. That honest price will mean the difference as to whether or not the farmers will pay their debts to the businessmen."

"Beginning today," the Governor said, "the prices of lightweight wheat being paid by the State mill and elevator will be announced daily over KFYR at 2 p.m.

"Our whole object is to compel the local elevators to pay the farmers what their wheat is actually and honestly worth," the Governor asserted. "If they won't pay it, the North Dakota mill and elevator will."

ASKS FOR SAMPLES

The Governor invited all producers of lightweight wheat to send samples to the State mill and elevator to determine the amount of protein it contains. He specified that not less than a 2-pound sample be dispatched and states that the mill will wire the weight upon request.

The chief executive stated daily prices will be based on the card prices offered on the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, July 26.

He said, "We will raise the price of 37-pound wheat 35 cents a bushel; 38-pound wheat 32 cents a bushel; and so on up the scale. The increase in prices on 37-pound wheat will be 35 cents a bushel more than was offered by the grain combine July 26; 38-pound wheat 32 cents more; 39-pound wheat 29 cents more and so on."

The prices paid by the State mill, the Governor explained, are based on carload lots. He advised farmers with less than carload lots to pool with their neighbors and to wire A. J. Scott, manager of the mill, for shipping instructions.

STORAGE SPECIFIED

In the case of farmers with less than carload lots who are unable to pool with other farmers, the Governor directed that they should store the grain in local elevators and obtain a storage ticket which specifies the weight of the wheat stored.

The Governor asserted the State railroad commission has instructed all elevators to mark the weights on storage tickets, and he further declared that the commission has obtained lower freight rates to the mill and elevator.

"Get your storage ticket when you haul your grain in and mail it to the State mill and elevator. We will take out the handling charges and a draft will be sent you immediately upon receipt of the storage ticket. If the grain is mortgaged, the lien will be protected."

Mr. President, the action of the Industrial Commission produced instantaneous results. The very next day, after we made the announcement over the radio, the elevators at West Fargo raised their price of 37-pound wheat by paying 36 cents a bushel more than the day before. That year the wheat crop amounted to 54,984,000 bushels, according to U.S. Department of Agriculture, so that anyone can see that the wheat farmers' benefit, as Mr. Scott said, amounted to somewhere between 12 and 14 millions of dollars, or three times more than the Mill and Elevator had cost the taxpayers to build.

Fellow Senators, we only had to buy a little over a million bushels of wheat and one of the most pleasant incidents of this fight to get the farmer a fair price was when I received a long distance telephone call from Shreve Archer of the Midland Grain Co., of Minneapolis. He approved of the action and said, "you are dead right in what you are doing and I am offering to loan you $3 million at 3 percent in case you are short of money."

I told Mr. Archer that we were well financed by another State industry, the Bank of North Dakota, and we could buy the entire State crop if necessary. He concluded by saying, "well, if you need this $3 million and even 5 or 6 million, let me know."

For 2 months the price was kept up by daily announcements over the radio furnished by the State Mill and Elevator but within 24 hours the grain trade had met the price of the Mill and Elevator and were paying 1 cent more per bushel than was the Industrial Commission.

Now, fellow Senators, the construction of the mill cost the taxpayers $3 million, and at the same time bonds in the sum of $1½ million were issued for operating expenses—a total of $4½ million. These bonds have been paid.

In addition to that, we have constantly improved the Mill and Elevator by erection of new buildings and other improvements in the amount of about $3 million. Out of the profits made by the Mill and Elevator we have paid $500,000 for World War II soldier bonuses; $500,000 for Korean soldier bonuses; $500,000 to the State highway fund; $500,000 to the State general fund; or a total of $2 million. From the above, you will note that the State has an immensely valuable investment in the State Mill and Elevator, and anyone who has been acquainted with this operation knows that Mr. Robert Stangler, whom I as Governor, induced to take over the management, first, of the Bank of North Dakota and who was later transferred to the Mill and Elevator, did an outstanding job, helped by his assistants, P. R. Fossen and Carl Lewis, making it one of the finest elevator mills in the Northwest—well equipped with the most up-to-date modern machinery. It is constantly striving to make more and better products for the people of the State, and lately has done an outstanding job in getting the very finest kind of fertilizer at the lowest price for the farmers.

This is one of the State industries that some of the politicians want to sell or close up or get rid of for the benefit of the grain trade in the twin cities. The facts I have mentioned above are unanswerable because they are proven facts.

I repeat that in 1937, the mill paid for itself three times over what it cost the taxpayers, and everyone ought to know that if the Mill and Elevator should be closed or sold, the farmers will be at the mercy of the grain trade and speculators in case we again have conditions like we had in 1937.

By the way, may I at this time thank the Congress of the United States for its good assistance through the years in building Fort Peck and Garrison Dams. They were erected not only to control the Missouri River for navigation and irrigation and other purposes, but those dams were built also for the purpose of furnishing cheap electric power to the people of the State, including cities and towns.

Less than 10 days ago, Assistant Secretary of Interior, Mr. Aandahl, allocated sufficient power so that the city of Mandan—provided the people of Mandan voted for it—could own and operate its own municipal light plant as they already do their own water plant. This can only be done in case the people of Mandan vote at an election to be held before March 1, voting to have this city own its own municipal light and power plant. Naturally, I fervently hope that the overwhelming majority of the people of Mandan will realize that by voting "Yes" they will save the people of Mandan thousands upon thousands of dollars and, as years go by, pay for their plant. The history of the municipal light plants at Valley City, which has operated its own municipal plant for over 30 years, and other towns, has proved that it is a step in the right direction for the people of Mandan to take, and I know that my fellow Senators will be interested in the outcome of that election too.

Again I want to thank the Senators for what they have done for the people, not only of Montana and North Dakota, by the building of the Fort Peck and Garrison Dams, but for the great effect they will have upon securing cheap electric power in the other States in the Missouri River Basin. And I conclude by saying again, "Don't be fooled, operation of State industries is very successful for taxpayers."

I wish to personally thank Sophus Trom, a member of the North Dakota Legislature, and Frank Woell, Mayor of Casselton, for taking leading parts against the sale of the Mill and Elevator. As eternal vigilance is necessary, I express the hope that someone in every voting precinct in the State will write me offering to be a member of the permanent statewide committee, which will charge no dues, but simply organize to make the voters aware and fortify to fight whenever in the years to come another attempt may be made to wreck any of the State-owned industries. Just write me—WILLIAM LANGER, Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DISCONTINUANCE OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS TESTS

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief report to the Senate upon my observations and suggestions as a Senate adviser to the U.S. delegation to negotiate with delegates of the United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the question of discontinuance of nuclear weapons tests.

In addition, I shall make reference to certain events that have transpired since my return from the Geneva conference and certain suggestions which I hope may prove helpful.

Upon returning from Geneva, I reported to President Eisenhower, to the majority leader, to the chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, and to the American people a conviction on my part that the Russian delegation was seeking to pressure the United States and the United Kingdom into an agreement to stop all nuclear tests, without Russian acceptance of adequate inspection to detect violation of the agreement, and that, failing in this, they would seek to place upon the United States blame for failure of the conference. I suggested that success by the Soviets in either of these respects would be detrimental to the interests of the United States.

I directed attention to the uncertain, cumbersome, if not entirely impractical, system of inspection and detection under consideration at Geneva. The uncertainty of detecting and identifying underground nuclear explosions has now been acknowledged by the President's committee of experts.

In the Geneva Conference on nuclear tests, still under way, two major security essentials are involved: First, the military strength of the West, particularly the United States, as compared with the Communist, and second the moral position and political posture of the United States, increasingly affected by world public opinion. These are inseparable, and essential parts of our national security.

I am apprehensive that the conference will break up in failure and that blame for this failure will be assessed largely to the United States. My apprehension arises out of an awareness of the Soviet's capacity for propaganda and because of the impractical and unreliable system of detection and inspection for underground tests proposed by the conference of experts, which the Russians have shown no sign of accepting. Not only have they shown no sign of accepting the proposed system, now clearly demonstrated to be inadequate, but they have refused even to discuss and give conference consideration to the new data with which the United States Government has supplied the Geneva conferees. Moreover, there is no proposal or practical plan to place inspection stations and teams in Red China, without which no system of inspection would be adequate to detect violations of an agreement against underground testing.

I say, therefore, that blame for failure of the conference, if such failure occurs, will fairly belong and should be squarely placed upon the Russians for their intransigence and steadfast refusal to accept, or, more recently, even to consider, effective and adequate means of inspection and control to detect violations of an agreement.

The assessment of blame, however, is a game at which both sides can and will play. The Russians, we must admit, have long demonstrated a remarkable facility for propaganda. Moreover, the conference was initiated by the President of the United States. Therefore, the United States cannot be disassociated from either the success or failure of the conference.

It has been my hope that the United States could save the conference from failure and significantly improve its own moral and political position by proposing to stop all atmospheric tests. Sizable nuclear detonations in the atmosphere are subject to detection by existing means and installations. It is from the atmospheric explosions, moreover, that radioactive fallout and contamination occur.

A consideration of this proposal requires an acknowledgment that our country has been severely blamed in world opinion for contaminating the world's atmosphere. We have suffered more than is our due in this regard. Here, too, the Russians have been adept. The health hazard involved may or may not be as hazardous as a large body of world opinion regards it. I do not know, but undeniably it is a matter of deep and worldwide concern.

I believe that we could go a long way toward squaring ourselves in world public opinion in this regard, by not only demonstrating a willingness to stop further contamination of the air all must breathe, but by actually doing so. I suggested to President Eisenhower that he take the lead in stopping such radioactive contamination by a stoppage, unilaterally, if necessary, of all atmospheric tests for a given period, say, 3 years, and that he offer to enter into binding treaty obligations with the British and the Russians to make the stoppage permanent.

It is with pleasure that I acknowledge a most cordial reception of my suggestions by President Eisenhower. Moreover, my suggestions have had full consideration. For this I am grateful.

Since my conference with the President, however, two events—findings of fact on detection methods from the Hardtack II test series and the demonstration of interplanetary propulsion and telemetering capability by Russian technicians—have strongly tended to confirm my position. Moreover, the very introduction of the new data on detection tends to increase the possibility, I believe, that the Russians would succeed in attaching major blame upon the United States for failure of the conference.

Therefore, I suggest to the President even further consideration of my suggestions, as a means of saving the conference from failure.

Failure of the conference is by no means the only danger which lurks around these negotiations. There is the danger of an improvident agreement.

Should our Government sign an unwise and improvident agreement, we would face the danger of ratification by the Senate or the danger of rejection by the Senate, with far-reaching consequences in either instance.

I think we can take encouragement from President Eisenhower's state of the Union message of only last week that no improvident treaty will be signed. I trust this is the case. At least I am sure this is the intention and will of our Government. Moreover, I think it is the will of the American people, who have been conditioned for 12 years to the requirement of adequate inspection to assure the effectiveness of nuclear weapons agreements.

The conference of experts from the United States, Great Britain, and Russia, the report of which preceded and served as a foundation for the present Geneva Conference, did not even consider means of detecting nuclear explosions in interplanetary space. The lack of knowledge of this subject matter was the reason given for lack of consideration. Knowledge in this field is still insufficient to justify an agreement. Indeed, if technical experts are unable to agree even upon a statement of scientific fact in this field, political agreement would seem now entirely inadvisable. The paucity of our own knowledge in this field, as well as its potential importance, is illustrated by Russia's so-called lunik satellite and by some of the results of our own high-altitude tests. I refer particularly to ionospheric and radar disturbance from a high-altitude nuclear explosion in one instance, and to the retina burns to the eyes of rabbits which were used for the purpose of determining such effects from high-altitude explosions in another. The specifics of these tests and experiments are classified, but the fact that such experiments and tests were conducted, with consequent results, is, as I understand it, unclassified information.

The bearing and meaning that these limited test results may have upon our dependence upon the DEW line installations for early detection and warning against missile attack, upon our antimissile program, and upon other important phases of national security and peaceful uses of outer space, are both challenging and uncertain.

For these and many more reasons, Mr. President, I have suggested to President Eisenhower that our country seize the initiative and take "one successful major first step" which I think "might very well lead to others." This is an achievable goal, now, I believe. The United States could show that it is willing to stop—that it will stop—that, indeed, it has stopped contaminating the world's atmosphere. Thereafter, any other nation that refuses to do so must bear the full blame for her act.

After this major first step, the Geneva Conference could proceed to negotiate for the discontinuance of other types of nuclear-weapons tests and to negotiate as an integral, necessary part thereof an adequate system of inspection and control.

It is better to achieve an important first step, though limited, than to face the consequences of either failure of the conference or the signing of an improvident agreement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I desire to commend the very able Senator from Tennessee for the constructive and enlightening statement he has made. For many years the Senator rendered outstanding service on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, as a Member of the House of Representatives. Since becoming a Member of the Senate he has always been in the forefront of all discussions and deliberations in that field. I am delighted the Senator has seen fit to accept assignment to the most recent important conference which has been held on the subject. I know that each of his colleagues will welcome, as I do, the enlightening statement he has just made to the Senate and to the country.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to my friend from Kansas.

Mr. CARLSON. I should like to state, as a Member of the minority side of the Senate, that I appreciate very much the splendid information and report which the distinguished Senator from Tennessee has presented with respect to the important conference being held at Geneva. I think it is one of the important programs which must be worked out among the countries of the world before we can begin to have a reduction of armaments. The question of effective and adequate inspection is one which is under study at Geneva, and I sincerely hope and trust something can be worked out which will be helpful in the future.

I thank the Senator.

ADJOURNMENT TO TUESDAY

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, if none of my colleagues desires to address the Senate at this time, pursuant to the order previously entered I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, under the order previously entered, until Tuesday, January 20, 1959, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 17, 1959:

The following-named persons, who were appointed during the last recess of the Senate, to the positions indicated:

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

Lewis L. Strauss, of New York, to be Secretary of Commerce.

FEDERAL AVIATION AGENCY

Elwood R. Quesada, of California, to be Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency.

James Tolman Pyle, of Maryland, to be Deputy Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency.

UNDER SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

Frederick Henry Mueller, of Michigan, to be Under Secretary of Commerce.

John J. Allen, Jr., of California, to be Under Secretary of Commerce for Transportation.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

Carl F. Oechsle, of Massachusetts, to be an Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

SUPREME COURT

Potter Stewart, of Ohio, to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

U.S. DISTRICT JUDGES

J. Smith Henley, of Arkansas, to be U.S. district judge for the eastern district of Arkansas.

Edwin A. Robson, of Illinois, to be U.S. district judge for the northern district of Illinois.

George L. Hart, Jr., of the District of Columbia, to be U.S. district judge for the District of Columbia.

Eugene R. Gilmartin, of Rhode Island, to be judge for the district court of Guam for a term of 8 years.

Walter A. Gordon, of California, to be judge of the district court for the Virgin Islands for a term of 8 years.

U.S. ATTORNEY

Dale M. Green, of Washington, to be U.S. attorney for the eastern district of Washington for a term of 4 years.

U.S. PATENT OFFICE

The following-named persons to be Examiners in Chief, U.S. Patent Office:

James L. Brewrink, of Maryland.
Malcolm F. Bailey, of Maryland.
James E. Keely, of Maryland.
Joseph C. Manian, of Maryland.

STATE DEPARTMENT

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE

Livingston T. Merchant, of the District of Columbia, to be an Assistant Secretary of State.

AMBASSADORS EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY

C. Burke Elbrick, of Kentucky, a Foreign Service officer of the class of career minister, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Portugal.

James C. H. Bonbright, of New York, a Foreign Service officer of the class of career minister, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Sweden.

Richard B. Wigglesworth, of Massachusetts, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Canada.

John D. Jernegan, of California, a Foreign Service officer of class 1, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Iraq.

SPECIAL ASSISTANT FOR MUTUAL SECURITY COORDINATION, DEPARTMENT OF STATE

John O. Bell, of Maryland, to be Special Assistant for Mutual Security Coordination in the Department of State.

CHAIRMAN OF THE INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT ADVISORY BOARD, DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Harry A. Bullis, of Minnesota, to be Chairman of the International Development Advisory Board for a term of 2 years.

DEPUTY DIRECTOR OF INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION, DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Leonard J. Saccio, of Connecticut, to be Deputy Director of the International Cooperation Administration in the Department of State.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

UNDER SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

Elmer F. Bennett, of Colorado, to be Under Secretary of the Interior.

SOLICITOR FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

George W. Abbott, of Nebraska, to be Solicitor for the Department of the Interior.

HAWAII

SECRETARY OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII

Edward Elliott Johnston, of Hawaii, to be Secretary of the Territory of Hawaii for a term of 4 years.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

DIRECTOR OF DEFENSE RESEARCH ENGINEERING

Herbert Frank York, of California, to be Director of Defense Research Engineering.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

T. Graydon Upton, of Pennsylvania, to be an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE

Dana Latham, of California, to be Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

COMPTROLLER OF CUSTOMS

Donald A. Maginnis, Jr., of Louisiana, to be Comptroller of Customs with headquarters at New Orleans for a term of 4 years.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE AND MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Clarence Ludlow Miller, of Kentucky, to be an Assistant Secretary of Agriculture and to be a member of the Board of Directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF LABOR

George C. Lodge, of Massachusetts, to be an Assistant Secretary of Labor.

NATIONAL LIBRARY OF MEDICINE

Eugenie Mary Davie, of New York, to be a member of the Board of Regents of the National Library of Medicine, Public Health Service, for a term expiring August 3, 1962.

COUNCIL OF ECONOMIC ADVISERS

Karl Brandt, of California, to be a member of the Council of Economic Advisers.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

T. Graydon Upton, of Pennsylvania, to be U.S. Executive Director of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development for a term of 2 years.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSIONER

Maj. Gen. Keith R. Barney, U.S. Army, to be a member of the Mississippi River Commission.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

Lampton Berry, of Mississippi, a Foreign Service officer of class 1, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Ceylon, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate.

The following-named persons, who were appointed during the last recess of the Senate, to the offices indicated:

For promotion from Foreign Service officers of class 1 to the class of career minister:

Howard P. Jones, of Maryland.
Rolland Welch, of Texas.

Now Foreign Service officers of class 2 and secretaries in the diplomatic service, to be also consuls general of the United States of America:

Robert S. Folsom, of Massachusetts.
Aubrey E. Lippincott, of Arizona.
George F. Wilson, of California.

For appointment as Foreign Service officers of class 2, consuls, and secretaries in the diplomatic service of the United States of America:

Merrill M. Hammond, of Virginia.
L. Wade Lathram, of Virginia.

For appointment as a Foreign Service officer of class 3, a consul, and a secretary in the diplomatic service of the United States of America:

Joe Adams Robinson, of Oklahoma.

For appointment as a Foreign Service officer of class 4, a consul, and a secretary in the diplomatic service of the United States of America:

Charles S. Whitehouse, of Rhode Island.

Now a Foreign Service officer of class 6 and a secretary in the diplomatic service, to be also a consul of the United States of America:

Theodore J. C. Heavner, of Ohio.

For appointment as a Foreign Service officer of class 6, a vice consul of career, and a secretary in the diplomatic service of the United States of America:

Mrs. Roberta B. Bullock, of Texas.

For appointment as Foreign Service officers of class 7, vice consuls of career, and secretaries in the diplomatic service of the United States of America:

Mrs. Lorraine P. Bruun, of Illinois.
Vernon D. McAninch, of Texas.

For appointment as Foreign Service officers of class 8, vice consuls of career, and secretaries in the diplomatic service of the United States of America:

Jerry P. Baugh, of Indiana.
Felix S. Bloch, of New York.
Charles W. Bray III, of Texas.
M. Lyall Breckon, of Oregon.
David P. Chandler, of New York.
Albert N. DeMott, of New York.
Thomas O. Enders, of Connecticut.
Richard W. Faville, Jr., of Oregon.
John A. Ferch, of Ohio.

Miss Melissa E. Foelsch, of California.
Alec L. France, of Ohio.
Albert A. Francis, of California.
Sidney Friedland, of Wisconsin.
John A. Froebe, Jr., of Ohio.
Philip H. Gray, Jr., of Vermont.
Frank J. Haendler, of Illinois.
Samuel F. Hart, of Mississippi.
Louis E. Kahn, of California.
Andrew R. Kay, Jr., of New York.
Donald Kreisberg, of New York.
Hugh C. Lobit, of Texas.
Hallock R. Lucius, of Montana.
Gifford D. Malone, of New York.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Address by Hon. Thomas H. Kuchel, of California, Before National Conference on Air Pollution

OF
HON. THOMAS H. KUCHEL
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Saturday, January 17, 1959

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an address entitled "Public Interest Demands Clean Air," which I delivered before the plenary session of the National Conference of Air Pollution, Sheraton-Park Hotel, Washington, D.C., on November 18, 1958.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PUBLIC INTEREST DEMANDS CLEAN AIR

(Speech of U.S. Senator THOMAS H. KUCHEL before the plenary session of the National Conference on Air Pollution, November 18, 1958, Washington, D.C.)

Several recent days of intense personal discomfort in a choking atmosphere which sometimes envelops Los Angeles make me intensely aware of the deep importance of this conference.

So, as a recently escaped smog refugee, I welcome this opportunity to engage in thinking out loud on the matter of the public interest in air pollution. I appreciate the invitation to present some personal reflections to this assembly because of the inescapable fact that the communities in which I have spent most of my entire life often are painfully plagued by contaminated air in its worst form.

This conference is unmistakably a significant event. Scientific and technical problems of great moment will be discussed and examined in the earnest hope, I am sure, of promoting the public interest and serving the public welfare.

There is no question in my mind that public interest is the overriding consideration which must be the goal of all efforts to overcome the curse of air pollution. Certainly there can be no private interest, especially from a pecuniary viewpoint, in prolonging smog and other atmospheric contamination.

All of you present are aware that this meeting is occasioned by the fact that a little more than 3 years ago the Congress enacted legislation known as Public Law 159, the Air Pollution Research Act. By that measure, the Federal Government entered the fight to identify causes of air pollution and an assortment of Federal agencies became allies of public and private, State and local bodies endeavoring to conquer this public enemy.

The enactment of this legislation was no simple accomplishment.

Unfortunately, for a number of years, smog was regarded as a unique Los Angeles phenomenon. Comedians attached to it a made-in-southern-California label.

With the passage of time, and after the laughs became strained, our Nation gradually and thankfully came to the realization that air pollution is one of the distinguishing, built-in, undesirable features of the growth and advancement which our country has been enjoying.

The progress of all agencies operating under the Air Pollution Research Act is of deep concern to me because I authored that act. The conclusions of this conference will be equally meaningful to me because my interest in removing this curse of our industrialized, motorized civilization is of long duration.

When I first came to Washington as a new Senator appointed by the then-Governor of California, Chief Justice Earl Warren, I early attempted to bring about Federal participation in the fight to eliminate smog. I did this because my experiences as a State official indicated plainly the problem has so many ramifications it must be attacked on a nationwide basis.

Personal exposure to the discomfort and the inconvenience from day-long sieges of greasy, eye-irritating murk encountered in Los Angeles undoubtedly has strengthened the determination of many of you here today—as it did me—to employ all of the resources of our great Nation in eradicating a scourge which menaces the physical health and well-being of millions of Americans, which causes vegetables and fruits to wilt and shrivel, which brings property deterioration, which adversely affects livestock, and which triggers a host of economic consequences.

The public interest in air pollution at that time was not so widely appreciated in Washington as to bring success to the first efforts in which I participated. Happily, however, the public interest had attracted the attention of people in the executive branch of our Government. It was a matter of considerable satisfaction to me, therefore, when President Eisenhower, in response to a suggestion I made in association with my colleague Senator HOMER CAPEHART, of Indiana, formed what carried the formidable label of "Ad Hoc Interdepartmental Committee on Community Air Pollution."

Even though smog still occurs, millions of people should be eternally grateful for that committee, because from its deliberations resulted the legislation which I introduced, with the cosponsorship of several Senate colleagues from divergent areas who agreed something must be done.

Underlying all of my thinking and my conversations was a conviction that actual control over air-pollution sources and causes was and must be a local and a State responsibility. This view was shared by all of those who took part in framing and pushing through the Air Pollution Research Act. Throughout, the principle has been observed that the Federal Government should not and cannot impose or enforce regulations designed to prevent air pollution, regardless of how desirable such activity might at times appear.

Yet, the Federal Government has a natural and a proper role in our national war against smog and other forms of atmospheric pollution. It has unequaled resources and unmatched experience in the field of meteorology, for instance. It has immediate access to basic statistics assembled from every corner of our country on health conditions. It is in an unmatched position to coordinate investigation and research. It can mobilize from assorted sources skilled scientific and engineering personnel.

Those are among the reasons I wanted the Federal Government to play an active part in the smog fight. Those are the reasons why I am prepared to introduce next year new legislation which will implement, extend, and carry forward Public Law 159 under which present work is carried on.

As a Californian from a semiarid region, I long have been aware of the precious character and the imperative necessity of adequate water supplies. As a human being, I likewise know that clean air is basic to existence, comfort, and happiness. As a southern Californian I also realize that my section of the country, unfortunately, has encountered serious and prolonged difficulty in assuring itself of a sufficient, reliable supply of both clean air and clean water.

Those grave needs are not peculiar to California. Today they are nationwide in scope. With constant and steady increase in our population, with characteristic continuing movement of people, with development of an economy almost wholly dependent upon industrialization and motorization, the public interest demands basic factfinding which will make possible sound measures to conserve and to prevent pollution of air and water alike.

Regretably, despite startling achievements and amazing discoveries, science has not yet found a way to purify air in quantities or with the ease with which we do water. We must reduce and, to the maximum possible, prevent contamination of our atmosphere.

When a room becomes smoke-filled, one generally can open a window or turn on a blower. But no one yet has come up with a means of lifting a veritable ceiling over an entire metropolitan area which would be the only way of ventilating a community filled with smog of the sort which occasionally plagues many American cities. We still do not know how to sweep away what meteorologists call inversion layers of superheated air which serve as a lid over our steaming kettle of closely packed people.

The lack of a window to bring in sweet, fresh air to whole communities is the justification for control measures such as have been adopted in several regions of California. Such regulatory procedures have a palliative effect and have been evolved through costly and painly trial-and-error approaches. In many instances, they have been remarkably successful. Yet, they have not solved the problem because the problem itself is so complex.

Unfortunately, a permanent solution apparently still is some distance off. Hence, the significance of this conference.

Congress will be guided by the conclusions of this meeting. Our committees will be indebted for your evaluation of the progress made thus far, for your criticisms and your recommendations about the future course to be followed.

We on Capitol Hill are highly conscious that our people want relief from the curse and the menace of air pollution. Daily it is made plain to us that the human stake in this fight is great, because of the tremendous price our Nation may pay for continued contamination of the air all of us breathe, every moment of our lives.

The American people have been disturbed by reports of qualified medical observers that air pollution has harmful effects on persons with respiratory troubles. Is it any wonder there also is grave concern among our populace which repeatedly undergoes irritations of eyes, nose, and throats?

From many quarters comes evidence that smog causes slums and upsets the balance of communities. Foul, polluted air influences our citizens in building homes and selecting places to dwell.

The public interest in the war on air pollution has reached the point where monetary, selfish aspects cannot be ignored. Take, for instance, the situation in Los Angeles County where constituted authority can order a shutdown of industry and a cessation of motor traffic when smog reaches a specified degree of intensity.

The cost of such countermeasures are incalculable, but they are beyond question tremendous. Businesses and industries, particularly small enterprises, cannot long afford to absorb the expense entailed by drastic action to curb pollution of our air. Yet, until we learn the secrets of what causes smog, we are merely fumbling in our attempts to prevent its occurrence.

Even though periodic shutdowns because of "smog alerts" may be infrequent or brief, a community which gains the reputation of being afflicted by serious air pollution inevitably loses its appeal to tourists and visitors. Unchecked continuance of atmospheric contamination undeniably and eventually will halt the growth and progress of any community as surely as a Chinese wall around its perimeter.

The urgency of identifying every single source of pollution and of laying bare all secrets about the mystic natural forces which cause smog is emphasized by the fact that effects of contamination can be and often are far reaching. Counties surrounding heavily populated cities are not immune since the vagaries of the winds can roll clouds of fumes across man-made boundaries. Contiguous territory from which come food supplies no longer is unconcerned following discovery that some 40-odd separate crops can be injured by polluted air.

Problems of such character cannot be solved at local levels. Nor can public agencies of Government—whether State, Federal, county, or municipal—cope with all the factors. Active cooperation of industries and private organizations is essential.

We are fortunate indeed that some of our leading enterprises, notably the petroleum and the automobile industries recognize the serious implications in the presence of air pollution. Their efforts to help check the menace have been substantial and are most commendable. Yet, they and others with related interests continue to have a public obligation to work unceasingly in the public interest in finding means by which aerial garbage will be eliminated from our environment.

For their own welfare, the petroleum and automobile industries cannot shirk their responsibility. Already public clamor has been heard in some quarters for action on the part of constituted authority which would have heavy consequences to those industries. Though scientists may scoff, none of us should lightly regard a wave of suggestions that certain types of motor fuels be prohibited by ordinance or regulation. We cannot overlook the resolutions now reaching Washington urging Federal promulgation of standards governing the emission of hydrocarbons and other products of combustion.

The program envisioned when Public Law 159 was enacted was to be of 5 years' duration. The authorized total expenditure was to be $25 million. Our Federal agencies now are in the fourth year of that program, for which the Congress has appropriated almost $12 million. A host of research and investigation projects has been set in motion.

This law expires at the end of fiscal year 1960. Hence, it will be incumbent upon the Congress in its forthcoming session to decide whether activities should be halted or the law extended. For my part, I am convinced the act which I sponsored should be continued in effect, and I wonder if possibly it should not be broadened.

I regret that more funds have not been made available. However, there were forceful reasons and circumstances for limiting the appropriations. But our people, especially those who undergo from time to time the irritation and inconvenience of smog occurrences, now and then wonder whether the expenditure has been sufficient. Others question whether it has been worthwhile.

It is difficult for the man in the street to appreciate the proportions and the complexity of the air pollution problem. This conference has a rare opportunity to reassure every citizen that we are expanding our knowledge and that we are pressing forward for his relief with undiminished determination.

This is vital, because the people of America, from the earliest moment of comprehension, believe in free air.

More and more, it is being demonstrated that freeness is relative.

Just as we have seen water supplies in various regions near the point of exhaustion, so must we awaken to the fact that our supply of pure air is in real danger of running out.

Public apprehension about effects of radioactive fallout—notably about what might happen when and if—has been expressed often in dramatic fashion. Yet the insidious influence of air pollution right now is a present and a continuing threat to physical and economic health.

Air is a natural resource and like all natural resources must be husbanded and conserved with all the ingenuity and determination we possess.

Public and private agencies join hands to solve the increasingly acute water problem. Local irrigation districts participate with the Federal Government in building dams and reclamation projects. Our Department of the Interior shortly will embark on an ambitious program of erecting full-scale field-test plants for converting saline water to sweet, potable supplies for municipal, agricultural, and industrial uses.

The problem of air pollution is of comparable importance and warrants similar earnest mutual attention. Perhaps it should receive a higher priority. For, without fresh, uncontaminated air, people will not congregate or remain in thickly settled communities. In that event, the demand for ever-larger water supplies might easily be altered.

The foundation for future growth and development of many American communities may well rest on solution of the smog problem. Suggestions already have been thrown out that air zoning be undertaken. This would attempt to make certain that industrial expansion—vital and welcome as it may be—is so directed as to take advantage of prevailing winds or features of terrain in reducing potential air pollution.

Likewise, the public stake in cleansing our atmosphere may warrant radical innovations in traffic engineering. Admittedly, our Nation as a whole, and most of its major cities, confronts real headaches in constructing and rebuilding streets, highways, freeways, and other arteries to handle the furiously mounting traffic volume. But unless other means can be found to control the way mechanical horses emit foul-smelling breaths, it is conceivable that we one day will ask engineers to channel fume-spouting automobiles, buses, and trucks away from smog-prone centers.

The obvious public interest in relieving air pollution appears to be multifaced. In promoting that interest, I sincerely trust this conference will be dedicated to the principle of pooling resources in the traditional American fashion so that the public welfare may be benefited to the greatest degree of which we are capable.

Address by Hon. Jennings Randolph, of West Virginia, Before American Federation of Government Employees

OF

HON. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, January 17, 1959

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, our colleague, the distinguished senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] last evening, Friday, January 16, 1959, addressed the annual civil service banquet of the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL–CIO, at the Norfolk Naval Shipyard, in Portsmouth, Va. His address was delivered on the occasion of the 76th anniversary of the signing of the Pendleton Act, the Civil Service Act.

The distinguished Senator from West Virginia formerly was chairman of the House Committee on Civil Service and has a splendid record in support of the civil service and merit system.

I commend to the reading of all Senators this splendid address. The Senator from West Virginia has traced the history of the development of the Civil Service Act and has set before us a challenge in terms of improvement of the civil service.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the address delivered by the Senator from West Virginia be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS BY U.S. SENATOR JENNINGS RANDOLPH, DEMOCRAT, OF WEST VIRGINIA, AT ANNUAL CIVIL SERVICE BANQUET, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES, AFL–CIO, PORTSMOUTH, VA., FRIDAY, JANUARY 16, 1959, ON THE OCCASION OF THE 76TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SIGNING OF THE PENDLETON (CIVIL SERVICE) ACT

It seems fitting to me, ladies and gentlemen, on this occasion of the 76th anniversary of the Pendleton Act, to present a brief consideration to the context out of which the act emerged—as well as the historical development of the Federal service—and thereby attempt to gain some view of the tendencies and needs of the future.

Now I do not intend merely to catalog the milestones in the advancement of the Federal service, important though such achievement may be.

I am concerned, rather, with the pattern of development and the relation of the career Federal service to the other branches within our structure of government. One might argue with considerable force that the civil service, which has grown from a few thousand people in 1883 to approximately 2½ million in 1959, has assumed the proportions of a fourth branch of the Government, equal in importance—if not in constitutional status—to the traditional branches of the executive, the legislative, and the judiciary.

It behooves us, therefore, to pause occasionally—amid our concern for the multitude of details of classification, efficiency ratings, retirement plans, health insurance, and others—and give thought to the overall condition of the civil service.

In this respect, it is worth noting—as Professor Van Riper has remarked in his "History of the U.S. Civil Service"—that the original reform movement which brought forth the Pendleton Act was animated by the desire to maintain individual liberty of opportunity in the Federal service.

Such men as Carl Shurz, John Jay, and Richard Henry Dana, among others, were strongly moved by John Stuart Mills' doctrine of liberty and by the denial of that doctrine in the spoils system of the Grant administration.

The fervor of this movement is aptly expressed in the concluding statement of the first report of the Civil Service Commission by George William Curtis in 1871, when he stated that "the improvement of the civil service is emphatically the people's case, the people's reform, and the administration which vigorously begins it will acquire a glory only less than that of the salvation of the Union."

However, this reform was not to be won by rhetoric alone. Another decade of a predatory and acquisitive spoils system and the assassination of a President were required before a merit system would be inaugurated. It is worth observing, in passing, that although the classified civil service has grown from coverage of only 10 percent of 140,000 employees in 1883 to 85 percent of approximately 2½ million employees today, the Pendleton Act has remained without any fundamental changes.

But just as the act itself was a long time in arriving, so have further improvements in the civil service been characterized by obstructionism and delay.

For example, from 1883 to the expansion of Federal activities in World War I, there existed no coherent pay-classification system in the Federal service, while the pay of Government clerks remained stationary from 1854 to 1916. And yet the New York Evening Post, at the turn of the century, editorialized that Government employees "average to receive twice as much, on a conservative estimate, as persons similarly employed on the outside world." That sounds familiar; doesn't it?

Not until 1923—40 years after passage of the Pendleton Act—was there any further basic legislation to improve the condition of the civil service. This came in the so-called Classification Act of 1923, which covered barely 10 percent of the total employees.

One could well ask: Why, in a democracy, do we handle the needs of our Federal service in such a casual and dilatory manner? Although we might find the explanation in the times, for example, in the belief then that the business of America is business or in the lack of concern on the part of the individual Chief Executives, or in the opposition by such men as Senator Smoot, the cause, I believe, lies deeper than any of these. It is to be found in the popular American attitude which places service in government in a lower category than private endeavor. Surely this is an incongruous and anomalous condition for a democratic society, the development and even the survival of which depends so heavily upon the intelligence, the integrity, and the creativeness of its Federal service.

As a Nation we can ill afford the license of ignoring the people of our civil service, much less the practice which was so widespread a few years ago—and still lingers on in some quarters—of making them the whipping boys and girls for default in our affairs as a Nation.

But in spite of the persistence of the national attitude of devaluing the Federal service, we can look back to significant advances in recent years. A number of these gains, I am pleased to report, occurred under the administrations of Presidents Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry S Truman, while I was a member—and, later, chairman—of the House Civil Service Committee.

During that period we passed the Ramspeck-O'Mahoney Postmaster Act of 1937, the Hatch Act of 1939 and 1940, and the Ramspeck Act of 1940. Under the latter we authorized the President to extend the merit system to an additional 200,000 employees; we extended the authority of the President and Civil Service Commission in the field of position classification; and we provided for the revision of the efficiency rating system.

Under the provisions of the Ramspeck Act, President Truman, in 1945, extended Civil Service Commission authority of position classification and merit system to the field service.

In addition, one of the major advances during this period—one in which I took a particularly keen interest in drafting—was the first Federal Employees' Health Act of 1946.

Finally, we also passed in 1946 the efficiency rating legislation which led to the Performance Rating Act of 1950.

I have not intended, in this brief survey, to do more than touch the high spots of the developments of the past 75 years. Nor have I intended to convey the idea that the status of our civil service is satisfactory. Your own views on this matter have been noted with interest in your legislative proposals for the present Congress. And I hope that this Congress will give earnest and attentive concern to your program.

However, in the light of this summation, I believe we can safely make at least two generalizations:

First, that the principle of the merit system in our Federal Service is assured; and,

Second, that—belated though the progress has been—Federal employees are beginning to share increasingly in the welfare benefits that have come in recent years to employees in private industry.

But there is an issue more fundamental than either of these which I would now consider. I mentioned earlier that the Federal service has, in a sense, become a fourth branch of the Government. In stating this I am implying, of course, that government bureaucracy has become a permanent and integral part of American life. Therefore, rather than rail against the existence of a bureaucracy as such, it is time that we give thought to the kind of bureaucracy our society demands.

Our civil service, in recent years of relative political stalemate—when we have moved with increasingly less strength of purpose and direction—has been subjected to a degree of congressional and Executive scrutiny never before experienced in our history.

But from both sides—from Congress as well as the White House—this scrutiny has too often been of a restrictive nature, rather than a positive one. Some people believe too much attention has been given to the business of policing the actions of the Federal service and too little to finding ways of releasing the creative potential of our public servants. And herein lies one of the chief responsibilities in the years ahead—to reconstruct our ideas of administrative responsibility in keeping with the present complexion of our civil service.

My esteemed colleague, the Honorable OLIN JOHNSON, chairman of the Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, is deeply interested in furthering a strong civil service.

We have at last achieved what Professor Mills calls a representative bureaucracy, having tried the closed system of the Federalists and the spoils system of the Jacksonians and early Republicans. We now have a bureaucracy which shares the same values and interests as the community at large—and it is time that we tap the tremendous creative potential which such a system implies.

But this can hardly be done when the basic legislation under which our civil service operates still bears the mark of a reaction to a spoils system that we no longer need. Present concepts of personnel management and administrative responsibility have outdistanced the centralized and hierarchial system of administration of our Federal service.

I would, therefore, in closing, offer the suggestion that your organization might profitably consider the question of some such study of our civil service as the Rockefeller studies of our military security system, our international economic policy, and our educational system—a study which would be made with a view toward releasing the creative potential implicit in the most responsive and representative civil service of our time.

MONDAY, JANUARY 19, 1959

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Leviticus 26: 12: The Lord said, "I will walk among you and will be your God, and ye shall be my people."

Eternal God, our Father, grant that daily we may have a vivid and vital sense of Thy divine spirit, walking with us and working through us.

Always and everywhere we need Thee; in our weakness to sustain us; in our strength to discipline us; in our sorrows to comfort us.

May we be men and women of vision and of valor, richly endowed with clear minds and courageous hearts to meet and master the challenge of arduous tasks and heavy responsibilities.

To Thy name we ascribe all the praise. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 15, 1959, was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

Mr. ELMER J. HOFFMAN appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

FEDERAL BUDGET FOR 1960—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 15)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

The situation we face today as a nation differs significantly from that of a year ago. We are now entering a period of national prosperity and high employment. This is a time for the Government to conduct itself so as best to help the Nation move forward strongly and confidently in economic and social progress at home, while fulfilling our responsibilities abroad. The budget of the United States for the fiscal year 1960, transmitted herewith, will effectively and responsibly carry out the Government's role in dealing with the problems and the opportunities of the period ahead.

This budget proposes to increase our military effectiveness, to enhance domestic well-being, to help friendly nations to foster their development, to preserve fiscal soundness, and to encourage economic growth and stability, not only in the fiscal year 1960 but in the years beyond. And it clearly shows that these things can be done within our income.

We cannot, of course, undertake to satisfy all proposals for Government spending. But as we choose which ones the Government should accept, we must always remember that freedom and the long-run strength of our economy are prerequisite to attainment of our national goals. Otherwise, we cannot, for long, meet the imperatives of individual freedom, national security, and the many other necessary responsibilities of Government. In short, this budget fits the conditions of today because:

1. It is a balanced budget: My recommendations call for an approximate equality between revenues and expenditures, with a small surplus.

2. It is a responsible budget: By avoiding a deficit, it will help prevent further increases in the cost of living and the hidden and unfair tax that inflation imposes on personal savings and incomes.

3. It is a confident budget: It anticipates, in a rapidly advancing economy, increases in revenues without new general taxes, and counts upon the unity and good judgment of the American people in supporting a level of government activity which such revenues will make possible.

4. It is a positive budget: It responds to national needs, with due regard to urgencies and priorities, without being either extravagant or unduly limiting.

5. It is an attainable budget: Its proposals are realistic and can be achieved with the cooperation of the Congress.

Any budget is a financial plan. The budget for the Government is proposed by the President, but it is acted upon by the Congress which has the duty under the Constitution to authorize and appropriate for expenditures. Therefore, responsibility for the Government's finances is a shared one. Achievement of the plan set forth in this budget from here on depends upon congressional response, popular support, and developments in our economy and in the world.

FUTURE BUDGET OUTLOOK

The actions we take now on the 1960 budget will affect the fiscal outlook for many years to come. This budget was prepared in the light of the following general prospects for Government finances for the next few years.

Growth of revenues: Our Nation's population and labor force will continue to increase. The output per hour of work on our farms and in our factories can also be expected to grow as it has in the past. With sustained economic expansion, with employment of our people and resources at high levels, and with continued technological advance, the value of total national production and income will be substantially larger in the future than it is today.

Economic growth generates higher personal incomes and business profits. Under our graduated income tax system, with present tax rates, budget receipts should grow even faster than national income, although the rise in receipts certainly will not be uniform from year to year. Also, some tax reforms and downward tax adjustments will be essential in future years to help maintain and strengthen the incentives for continued economic growth. With a balance in our finances in 1960, we can look forward to tax reduction in the reasonably foreseeable future. In the long run, taxes should be so arranged that in periods of prosperity some annual provision is made for debt reduction, even though at a modest rate.

Control of expenditures: The estimated 1960 expenditures, while $3.9 billion less than in 1959, will still be $12.4 billion higher than in 1955, an average increase of almost $2.5 billion a year.

These figures emphasize that if we are to succeed in keeping total expenditures under control in the coming years we must recognize certain hard facts.

First, defense spending will remain extremely large as long as we must maintain military readiness in an era of world trouble and unrest. Until there is a significant and secure easing of world tensions, the actions by the Department of Defense to realine forces, close unneeded installations, and cut back outmoded weapons will achieve only relatively small expenditure reductions. Keeping our military structure capable and ready to meet any threat means that we must continue to strengthen our defenses. It is but a reflection of the world in which we live to stress again the fact that modern weapons are complex and costly to develop, costly to procure, and costly to operate and maintain.

Second, without one single new action by the Congress to authorize additional projects or programs, Government outlays for some of our major activities are certain to keep on rising for several years after 1960 because of commitments made in the past. For example, commitments for urban renewal capital grants have exceeded net expenditures by about $200 million or more for each of the last 3 years. Money to meet these commitments will be paid out in the years immediately ahead. Similarly, continued construction of the many water resources projects under way throughout the country will raise expenditures for these programs in the next 2 years beyond the current record amount.

Moreover, inescapable demands resulting from new technology and the growth of our Nation, and new requirements resulting from the changing nature of our society, will generate Federal expenditures in future years. As a matter of national policy we must, for example, make our airways measure up to the operational and safety needs of the jet age. We must not forget that a rapidly growing population creates virtually automatic increases in many Federal responsibilities.

Fiscal soundness and progress: Both domestic and defense needs require that we keep our financial house in order. This means that we must adhere to two policies:

First, we must review all Government activities as a part of the continuing budgetary process from year to year. Changing circumstances will inevitably offer opportunities for economies in a variety of existing Federal programs. If we do not make such reviews and act forthrightly on their findings, the combination of old commitments and new authorizations for new or enlarged Federal responsibilities could swell expenditures unnecessarily and inconsistently. Consonant with this policy of review, reductions have been recommended in this budget for 1960 appropriations which will affect expenditures not only in that year but also in later years. Furthermore, this budget contains proposals to modify certain activities and institute certain charges for special services. These recommendations are practicable and sound. They should be enacted.

Second, we must examine new programs and proposals with a critical eye. Desirability alone is not a sound criterion for adding to Federal responsibilities. The impact today and tomorrow on the entire Nation must be carefully assessed.

Our economy will continue to grow vigorously. This growth will produce additional Federal revenues, but it will not produce them without limit. We cannot take our resources for granted and we cannot spend them indiscriminately. We must deal with new conditions as they arise. We must choose what the Federal Government will do and how it will do it. If the choice is responsibly made, reductions obtained through economies and the rising revenues accompanying economic growth will produce surpluses which can be used to lessen the burden of taxes, meet the cost of essential new Government services, and reduce the public debt. The proposals in this budget have been formulated with these long-run objectives in mind.

BUDGET TOTALS

Budget expenditures are proposed to be held to $77 billion in fiscal 1960, which is $3.9 billion less than the estimated 1959 level of $80.9 billion.

With continued vigorous economic recovery, and with the relatively few new tax adjustments proposed herein, budget receipts in fiscal 1960 are expected to reach a total of $77.1 billion, an increase of $9.1 billion over fiscal 1959.

Thus a very modest surplus of about $0.1 billion is estimated for 1960, compared with a recession-induced deficit of $12.9 billion in the current fiscal year. This estimated balance assumes enactment of recommendations for extending present excises and corporation income taxes scheduled for reduction under existing law, for some new tax legislation to remove inequities and loopholes, for increased charges for special services, and for reductions in some current programs. It also assumes that certain programs can be made self-financing by stepping up the sale of portfolio assets.

Financing of the $12.9 billion budget deficit for the current fiscal year will increase the public debt to $285 billion by June 30, 1959, $2 billion in excess of the present permanent debt limit. With a balanced budget in 1960, a $285 billion debt is indicated also for June 30, 1960. On the basis of these estimates, it will be necessary to renew the request made during the past session of Congress for a permanent debt ceiling of $285 billion and, further, to seek an increase in the temporary debt ceiling sufficient to cover heavy borrowing requirements during the first half of the fiscal year 1960, borrowings which would be repaid before June 30, 1960.

The new authority to incur obligations recommended for fiscal 1960 is $76.8 billion, which is slightly less than the estimates for expenditures and for receipts. Further reductions in new obligational authority can be attained in 1961 by the Congress enacting my recommendations for program modifications.

Budget totals

	1957 actual	1958 actual	1959 estimate	1960 estimate
Budget receipts	$71.0	$69.1	$68.0	$77.1
Budget expenditures	69.4	71.9	80.9	77.0
Budget surplus (+) or deficit (−)	+1.6	−2.8	−12.9	+.1
New obligational authority	70.2	76.3	[1] 82.4	76.8

[1] Includes $8.7 billion of anticipated supplemental requests.

A consolidation of budget and trust fund transactions on a cash basis shows that the total Federal receipts from the public in fiscal 1960 are expected to exceed payments to the public by $0.6 billion. This figure exceeds the budget surplus in 1960 mainly because (1) cash payments of interest on redeemed savings bonds are less than the accrued interest included in budget expenditures and (2) trust fund receipts exceed trust fund expenditures.

BUDGET RECEIPTS

Extension of present tax rates: The budget outlook for 1960 makes it essential to extend present tax rates on corporation profits and certain excise taxes another year beyond their present expiration date of June 30, 1959.

Development of a more equitable tax system: Considerable progress was made last year in removing unintended benefits and hardships from the tax laws. Continued attention is necessary in this area. As the budget permits, additional reforms should be undertaken to increase the fairness of the tax system, to reduce the tax restraints on incentives to work and invest, and wherever feasible to simplify the laws. I hope that the committees of the Congress will work with the Treasury Department in preparing further adjustments of our tax laws for the future.

I urge the Congress to take action now on certain specific changes to maintain or increase revenues and to make the laws more equitable. The Treasury Department has recently proposed an equitable plan for taxing the income of life insurance companies. Specific proposals for corrective amendments of the laws on taxation of cooperatives will be transmitted to the Congress shortly. The Treasury will also recommend an amendment specifying the treatment processes which shall be considered mining for the purpose of computing percentage depletion in the case of mineral products. This amendment, prompted by court decisions, is designed to prevent an unintended extension of percentage depletion allowances to the sales price of finished products; a similar recommendation with respect to cement and clay products was made to the Congress last year.

Other changes in tax rates: In order to make highway-related taxes support our vast highway expenditures, excises on motor fuels need to be increased 1½ cents a gallon to 4½ cents. These receipts will go into the highway trust fund and preserve the pay-as-we-go principle, so that contributions from general tax funds to build Federal-aid highways will not be necessary.

Budget receipts

(See special analysis B in part IV of this document)

[Fiscal years. In billions]

	1958 actual	1959 estimate	1960 estimate
Individual income taxes	$34.7	$36.9	$40.7
Corporation income taxes	20.1	17.0	21.5
Excise taxes	8.6	8.5	8.9
All other receipts	5.7	5.6	6.0
Total	69.1	68.0	77.1

At the same time, to help defray the rising costs of operating the Federal airways, receipts from excises on aviation gasoline should be retained in general budget receipts rather than transferred to the highway trust fund. The estimates of budget and trust fund receipts from excise taxes reflect such proposed action. They also include a proposal to have users of the Federal airways pay a greater share of costs through increased rates on aviation gasoline and a new tax on jet fuels. These taxes, like the highway gasoline tax, should be 4½ cents per gallon. I believe it fair and sound that such taxes be reflected in the rates of transportation paid by the passengers and shippers.

As part of my proposals referred to later in this message to return responsibility for certain Federal programs to the States—in this instance, responsibility for vocational education and for waste treatment facilities—Federal excise taxes on local telephone service should be revised effective July 1, 1960, to allow limited credits for telephone taxes paid to the States.

Revenues: The resurgence of our economy has been stronger than was assumed in the budget estimates that were published last September. Consequently, budget receipts for the fiscal year 1959 are now expected to total $68 billion instead of the $67 billion estimated at that time.

The estimate of $77.1 billion in receipts for 1960 is contingent on enactment of the tax recommendations mentioned earlier. Of this estimate, approximately $76.5 billion reflects the increases in receipts under present tax rates and present tax sources while $600 million is from new taxes and increased nontax sources.

The anticipated rate of recovery of revenues in fiscal 1960 may be compared with the experience of the fiscal years 1955 and 1956, which reflect the recovery from the recession of the calendar year 1954. After adjusting for comparability in corporate tax payment dates, the increase in revenues from 1955 to 1956 was more than the increase estimated in this budget. With similar forces of economic recovery at work today, I have confidence that our revenue estimate is sound and will be attained.

MAJOR PROGRAM RECOMMENDATIONS

Eleven key features of the budget recommendations are summarized below:

1. Strengthen the effectiveness of our Armed Forces by further modernization and by improved efficiency of operations; and strengthen free world security by continued military assistance to our allies: This budget assures that essential defense needs are met. The budget recommendations will bolster the defense of our country against possible attack and enable our forces to respond more quickly and vigorously to any emergency. At the same time, and as part of our effort to keep America strong, this budget reflects policies to streamline operations, to remove duplication of weapons, to accentuate the principle and practice of unification, and to minimize maintenance costs—in short, to assure the maximum defense from each dollar expended. A realinement of the Armed Forces and a continuing reappraisal of existing defense activities are under way to accomplish these objectives. This can be illustrated by the changes in the composition of expenditures for the Department of Defense. While the estimated total expenditures for the Department will increase $145 million from 1959 to 1960, those for procurement of missiles and for research, development, test, and evaluation will rise more than $800 million.

In addition to strengthening our own Armed Forces, and recognizing the inseparability of free world defense, the budget continues to provide through military assistance the critical margin of weapons and equipment required by our allies who, with us, forge a strong shield against possible aggressors.

2. Assist free nations in their economic development through well-considered programs: Today the less-developed nations—a score of which have attained independence since World War II—are struggling to improve their economic and social conditions. The success of these efforts is vital not only to the freedom and well-being of the millions of people within their boundaries but also to the population of the entire world. Fortunately, the free countries of the world are taking many actions together to promote trade with and to expand investment in such nations. As part of this joint effort, the following actions for the United States are recommended:

(a) Increase substantially our subscriptions to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund. This should be done promptly.

(b) Bring the capitalization of our Development Loan Fund up to the amount originally recommended for the fiscal year 1959 by enacting a supplemental amount of $225 million.

(c) As a supplement to established institutions, create a joint development banking institution with our Latin American neighbors.

(d) Increase the emphasis on economic development in the mutual security programs through such measures as the appropriation of $700 million for the Development Loan Fund and $211 million for technical cooperation in fiscal 1960.

(e) Enact legislation to expand the mutual security investment guaranty program.

Research and development expenditures

(See special analysis H in part IV of this document)

	1958 actual	1959 estimate	1960 estimate
Department of Defense [1]	$2,314	$3,282	$3,692

Department of Agriculture	111	128	127
National Science Foundation	35	60	80
Other agencies	133	192	208
Total	3,498	4,841	5,484

[1] As explained in special analysis H, part IV, figures for 1958, 1959, and 1960 are not fully comparable because of changes in appropriation structure; they also exclude about $2 billion of procurement funds in each year in support of research and development.

3. Promote scientific research and space exploration: In the current fiscal year, total expenditures for basic and applied research and for scientific development have reached record amounts and a supplemental appropriation for 1959 to advance space technology is recommended.

For the fiscal year 1960, research and development expenditures will be increased still further, with emphasis on space exploration, peaceful uses of atomic energy, and basic science. Extensive space exploration investigations are being initiated, utilizing satellites and probes. Development work is going forward on high-energy fuel rockets, a million-pound thrust engine, and a nuclear rocket engine.

4. Carry forward current public works programs—now larger than ever before: Increases were provided last year in construction programs for water resources, health facilities, public buildings, airways, and highways, partly to combat the recession. As a result, Federal expenditures for civil public works in fiscal 1960 will be the highest in history. It therefore seems both possible and prudent to take a breathing spell in the initiation of new projects. Accordingly, no additional funds are proposed in 1960 for starting new water resources projects, general office buildings, and veterans hospitals. Furthermore, reduced new spending authority is recommended for grants for local public and private hospitals, health research facilities, and for waste treatment works, although expenditures under earlier authorizations will continue to be high. Highway expenditures will increase in accordance with the program planned under the Federal Aid Highway Act, and modernization of airway facilities to meet operational and safety needs will go forward at a higher level of expenditure.

The combined outlay for reclamation, flood control, and navigation projects is estimated to be higher than ever before in 1960. Expenditures are expected to increase again in fiscal 1961 and to hold at that level in 1962 even without new starts beyond those for which initial appropriations have already been made. The new water resources projects authorized for starting in 1959 will be so spread out as to schedule initiation late in the year, wherever practicable, and, in a few cases, construction may be deferred until the fiscal year 1960.

Total	3,106	4,543	5,242

5. Continue at a high level programs which promote the general welfare of our people: This budget makes provision for programs which are of utmost importance to our individual citizens. Expenditures for health research and for constructing various types of health facilities will be at a record level in 1960. Activities to improve education, especially in science and mathematics, will be increased significantly in 1960 as a result of programs started or expanded in fiscal 1959. Grants to States for vocational rehabilitation will be higher in 1960 than in 1959, with services provided to 314,000 disabled persons. Public assistance grants to the aged, the blind, the disabled, and to dependent children will continue to rise. Strengthened programs in the Food and Drug Administration are recommended.

Proposals will be made for widening the coverage of unemployment compensation, for extending and improving the minimum wage and 8-hour laws, and for providing added protection in labor-management relations. I am again proposing legislation to strengthen safeguards on the conduct of labor union affairs, including the strengthening of the law enacted last year requiring public reporting on union welfare and pension plans.

In the housing field, the budget recommends broadening the authority of the Federal Housing Administration and removing the ceiling on the total volume of mortgage insurance it can provide. Legislation is also recommended authorizing capital grants for urban renewal projects for a 6-year period. Annual contributions to local housing authorities for low-rent public housing projects will rise in 1960 as more projects are completed. Commitments by the Federal National Mortgage Association to purchase mortgages on housing for urban renewal areas for relocating displaced families and for the elderly will continue to rise in 1960.

6. Foster community development with increased local participation: The Federal Government is helping local communities meet many of the major problems of community development created by increasing population and growing urbanization. Federal expenditures for grants and long-term loans to assist 14 major types of capital improvements alone will reach an estimated $2.1 billion in 1960, or almost double the amount actually spent for these programs in 1958. By the close of fiscal 1960, commitments for future Federal expenditures for the same programs are estimated to be over $6 billion.

[1] Including allocations and program reservations.
[2] Estimated maximum annual payment to cover debt service on long-term bonds sold to finance projects. (Unamortized capital costs underwritten by Federal contributions are estimated at $5 billion.)

These totals show how rapidly direct Federal aid to communities is growing. They exclude many other Federal programs which indirectly assist development or redevelopment of communities, such as construction of river and harbor improvements and air navigation facilities, grants for intercity highways, purchases of general housing mortgages and guaranties of housing and business loans of many types. They also exclude Federal aid to communities for nonconstruction programs in such fields as health and welfare.

Federal programs should foster orderly development in a way that will encourage private participation and will share costs equitably among the beneficiaries and the various levels of government. Legislation will be proposed to meet these objectives in the programs for urban renewal, college housing, highways, airports, schools in federally affected areas, and construction of waste treatment facilities. The budget also provides for a new program to assist industrial redevelopment of areas which have severe and persistent unemployment. The Congress is urged to enact legislation for such assistance along the line I have recommended previously.

7. Discontinue temporary emergency measures and strengthen permanent programs for economic stability: Among the governmental actions taken last year under the stress of the recession were two temporary measures involving substantial Federal expenditures.

Funds were advanced to the States and Territories to finance extended unemployment benefits for workers who had exhausted their regular benefits. Only 17 jurisdictions chose to receive these advances for all workers who could be made eligible. Five other States enacted their own legislation extending the period of benefits for those covered under the regular State program. Of the remaining States and Territories, some obtained Federal aid for extended unemployment benefits for veterans and Federal employees alone, while 17 had no extended benefit legislation of their own and did not take advantage of the Federal program at all. In view of the rapidity of the economic recovery and the lack of uniformity of State participation, it is now estimated that expenditures over the life of this program will be $206 million less than the $666 million appropriated for it.

Another temporary measure was the authorization for Government purchases of $1 billion of mortgages on low-cost housing. This full amount has been committed. By the end of fiscal 1959, it is estimated that the Government will have spent over $600 million for such mortgages and will have over $300 million of commitments still outstanding, for which expenditures will occur in 1960.

Direct emergency Federal expenditures for unemployment benefits and for emergency stimulation of home construction are unnecessary on a continuing basis. It is better to strengthen our essential continuing programs for economic growth and stability, and this budget so contemplates.

8. Continue the adjustments needed for a freer agricultural economy with less reliance on the Federal Treasury: The agricultural sector of our economy is in the paradoxical situation of having more efficient farms than ever before and yet of being more dependent upon Federal financial aid. During the current fiscal year, budget expenditures for agriculture and agricultural resources are expected to reach a peak of $6.8 billion. For the coming year, they are estimated to decline to about $6 billion, mainly as a result of the termination of the acreage reserve of the soil bank.

About three-quarters of these expenditures are for price supports and other programs to stabilize farm prices and income. Other expenditures for agriculture consist primarily of payments for conservation; loans for rural electrification, telephones, and farm ownership and operation; and research and extension activities.

Last year, the Congress enacted some changes in price-support laws, but additional amendments are necessary to help our agricultural economy adjust to the continuing revolution in farming technology. Changes are also needed in other agricultural programs. Legislative proposals will be transmitted later which should help our agricultural economy gradually free itself from so much Government support and control.

9. Reduce the burden on the general public for services to special groups: Certain Government activities confer measurable special benefits on identifiable groups or individuals beyond the benefits to the general public. The cost of Federal services which convey special benefits should be recovered through charges paid by the beneficiaries rather than through taxes on the general public.

In furtherance of this principle the recent Congress approved some adjustments in postal rates, and increased the fees for a few other relatively smaller services. On the other hand, it increased postal employees' pay and highway construction grants without providing the additional charges needed to finance such expenditures. As a result of these and other developments, further legislation is necessary to put the postal service on a self-supporting basis and to finance highway construction without drawing on the general revenues.

This budget recommends legislation to make the activities listed in the following table more nearly self-supporting.

Estimated savings to the general taxpayers from more adequate fees and charges

	Fiscal year 1960	Full annual effect [1]
Support highway expenditures by highway-related taxes: [2]
Finance deficiency estimated under present law	$241.0	$818.0
Transfer financing of forest and public lands highways to trust fund	41.0	41.0
Revise postal rates	350.0	350.0
Charge specifically for use of Federal airways:
Transfer aviation fuel taxes from highway trust fund to general fund	34.0	34.0
Increase taxes on aviation fuels	51.0	70.0
Revise fee schedule for noncompetitive oil and gas leases		14.0
Raise patent and trademark fees	3.5	3.5
Miscellaneous increased fees and cost recoveries	11.5	20.8
Total	732.0	1,351.3

[1] Net change on annual basis with present workload or first full fiscal year effect.

[2] Trust fund receipts, as distinct from budgetary savings, will be increased by an estimated net amount of $690 million in 1960 and nearly $900 million in subsequent years.

10. Encourage private lending through flexible interest rates for Government credit programs: In a number of important cases, present legislation on programs for making loans, purchasing mortgages, and insuring or guaranteeing private loans sets inflexible and uneconomic restrictions on interest rates. This creates unneeded and hidden subsidies and requires excessive use of Federal funds by discouraging private lending.

To correct this situation, I recommend that for interest rates on new loans and commitments:

(a) The 4¾ percent ceiling on loans guaranteed by the Veterans Administration be replaced by a maximum rate not in excess of the rate for mortgages on sales housing insured by the Federal Housing Administration. This change will also have the effect of revising the interest rate ceiling on direct housing loans of the Veterans Administration.

(b) The ceilings of 4½ percent and 5 percent for rental (including armed services) and for cooperative housing mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration be increased to levels adequate to assure private financing.

(c) The present statutory interest rate of 2 percent for loans made by the Rural Electrification Administration be replaced by a rate which will cover the current cost to the Treasury of equivalent-term borrowing and other reasonable costs.

(d) The statutory standard for college housing loans made by the Housing and Home Finance Agency (the rate at present is 2⅞ percent) be amended to authorize a rate which will cover the current cost to the Treasury of equivalent-term borrowing and other reasonable costs.

(e) The 3½ percent ceiling on ship mortgage loans by the Maritime Administration be replaced by authority to charge the full costs of the loans.

Such actions by the Congress will encourage the participation of private capital, and, in the long run, will reduce Government expenditures significantly. At the same time, Government guaranties or insurance will continue to permit interest costs to borrowers more favorable than the rates charged in the open market for similar loans.

11. Achieve long-run economies by adapting programs to changed circumstances: Changing conditions in recent decades have resulted in the enactment of hundreds of laws and the creation of vast new programs administered by new or enlarged agencies. In this same period, few Government programs or operations have been discontinued or reduced. Furthermore, in many cases, worthwhile objectives have been pursued with outmoded activities or methods and with accompanying excessive costs to taxpayers. This is a wasteful and inefficient way to conduct public business.

It is proposed in this budget that we start anew to amend the basic legislation for a number of Government programs and operations in order to adapt them to present circumstances and assure that they accomplish their objectives more effectively and with less cost.

IMPROVE CONTROL OVER THE BUDGET

Actions can and should be taken to achieve more effective control over the budget by improving present practices and procedures, especially those related to the consideration of budgetary requests.

Consider full fiscal situation: The procedure used by the Congress for the review of fiscal matters is one which only the Congress itself can determine. Nevertheless, I believe that achievement of any overall fiscal objective is handicapped by the absence of arrangements under which the Congress can look at the fiscal situation as a whole. Such an arrangement was contemplated under a procedure established in the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, but apparently did not prove satisfactory to the Congress. Over the years since that arrangement fell into disuse, the executive branch has made considerable progress in achieving a more comprehensive consolidated executive budget which sets forth a financial plan, including the effect of proposed legislation. I sincerely hope that the Congress will again consider ways by which it can more effectively overcome the diffused consideration which results from separate appropriation bills, the provision of new obligational authority outside of the appropriations process, and the separate deliberations on revenue bills and the debt limit.

Item veto: The item veto is another important and needed reform, regardless of whether appropriations are made in a number of bills or in a consolidated bill. In either case, the necessity of accepting or rejecting a bill in its entirety prevents the President from considering separable provisions on their own merits. Congress has recognized the value of an item veto by granting it to governors of our Territories and insular possessions. Most States have adopted this device. Presidents of both parties, starting as far back as Ulysses S. Grant, have recommended an item veto. Legislation granting an item veto to the President should apply to legislative measures authorizing expenditures as well as to appropriation bills, and should include authority to reduce the amount of an appropriation as well as to strike out an item. The use of such a veto by a President would not remove the final authority of the Congress, which would still retain its constitutional power to override any specific veto.

Public enterprises: The appropriation and fund structure of the Government needs a new review and some overhaul. For example, major lending programs and other business-type activities are now financed through revolving funds, which enable their expenditures and applicable receipts to be more easily related to each other and thus improve their operating flexibility. However, there are several notable exceptions—among them the Rural Electrification Administration, Farmers' Home Administration, and the power marketing agencies of the Department of the Interior. Legislation will be proposed to permit these enterprises to be budgeted through revolving funds. The possibility of converting still more business-type activities to a revolving fund basis will continue to be studied, with a view to making recommendations to the Congress.

More adequate control over the financial affairs of the Government could be achieved if all Government corporations which possess authority to draw money from the Treasury or to commit the Treasury for future expenditures were brought under the budget provisions of the Government Corporation Control Act. As in past years, legislation to accomplish this purpose will be again submitted to the Congress. I urge that it be enacted.

Legislation will also be proposed to incorporate the Alaska Railroad to facilitate its operations on a businesslike basis.

Accrued expenditures and other controls: In accordance with Hoover Commission recommendations, legislation was enacted last year to enable the Congress to exercise more direct control over the level of Government spending through limitations on accrued expenditures. As an initial step, this budget proposes such limitations for six appropriations. The beginning that can thus be made in improved congressional control should be extended as rapidly as experience warrants.

This budget extends the cost-based budgeting procedures which are necessary to get a proper measure of financial performance for many of the various agencies and programs. Further extensions will be made as agency accounting systems are made adequate to support them.

Continuing improvements: Efforts to improve financial management practices need to be continued. Considerable progress has already been made by the executive agencies under the leadership of the joint accounting program which is sponsored by the Bureau of the Budget, the Treasury Department, and the General Accounting Office. But there remain a number of unsatisfactory situations, unimportant in earlier years of smaller budgets, that are now worthy of attention.

In the past, a number of appropriation items have been placed on a permanent basis and, in some of these cases, the major result achieved has been weaker control over the expenditures concerned. In addition, even though there are a few justifiable exceptions, the practice of providing authorizations to expend from debt receipts and contract authority outside the appropriation process is generally inconsistent with sound standards of budget practice.

Other inconsistencies occur in the system for making financial authority available to Government agencies. Some guaranty programs are fully funded by specific grants of obligational authority, some are partially funded, and others have an open-end call upon the Treasury. Some collections of funds now credited to miscellaneous receipts might be more properly credited against the related expenditures deliberately incurred to generate the receipts. Criteria for the use of revolving funds and trust funds have not been consistently applied.

Another problem in budgetary control has developed over the use of foreign currencies. In view of the volume of currencies generated by transactions under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 and the numerous competing demands for their use for supplementary U.S. programs, more adequate procedures parallel to those governing dollar obligations are necessary. The action required by the Congress to authorize the use of certain of these currencies, for which a supplemental request will be transmitted for fiscal 1960, now relates to only a small portion of the currencies which will actually be used for Government programs.

The Director of the Bureau of the Budget is undertaking studies of the various weaknesses and inconsistencies mentioned herein to determine the most appropriate courses of action. Corrective recommendations will be made to the Congress as needed.

REVIEW OF MAJOR FUNCTIONS

The table below compares current estimates for each of the nine major functional categories in this budget with the actual figures for fiscal 1958 and the latest estimate for 1959. The recommendations and estimates for 1960 are discussed in the sections of this message which follow the table.

MAJOR NATIONAL SECURITY

The changes in emphasis in the four major national security programs for the fiscal year 1960 reflect the growing armed strength of the United States and its allies and the continuing modernization of defense methods. The Department of Defense will significantly increase expenditures for procurement of missiles and for development and evaluation of new weapons, while reducing expenditures for other procurement and for construction. The Atomic Energy Commission is advancing all phases of its programs, particularly research in the peaceful uses of atomic energy. Our allies' progress in equipping their armed forces and the deliveries under military assistance in 1959 and prior years permit a reduction in military assistance expenditures. Expenditures for stockpiling and expansion of defense production will be reduced because basic stockpiling objectives for most materials are now fulfilled and because many defense production expansion contracts have already been completed.

Total expenditures for major national security programs in fiscal 1960 are estimated to be $45.8 billion.

Department of Defense—military functions: The defense program for 1960 calls for new appropriations of $40,850 million. This is $288 million less than the appropriations estimated for 1959. However, approximately $0.7 billion of the funds appropriated by the Congress for 1959 in excess of the amounts recommended will be added to the 1960 program.

Expenditures in 1960 are estimated at $40,945 million, which is $145 million more than in 1959 and about $1.9 billion more than the amount spent in 1958—continuing the upward trend which began in 1956. Over the 5-year period from 1955 to 1960, annual expenditures for defense will have increased by over $5.4 billion.

Recent developments: In the 1959 budget message I recommended a substantial acceleration of our defense effort in selected areas to enable our military strategy, techniques, and organization to keep pace with the rapid strides in science and technology.

During the last year we have made substantial progress in accelerating or starting key programs. The Atlas intercontinental ballistic missile has successfully completed a full-range test and the first operational Atlas missiles will be at launching sites by the end of the current fiscal year. Additional missiles will be put in place in 1960. The first units of the intermediate range missile Thor have already been deployed to the United Kingdom and additional units of both Thor and Jupiter will be deployed during the next 18 months. Construction is already well along on the first five submarines which will be equipped to fire the Polaris solid fuel ballistic missile and the first such submarine will go into operation in the calendar year 1960. Construction of the sixth Polaris submarine has begun and three more are authorized and will be started in fiscal 1960. Coming along at a rapid rate is the Titan, an advanced liquid fuel intercontinental ballistic missile. Development work is progressing rapidly on a "second generation" solid fuel intercontinental ballistic missile, the Minuteman.

For air defense, the Nike-Hercules, which is capable of being armed with a nuclear warhead, is replacing the Nike-Ajax. The Bomarc ground-to-air missile, capable of destroying attacking aircraft at extended ranges, will, when operational, augment manned interceptor planes. To meet the threat of attack by ballistic missiles, the Nike-Zeus missile is being developed at an accelerated pace and construction is underway on a new ballistic missile early warning system.

A dispersal program for our strategic bomber force and its supporting tankers is nearing completion. To improve the effectiveness of the B–52 intercontinental bombers, the production of the Hound-dog air-to-ground missile has been accelerated.

Important scientific data have been obtained from the satellites and lunar probes launched to date. The recent successful use of the Atlas as a satellite clearly demonstrated the potential usefulness of satellites in the field of communications. The Department of Defense will continue to investigate satellite applications of specific military interest. Its space programs will be closely coordinated with those of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The time has come to consolidate our position in key areas of defense affected by recent advances in missiles. Sufficient progress has been made on new weapons systems to permit us safely to eliminate marginal systems and to reduce the number of competitive projects. The solid fuel Pershing and Sergeant missiles will replace the liquid fuel Redstone and Corporal. Production of the Regulus II (a ship-based aerodynamic intermediate range missile) has been terminated, and the Rascal air-to-ground missile program has been canceled.

Because of a change in tactical concepts, the decoy missile Goose has been eliminated. The Seamaster jet powered seaplane project will be stopped. Other weapon systems of lesser importance have also been eliminated. No more appropriations are planned for the Jupiter and Thor intermediate range ballistic missiles after 1960, unless units in addition to those already being provided to our allies through the military assistance program should later be agreed upon.

Thus, by concentrating our efforts on the more advanced and more promising weapons systems, we can increase substantially the combat capabilities of our military forces with a relatively small increase in the overall cost of defense.

Reorganization of the Department of Defense: The Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1958, approved on August 6, 1958, is being put into effect.

A streamlined chain of command is being established running directly from the Secretary of Defense through the Joint Chiefs of Staff to unified and specified commands which have been given full operational control of the forces assigned to their commands. The organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff has been strengthened to provide the Secretary of Defense with the military advice and assistance required for effective planning and direction. The committee system of the Joint Staff has been replaced by seven new directorates, including one for operations. Appropriate instructions have been issued to delineate the additional responsibilities of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and to outline their relationships with other agencies of the Department of Defense.

A director of defense research and engineering has been appointed to assure that all scientific and technological resources of the Department of Defense are put to the best possible use. I expect the new organization to provide more effective leadership, help to eliminate duplication, and develop an integrated research and development program.

In addition, improvements have been made in the administrative procedures of the Department of Defense. Operating methods in the Office of the Secretary of Defense have been improved. Nearly 200 committees have been abolished. The responsibilities and functions of the assistant secretaries are being clarified.

The job ahead is to develop within this organizational framework the management relationships that will improve the decisionmaking process, clearly fix responsibilities, and provide to all agencies of the Department a full understanding of the broad national requirements that determine our military policy. The attainment of this objective will provide the teamwork that is essential for the continued maintenance of an effective and, at the same time, economical defense effort.

Military personnel policy: This budget provides for a military force of about the same overall size and composition in fiscal 1960 as that planned for the end of the current fiscal year. This force, however, will have significantly greater combat power as new weapons continue to be added to inventories.

The number of active duty military personnel during 1960 will continue at the level planned for the end of the current fiscal year except for a small reduction in the Air Force. Since the end of the Korean conflict, we have followed the policy of reducing numbers of military personnel as more powerful weapons become available to our forces. However, it has become increasingly apparent that the Communist bloc is following a policy of deliberately and constantly probing free world positions to test our determination to resist the further forcible expansion of Communist influence. Under these circumstances, it is prudent not to plan for any significant changes during fiscal 1960 in our deployments overseas or in our ready military forces at home.

A major effort has been made during the last few years to enhance the attractiveness of military service as a career. The most recent action along this line has been the enactment of military pay adjustments and adoption of recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Professional and Technical Compensation. Although these and earlier measures increase the average cost per man, they have had highly beneficial effects in all the services. The quality of inductees and enlistees has improved. The first term reenlistment rate has increased and the experience and skill levels have been raised. These improvements point to greater stability of personnel, smaller basic and technical training loads, and, over the longer run, may permit some further reductions in military personnel.

The objective of our defense effort today is the same as it has been in the past—to deter wars, large or small. To achieve this objective we must have a well-rounded military force, under unified direction and control, properly equipped and trained, and ready to respond to any type of military operations that may be forced upon us. We have such a force now, and under this budget we will continue to have such a force.

Strategic forces: A principal element of our deterrent power is the Strategic Air Command. The 43 wings of this command are maintained at a high state of readiness and can react quickly and effectively to meet any major threat to our national security. This command will be further strengthened during fiscal 1960 by additional deliveries of the improved B–52 intercontinental jet bomber and by the first deliveries of the new supersonic B–58 medium jet bomber together with additional KC–135 jet tankers. In addition, a new and important weapon will be provided by the introduction of Atlas missiles.

Our deterrent forces are complemented by the tactical units of the Army, Marine Corps, and Air Force and the mobile carrier task forces of the Navy, all with striking potential of great magnitude. The submarines designed to launch the Polaris missile will add significantly to our deterrent strength as they come into the fleet.

Air defense forces: The North American air defense system is well established and is being improved constantly. Our forward warning line, which we operate jointly with Canada, stretches from the mid-Pacific around the northern edge of the continent and across the Atlantic approaches. Behind this line we have an extensive surveillance, tracking, and communications network. Elements of the structure are being tied together for operation by the semiautomatic ground environment (SAGE) system.

All the services contribute military elements to the unified command responsible for maintaining our air defense capability. The Air Force provides warning and control and the longer range weapons systems. The Army provides the shorter range weapons and over 70 Nike-Ajax and Nike-Hercules ground-to-air missile battalions wil be in operation by the end of the fiscal 1960. The Navy provides sea and air based radar which extend the early warning systems. National Guard units of many States participate in air defense. In addition, other regular and reserve forces of all the services stand ready in the event of need.

These forces, together with Canada's Air Defense Command, comprise the North American Defense Command and provide an air defense shield of growing effectiveness for the entire continent.

Sea control forces: Historically, the Navy has been assigned the primary mission of controlling sealanes. In the conduct of amphibious warfare and antisubmarine campaigns, it is equipped to support the commands responsible for actions ranging from localized emergencies to large-scale military operations. It is ready to conduct prompt and sustained combat anywhere in the world at sea or adjacent to the sea, and is able to exploit the mobility, surprise, and concealment afforded by the world's free oceans.

The naval forces will operate 864 ships, including 389 warships, in 1960. The carrier task forces will be strengthened with new Forrestal-class carriers and higher performance aircraft possessing both conventional and atomic firepower. The cruiser, destroyer, and frigate forces are steadily acquiring a guided missile capability.

Special programs, including research and scientific studies, are under way to enhance our antisubmarine capabilities. Task forces of specially equipped ships and planes specifically designed for antisubmarine warfare are being employed.

Tactical forces: The tactical elements of the ground, naval, and air forces combine to deal with situations short of general war or to carry out essential tasks in event of general war. These forces include 14 Army divisions organized along pentomic lines and able to deliver both nuclear and high explosive firepower. Many of these divisions are deployed overseas and are evidence of this Nation's determination to participate actively in the collective defense of the free world.

The Army divisions are supported by the tactical air wings of the Air Force, approximately half of which are deployed overseas. Other important elements of our tactical forces are the three divisions and three air wings of the Marine Corps. In areas adjacent to the seas these forces can also be supported by carrier-based aircraft.

Both the Army and Marine Corps divisions are backed up by a variety of support units organized to provide both nuclear and nonnuclear military power. Air and sea transportation for these forces are provided by the Air Force and the Navy.

The readiness of our tactical forces to respond to potential aggression was well demonstrated during the Lebanon and Quemoy crises.

Appropriation structure. In my message to the Congress last year transmitting recommendations relative to our entire defense establishment, I pointed out the need for the Secretary of Defense to have adequate authority and flexibility to discharge his heavy responsibilities. One of the areas requiring attention is the pattern under which funds are appropriated.

This budget proposes a rearrangement of appropriations for the Department of Defense in terms of major purposes rather than of organization units. These broad categories are: (1) military personnel; (2) operation and maintenance; (3) procurement; (4) military construction; and (5) research, development, test, and evaluation. This rearrangement will permit consideration of the Department of Defense budget on a more uniform and more clearly understandable basis.

Operating costs: The annual operating costs of the Department of Defense for active and reserve military personnel, for retired pay, and for operation and maintenance are approximately the same in 1960 as in 1959. They are estimated at about $22.3 billion in 1960, not taking into account credits of $0.4 billion in revolving funds. Savings from a somewhat lower average number of military personnel and somewhat smaller inventories of aircraft and ships to be supported in 1960 are offset by higher unit costs.

The average cost per man in uniform will be somewhat higher because of (1) required increases in the Government's social security contributions as employer, (2) additional longevity pay reflecting the larger proportion of career personnel, and (3) the proficiency pay provisions of the new military pay law.

The average cost of operating and maintaining each weapon and unit of equipment will be higher because they are more complex. Other elements of increased cost are the additional SAGE centers which will be operational in 1960, the increased cost of medical care for dependents of military personnel, and the larger number of family housing units which will have to be supported by the Department in 1960.

For the past 5 years, the Department of Defense has pursued a vigorous program to provide adequate housing for military personnel and their families, both within the continental United States and overseas. This program has met with significant success and sufficient numbers of units have been built or are under construction to satisfy a major part of the military requirements. With the recommended extension of the armed services mortgage insurance program for another year and with a more adequate interest ceiling, private enterprise and local community support should be able to meet most of the remaining requirements for military housing in the continental United States. Some new Government-operated housing will still be required, however, for new installations and certain existing installations in the United States and overseas.

Procurement, research, and construction: Expenditures for procurement, research, development, test, and evaluation, and military construction are estimated at $19 billion for 1960. There is an increase over 1959 in the combined expenditures for procurement and for research, development, test, and evaluation and a decrease in expenditures for military construction. Missile systems in 1960 will take a larger share of total procurement expenditures and aircraft will take less. Ships and other weapons and equipment will take about the same amount as in 1959.

This budget will provide for the procurement of a total of 1,610 aircraft, including jet bombers and jet tankers, land based and ship based fighters, ship based attack aircraft, trainers, helicopters, and transports. Funds are also provided for the continuation of the development of the B–70, a new high altitude supersonic intercontinental bomber, and of a new high speed interceptor.

Work will also continue, at about the same level as in 1959, on the development of a nuclear powerplant for military aircraft. Until such a powerplant is successfully developed, and the technical problems involved in operating a nuclear-powered aircraft safely are solved, there is no practical military value in attempting to build the airplane itself. It is the judgment of my scientific advisers, which I approve, that the pace of this program should continue to be geared to valid technical considerations.

In addition to providing for the missiles discussed earlier, the budget also includes funds for a wide variety of tactical missiles, for both the ground and naval forces, and for additional quantities of air-to-air missiles.

The shipbuilding program proposed for 1960 includes another Forrestal-class carrier, the eighth of its class. In line with the Navy's recommendation, this carrier will be conventionally powered. It is only good sense to wait until we have more experience with the construction of the first nuclear powered carrier authorized in the 1958 program before we start the construction of another.

The 1960 shipbuilding program also provides for 17 other new ships and for converting 13 ships to more modern types. In addition to the carrier, the ship construction program includes six guided missile destroyers and frigates, three nuclear powered attack submarines, and eight other vessels. Nine Polaris submarines have been authorized to date. This budget provides for the advance procurement of long lead time components for three additional Polaris submarines. Conversions include a cruiser, eight destroyers, and four other vessels. This modernization will improve the antisubmarine warfare capabilities and extend the useful life of World War II destroyers.

Research will be conducted on, among other things, very early warning systems, ballistic missile defense, solid fuel chemistry, and the use of military satellites and other military vehicles for navigation and communication purposes. I am also requesting $150 million for the Department of Defense emergency fund—the same amount as provided for 1959—to provide for the exploitation of breakthroughs or unanticipated developments which may occur during the coming year.

Provision has been made for the essential needs of our ground forces. Included in this budget are funds for weapons, ammunition, engineering and training equipment for the Army and Marine Corps ground forces to enhance the combat power of the individual soldier.

Legislation for military operations: There are a number of existing provisions of law concerning military personnel which will require legislative action during this session of Congress to extend the expiration dates. They include induction authorities under the Universal Military Training and Service Act, the special enlistment program authorized by the Armed Forces Reserve Act, the act suspending the permanent limitation on the authorized active duty strength of the Armed Forces, and the Dependents Assistance Act.

In the Department of Defense Appropriation Act for fiscal year 1959, the Congress enacted mandatory minimum strengths for the Reserve components of the Army, an unprecedented departure from past policy. This action cuts deeply into the concept of flexibility overwhelmingly endorsed by the same Congress in the Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1958. It is entirely inconsistent with a policy of promptly adjusting our military forces and concepts to rapidly changing world conditions and revolutionary advances in science and technology. Furthermore, I consider these mandatory provisions wasteful of resources that can be more appropriately applied elsewhere. I strongly urge, therefore, that the Congress repeal these mandatory provisions at an early date, and recommend that future defense appropriations contain no similar provisions.

The Departments of the Army, Air Force, and Commerce have for some years been operating long-line communications in Alaska. With Alaska now a State, a communications system should be developed which will be more responsive to the growing needs of the Alaskan economy and people, as well as to the needs of the Government agencies operating in that State. In my judgment, such a system can best be developed by private enterprise. I will therefore soon submit to the Congress proposed legislation to authorize the sale of these Government-owned communications facilities.

For the past several years the Department of Defense Appropriation Act has contained a rider which limits competitive bidding by firms in other countries on certain military supply items. This restriction is sharply at variance with the general law, popularly known as the Buy American Act. I strongly urge that the Congress not reenact this rider.

There are special problems involved in our present system of proficiency flying and its relationships to flight pay for personnel assigned to flying duty. The Secretary of Defense has been requested to make a study of these problems in the interest of improvements and economies.

Legislation on military property, construction, and procurement: Changes in military concepts, weapons, and training requirements have markedly reduced or eliminated the need for some military installations and property while creating additional requirements for new types of facilities. Consideration should be given to legislation to streamline procedures and legal requirements for disposing of such obsolete facilities and real property. Such procedures would also reduce administrative costs of managing property and place property which is now exempt from State and local taxes on the tax rolls.

In this connection, section 601 of Public Law 155, 82d Congress, imposes restrictions on the executive branch of the Government with respect to certain real estate transactions of the Department of Defense. As stated in the budget message last year, the Attorney General has advised me that this provision of law reflects the exercise of legislative authority not warranted by the Constitution. I again recommend its immediate repeal.

The continued and rapid growth in the use of petroleum products has made questionable the need for maintenance of the relatively small naval petroleum reserves as a significant defense measure, since it would appear that the nationwide, even worldwide, petroleum industry must be relied upon to provide efficiently for our petroleum requirements in both peace and war. Accordingly, the administration will study—and I would hope the Congress would do likewise—the advisability of disposing of the anachronistic naval petroleum reserves, thereby relieving the Department of the Navy of an inappropriate responsibility and also providing additional revenue to the Federal Government.

This budget contains recommendations for $1.6 billion additional authorization for acquisition and construction of facilities for the Armed Forces. The details of this program are now under study in the Department of Defense and are subject to modifications in consonance with the program planning of the Armed Forces. The program will be held to the minimum requirements for facilities and installations essential to the modern weapons systems being made operational. I will submit at an early date both the additional authorizations and the related estimates of appropriations for the military construction programs.

Another matter which will require the attention of the Congress during this session is the expiration of the Renegotiation Act on June 30, 1959. This is the law under which excess profits gained on certain Government contracts and related subcontracts are recaptured by the Government through renegotiation. I recommend that this act be extended.

Development and control of atomic energy: Expenditures by the Atomic Energy Commission are expected to reach an alltime high of $2.7 billion in fiscal 1960. This large amount reflects our determination to maintain our position of world leadership in the field of nuclear military armaments until such armaments are brought under adequate international control and to promote the development of peaceful applications of atomic energy.

In the light of our offer to suspend tests of nuclear weapons for a 1-year period starting October 31, 1958, and in view of the negotiations for further suspension, the budget does not provide for any weapons tests in the fiscal year 1960. Under the circumstances, testing grounds in Nevada and the Pacific will be kept on a standby basis.

A satisfactory test suspension agreement, of course, is but a first step toward reducing the grave threat of nuclear warfare. This administration intends to explore all possible means of attaining armament control under adequate inspection guarantees despite the recent suspension of negotiations on means of avoiding surprise attack. I hope that we shall succeed. Until an acceptable agreement is reached, however, financial authorizations must be provided to continue development and production of nuclear weapons at current high levels to meet a variety of military needs.

Programs for the development of nuclear reactors for a variety of military propulsion and power applications will be continued at or above the high levels already attained.

Peaceful uses of atomic energy: At the second Conference on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy in Geneva during September 1958, the United States demonstrated the range and scope of its atomic research and development in the peaceful applications of this new energy source.

We plan to pursue energetically the promising technical approaches to civilian power reactors. We will emphasize efforts to reduce the cost of the reactor fuel cycle; such a reduction is basic to the attainment of economic atomic power. This budget provides for continuation of construction and for development, modification, and operation of a number of experimental and prototype power reactors owned by the Government, including operation of the atomic power station at Shippingport, Pa., the world's first nuclear powerplant devoted primarily to the production of electric energy. We will also continue substantial support of power reactor projects undertaken by groups outside of the Atomic Energy Commission.

The Commission in exercising its responsibility for direction of the civilian nuclear power development program will indentify desirable projects to advance that program. In carrying out these projects the Commission will continue to work with the Nation's electric power producers, both privately and publicly owned, and will continue to seek cooperation from industry in order to utilize its experience and resources. In addition, exchange of technical information with foreign countries will be expanded through participation in international undertakings, especially the European Atomic Energy Community—Euratom—and the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Further investigations into the possible use of nuclear explosions for such peaceful purposes as mining and earth moving, known as Project Plowshare, will be conducted.

Legislation will be proposed in this session to carry out the recommendations of the Joint Federal-State Action Committee in the field of atomic energy, which would recognize certain State responsibilities for the protection of public health and safety.

The budget provides for a higher level of research in the physical and life sciences. Three large particle accelerators in the multibillion electron volt range will be put in operation in 1960. These new accelerators, together with two already completed, will produce valuable new information on the basic structure of the atomic nucleus. More advanced experimental devices will be fabricated and operated to explore the control of thermonuclear reactions. Also, as part of the life science program, the budget includes funds for the operation of the new Brookhaven Medical Center, where the first nuclear reactor designed primarily for medical research purposes is located.

Stockpiling and defense production expansion: Most of the objectives for the stockpile of strategic and critical materials have been substantially reduced as a result of new studies, and most of these reduced objectives have been met. Consequently, the need for new procurement has been sharply decreased. At the same time deliveries under contracts made during the Korean conflict to encourage expanded production of defense materials are declining. Substantial reduction in the Government's purchase commitments has also been achieved through negotiation with contractors.

For these reasons, expenditures for stockpiling and expansion of defense production are estimated to decline from $378 million in fiscal 1959 to $265 million in 1960. However, because the present authority is inadequate, legislation will be needed in 1959 to authorize an additional $325 million to finance probable deliveries in the next 2 years under existing contracts for expanding defense production.

Mutual security program: The mutual security program is designed to help strengthen the defense and bolster the political and economic stability of the free world. Through it the United States shares in worldwide efforts to meet the Communist threat and to help improve the standard of living of people in less developed nations. For the fiscal year 1960, I am recommending new obligational authority of $3,930 million for the mutual security program. Expenditures are estimated to be $3,498 million, which is $383 million less than in fiscal 1959.

The military assistance portion of the mutual security program, which is primarily related to our military defense effort, is discussed in this section of the message. The other portions of the mutual security program are directed primarily toward promoting stability and economic growth in less developed countries. They are discussed in the international affairs and finance section of this message.

The accomplishments, future needs, techniques, and interrelationships of military and economic assistance need to be reassessed in the light of continuing change in military technology and strategy and in economic and political conditions, and with consideration of new Communist techniques in waging the cold war. Therefore, I recently appointed a committee of outstanding citizens, with experience in government, the Armed Forces, and business, to appraise the military assistance program and the relative emphasis the United States should place on military and economic aid. Accordingly, in the present budget, provisions for the mutual security program are subject to whatever recommendations I may make in connection with my later transmission to the Congress of this program.

Military assistance: In meeting the threats of Communist military aggression, the United States relies on 2 sources of strength, our own defense forces and the forces of more than 40 free-world nations, to many of whom we provide military assistance. Three of these, Korea, China, and Vietnam, are divided nations facing aggressive Communist-dominated forces across uneasy boundaries. Other recipients border on hostile Communist states, face potentially dangerous internal Communist movements, or are defenders of the great industrial communities of the free world.

[1] Compares with new obligational authority of $2,764 million enacted for 1958 and $3,516 million (including $225 million of anticipated supplemental appropriations for the Development Loan Fund) estimated for 1959.

Our primary concern is to insure the free world's ability to deter war and to retaliate against atack if deterrence fails. This we do through our own military capability and by providing intermediate and short-range missiles and other weapons to a number of our allies.

But the free world also faces the Communist threat of local aggression and military subversion. This danger is best met by conventional forces of the threatened countries. If necessary, the United States and other free-world nations would send reinforcements under the terms of regional pacts and bilateral agreements. Our allies, through their own efforts, are covering the bulk of the costs of operating and maintaining their forces. The United States supplies the critical military equipment that our partners cannot supply themselves and assists in the training of their officers and men.

The estimate of new obligational authority for military assistance in the fiscal year 1960 is $1,600 million. Expenditures in 1960, which will be made primarily from obligational authority enacted in previous years, are estimated to be $1,850 million, a reduction of $462 million from the amount estimated for 1959.

Nonmilitary defense: Closely allied to our military preparedness are the nonmilitary civil defense and mobilization programs. These were reorganized last year under a new Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization, for which increased appropriations are recommended for 1960. These programs are discussed with other programs concerned with industry and community facilities in the Commerce and Housing section of this message, under which these expenditures are classified.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS AND FINANCE

The United States is directing its diplomacy and devoting a substantial share of its economic resources to maintaining world peace and the security of free nations. In a world which still contains much want and suffering, it is a goal of our foreign policy to promote the economic stability and growth of less developed countries. This is as vital to us as it is to the countries concerned in the present world situation.

Although military danger persists, a strengthened free-world defense system enables less developed countries to concentrate much of their effort on needed economic progress. Increased international trade, private investment, public programs of lending, and technical assistance are essential to these efforts.

Expenditures for international affairs and finance are estimated to be $2.1 billion in the fiscal year 1960. This amount is $1.6 billion less than the expenditure estimate for 1959, mainly because of an additional and nonrecurring subscription of $1,375 million to the International Monetary Fund for which I am requesting authority for 1959.

Further expansion of trade was made possible when the Congress last year extended the reciprocal trade agreements legislation for 4 years. Under the authority of this act, we will seek additional agreements with friendly countries for mutually beneficial reductions of trade barriers.

The greater share of investment capital and technical ability in the United States and other highly developed countries is to be found in private hands. Less developed countries could benefit in greater measure from this large private reservoir by making investment more attractive to firms from other countries. The United States on its part invites negotiation of tax treaties designed to encourage its citizens to invest abroad. I will request legislation to expand the mutual security investment guarantee program, which offers guarantees to American private investors against losses on foreign investment that are caused by inconvertibility of currencies, expropriation, or war. The Export-Import Bank is actively seeking more private participation in its loans and is selling part of its portfolio to private investors, with the expectation of financing all of its operations in fiscal 1960 from receipts. The United States subscription to the capital of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development helps that agency in channeling private capital into public loans to less developed countries.

In addition, studies are being conducted by the Department of State and the Business Advisory Council of the Department of Commerce on ways to increase the role of private investment, management, and technical training abroad.

International financial organizations: To assist in economic development and in the sound expansion of trade, the United States participates with other countries in international financial organizations and also makes loans and grants directly to other nations. The multilateral and bilateral approaches complement each other and both are essential to the achievement of our objectives.

[1] Compares with new obligational authority of $3,983 million enacted for 1958 and $7,070 million (including $4,945 million of anticipated supplemental authorizations) estimated for 1959. The 1959 supplementals include proposed additional U.S. subscriptions to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development of $3,175 million and to the International Monetary Fund of $1,375 million.

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development extends loans for capital investment, and the International Monetary Fund promotes sound foreign exchange policies and encourages trade by assisting countries to overcome short-term foreign exchange problems. Both institutions have proved their worth as instruments of international financial cooperation. However, they cannot continue with the same effectiveness unless their present resources are supplemented. The executive directors of each institution have recommended an increase in member country subscriptions of 100 percent for the Bank and 50 percent for the Fund. I request that the Congress promptly approve the United States share of these recommended increases. Early approval will assure the other member countries that the increase in capitalization can be achieved quickly, and thus encourage prompt action by them.

For the additional United States quota in the International Monetary Fund, this budget includes $1,375 million as supplemental new obligational authority and as estimated expenditures in 1959. Of this amount, $344 million is to be paid in gold and the balance of $1,031 million is to be paid in the form of non-interest-bearing Treasury notes. The anticipated subscription to the International Bank of $3,175 million in the fiscal year 1959 is included in the budget as new obligational authority but not as an expenditure because it will be in the nature of a guarantee fund. On the strength of guarantees from all its members, the Bank is able to sell its bonds to private investors.

We are now negotiating with our Latin American neighbors concerning the establishment of an inter-American development banking institution which would facilitate the flow of public and private capital to economic development projects in this hemisphere and would supplement existing lending arrangements. This negotiation may result in a later request for legislation permitting United States participation in such an institution.

The administration is also currently studying the feasibility of establishing an international development association which would be affiliated with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and would make loans repayable wholly or partially in the borrower's currency.

Development Loan Fund: In 1957, the United States established the Development Loan Fund to provide capital on terms more favorable than are normally available from other sources, including repayment in foreign currencies. The Development Loan Fund finances both public and private projects that clearly contribute to the basic development of a country but do not qualify for private loans or for financing by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development or the Export-Import Bank.

The Development Loan Fund is now making loans in substantial numbers, and will have an increasing impact in assisting less developed economies. The Fund will have committed virtually its entire capital by the end of this month. Because of the vital importance to our foreign economic objectives of continuing this type of lending, a supplemental appropriation for fiscal 1959 of $225 million is recommended. This amount has already been authorized but not appropriated by the Congress. New obligational authority of $700 million is requested for fiscal 1960.

Defense support: Many of our allies among the less developed countries maintain large military forces required for the common defense despite the added strain placed on their national economies by the continuing cost of these forces. To help prevent the living conditions and political stability of these countries from deteriorating because of the economic burden of their military forces, the United States provides economic aid through appropriations for defense support. This aid takes the form of food, textiles, and other consumer goods, machinery, and raw materials. For fiscal 1960, new obligational authority of $835 million is requested for defense support.

Technical cooperation: Through technical cooperation under the mutual security program the United States assists less developed countries to acquire technical, administrative, and managerial skills. This improvement of skills must go hand in hand with the financial and material resources made available for development. For 1960 an increase of approximately $40 million in new obligational authority is requested. This will enable the United States to train more foreign technicians and provide more American experts and demonstrational equipment, with emphasis on expanding programs in Africa. The increase will also permit the United States to pay its share of the expected greater contributions by member nations to the new United Nations special fund for technical assistance projects.

Contingencies and other assistance: The mutual security program for 1960 includes a request for $200 million to be available for unforeseen contingencies and emergencies that may arise. In addition, appropriations will be requested for special assistance needed for the stability and progress of a number of countries not covered by other categories of aid and for such programs as our contributions to the worldwide malaria eradication program. Other special activities covered by the mutual security program are the United States contributions to the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and to refugee programs.

Legislation will be recommended to revise requirements on eligibility of countries for aid and thus provide the necessary additional flexibility to help nations that are resisting Soviet domination.

Conduct of foreign affairs: The Department of State plans to open several new diplomatic and consular posts and to increase its staff dealing with problems of Eastern Europe and international communism. Legislation will again be recommended to clarify the authority of the Secretary of State with regard to the issuance of passports. Legislation will also be recommended to reimburse Americans for certain property damage in Europe and the Far East during World War II for which compensation has not previously been authorized.

Foreign information and exchange activities: The U.S. Information Agency will continue the major rebuilding of its radio facilities begun in fiscal 1959 to improve the reception overseas of the Voice of America. The cultural content of our information programs will be increased, more American books will be distributed abroad, and greater emphasis will be given to English-language teaching.

COMMERCE AND HOUSING

Over the past 6 years this administration has fostered major advances in the programs of the Federal Government for aviation, highways, urban renewal, the postal service, and aid to small business.

Expenditures for all commerce and housing programs in the fiscal year 1960 are estimated at $2.2 billion, which is $1.3 billion less than the estimated expenditures for 1959. The estimated reduction occurs primarily in the Federal National Mortgage Association and the Post Office Department. Reduced purchases of low-cost housing mortgages and administrative steps to increase receipts will enable the Association to finance its 1960 operations entirely from its current collections. The proposed legislation to provide more adequate postal rates and the absence of the large retroactive 1959 payments for pay and transportation will sharply reduce net budget expenditures for the postal service.

[2] Compares with new obligational authority of $5,863 million enacted for 1958 and $3,210 million (including $715 million of anticipated supplemental authorizations) estimated for 1959.

Transportation and communication: In recent years, the Federal Government has had to take actions to meet emergency problems which have arisen in highways, railways, and aviation. These actions have sometimes been taken on a partial and piecemeal basis, without full consideration of the impact on other transportation programs. The Secretary of Commerce, at my request, is undertaking a comprehensive study of national transportation to identify emerging problems, redefine the appropriate Federal role, and recommend any legislation or administrative actions needed to assure the balanced development of our transportation system.

Space flight: The National Aeronautics and Space Administration, organized in 1958, is initiating extensive scientific investigations with satellites and probes to increase our understanding of the earth's outer atmosphere; the moon and the planets; the earth's gravitational, magnetic, and electric fields; radiation from space; and other phenomena. Programs in the field of meteorology will look toward the ultimate establishment of a worldwide system of satellite weather observation, and in the field of communications will continue to experiment with the use of satellites to serve as relays for the intercontinental transmission of messages, voice, and television. Projects to increase our ability to place heavy objects in space include development of high energy fuel rockets, a million-pound thrust engine, and a nuclear rocket engine.

To promote rapid advancement of space technology, a supplemental appropriation of $45 million is requested for 1959. Of this amount $21 million is for accelerating development of the technology of manned space flight and $24 million is for equipment and facilities for propulsion development and tracking. For 1960, I am requesting new obligational authority of $485 million, an increase of $135 million over the 1959 total; this includes the agency's aeronautical programs as well as its outer space activities.

Aviation: Under the new Federal Aviation Agency, traffic control activities, both civil and military, are now being combined into a single system more capable of handling safely and efficiently the increasing number of planes of varying speeds. Expenditures for construction and operation of needed new facilities for the Federal airways system are accelerating as programs authorized in earlier years move from plans to performance. A newly established program to augment civilian facilities with existing air defense radar is now in effect and is being accelerated. At the same time, the extensive research under way will help us to resolve the even more difficult air traffic control problems of the future.

Legislation for Federal grants to aid local airport construction expires at the end of fiscal 1959. As I stated last year in disapproving legislation greatly expanding this program, the Federal Government should now begin an orderly withdrawal from the airport grant program. Legislation will therefore be recommended to authorize a transitional program of Federal grants to share the costs of basic facilities, such as runways and control towers. One-half—instead of three-fourths as in the expiring law—of the funds appropriated would continue to be available to the States on the basis of the existing apportionment formula. The other one-half would be available for expenditure on a discretionary basis. Revenue-producing facilities, such as terminals and hangars, should be financed locally. This program will require $65 million of new obligational authority in fiscal 1960, with somewhat smaller amounts in each of the following 3 years.

For the Federal Aviation Agency as a whole, including direct programs and airport grants, I recommend that the Congress provide new obligational authority of $602 million in 1960. Expenditures are estimated to be $560 million, which is $94 million more than in 1959 and almost four times the amount spent for these purposes in 1956.

Subsidy payments by the Civil Aeronautics Board to commercial air carriers are continuing to rise, primarily because of the increasing service to small communities. Practically all of the $63 million in payments estimated for 1960 will go to local service carriers including helicopter operators. The loan-guarantee program administered by the Board, by helping local service carriers to finance new equipment, should in the long run reduce the need for subsidy. Moreover, the Board has announced its intention to suspend service at any point where adequate traffic has not developed after a fair trial. This "use it or lose it" policy should help to prevent permanent certification of uneconomic service.

Airway user charges: The magnitude of the burden on the general taxpayers for rising airway expenditures makes it essential that users of the facilities pay a greater share of the cost. To this end, legislation will be transmitted to raise the effective tax on aviation gasoline from 2 cents to 4½ cents in 1960 and to levy the same tax on jet fuels, which are now tax free. These increased costs should be includible, along with other airline costs, in determining the rates charged the ultimate users of air transportation. Receipts from taxes on aviation gasoline should not be used for highways; they should be retained in the general fund instead of being transferred to the highway trust fund. These changes in revenue laws will increase general fund receipts by an estimated $85 million in fiscal 1960 and by somewhat larger amounts in subsequent years.

Promotion of water transportation: The national maritime policies under which we now operate were laid down 23 years ago in the Merchant Marine Act of 1936. It is increasingly apparent that both the adequacy of and the need for those policies require reappraisal by the executive branch and the Congress. Accordingly, as a part of the general transportation study referred to earlier, the Secretary of Commerce will review the major problems of the shipping industry. As soon as his report is available, I hope the Congress will hold comprehensive hearings. We need new national policies and guidelines which can become effective at the earliest possible date.

At present, the bulk of our merchant marine consists of ships built during the years 1942 to 1946. Since existing law normally requires replacement of vessels at the age of 20 years, we must establish definitive policies on such questions as the realistic life span of merchant ships, the number of ships actually needed in our merchant marine, the extent to which their construction and operation should continue to be subsidized by the Government, and the pattern of trade routes that should be served by subsidized ships. There should also be an examination of present policies on such matters as foreign flag registration and the competition of foreign shipping.

In the meantime, the 1960 budget provides for a substantial ship construction program. New obligational authority of $129 million is recommended for construction subsidies and related programs in 1960. This appropriation will be used for replacing 14 needed cargo and combination passenger and cargo ships. It is not contemplated that any of it will be used for the passenger superliners authorized last year. I request that the Congress reconsider its action requiring that these superliners be built under direct Federal loans, which under present law would be made at an interest rate below that paid by the Government itself for comparable borrowed money.

The first nuclear powered merchant ship, the N.S. Savannah, is expected to be completed in January 1960. Research on improved nuclear propulsion of merchant ships is continuing. Legislation should be enacted to assure that nuclear materials may be distributed for use as fuel on United States merchant ships.

Some savings in maintenance costs will be realized by the Maritime Administration through disposal of surplus shipyards which it owns and through reducing preservation work on over 1,000 Liberty ships no longer suitable for mobilization.

Expenditures for operating subsidies to shipowners, estimated at $130 million, will be unchanged from 1959. A maximum of 330 ships are expected to be eligible for operating subsidies, including a limited number for new Great Lakes routes.

Urgently needed repair and modernization of Coast Guard equipment and facilities are provided for in the increase of $20 million in new obligational authority over the 1959 amount. This will not only improve the protection given life and property but will also save operating and maintenance costs in the future.

Highways: The comprehensive highway program enacted in 1956 established the principle that highway users, rather than the general taxpayers, should pay the cost of Federal-aid highways. The larger contract authority enacted in 1958, however, will create a cumulative deficit in the highway trust fund under present law of $241 million by the end of the fiscal year 1960, and about $2.2 billion by the end of 1962.

To maintain the trust fund on a self-supporting basis, I am recommending a temporary increase of 1½ cents in highway fuel taxes, to become effective July 1, 1959, and to remain in effect through the fiscal year 1964. This increase is necessary to assure availability of the entire 1961 and 1962 Federal-aid highway authorizations without waiving provisions in the basic legislation which limit expenditures to the amounts available in the trust fund.

In addition, as I have previously recommended, the forest and public land highways, which are an integral part of the Federal-aid system but are now financed from general budget funds, should be transferred to trust fund financing, and the revenues from aviation gasoline taxes which are now allocated to highway construction should be retained in the general fund. The net effect of these changes is that all Federal expenditures for Federal-aid highways will be paid from the highway trust fund and the fund itself will be financed by highway users.

Postal service: Since 1953 this administration has been using every available method to improve the efficiency of the postal service, and to place its operations on a self-supporting basis, except for a few subsidized uses authorized by law.

In the last session the Congress took an important step by enacting the first comprehensive increases in postal rates in a quarter century. The increases, however, were considerably short of the minimum necessary amounts which I had requested and were made more inadequate by pay increases for postal employees for which no additional financing was provided. As a result, new obligational authority of $522 million would be required next year, under existing legislation, to finance the postal deficit and the subsidized public services.

The Postal Policy Act of 1958 established, for the first time on a statutory basis, the principle that postal rates should be adequate to cover all costs of operating the postal establishment with certain exceptions. Consistent with this requirement, further revisions in rates should be enacted adequate to provide at least $350 million of additional revenues in 1960. Legislation for this purpose will be proposed in the near future.

An appropriation of $172 million is requested to reimburse the Post Office Department for public service costs not required to be covered by postal revenues. However, the concept of public services as defined in the act requires excessive costs to be charged against general Treasury revenues. Therefore, the Congress should correct this situation by amending the Postal Policy Act of 1958 to prevent these excessive charges and to assure a more equitable sharing of postal operating costs between mail users and the general public.

These increases in rates, together with the appropriations for public service items, should provide adequate funds, not only to meet the expanded requirements for postal service in 1960, but also to carry forward the research and capital programs already under way. As a result we can make needed progress in acquiring modern facilities and equipment adequate to take care of the steadily increasing mail volume in later years.

Housing and community development: A year ago I presented to the Congress a carefully considered program for revision and extension of the basic statutes governing several major housing and community development programs. Adjournment of the Congress without enactment of these recommendations has made it necessary to adopt temporary expedients to handle continuing applications for urban renewal capital grants and college housing loans until new authorizations can be made available. Emergency legislation has already been proposed to the Congress to provide the funds necessary for these programs and to increase the mortgage insurance authority available for the remainder of the fiscal year. In this message I shall emphasize comprehensive long-run changes needed in this important area.

Urban renewal: The Federal Government is providing major assistance to communities in halting urban deterioration and replacing it with orderly redevelopment. Approximately 650 urban renewal projects are now under way or completed in more than 380 cities. These will involve an ultimate net cost estimated at about $2 billion, of which over $1.3 billion will be supplied by Federal capital grants. The Federal Government also has outstanding loans and loan guarantee commitments totaling about $700 million for temporary financing of these projects.

When urban renewal legislation was not enacted by the Congress last year, authority subject to the President's discretion had to be used to make available $100 million for capital grants. Since this authorization will soon be exhausted the emergency legislation already proposed contains an additional $100 million for 1959 and also $100 million to restore the discretionary authority for future emergencies.

The Congress should act promptly upon four major revisions in the urban renewal laws:

(a) Assure the States and cities of continuing Federal support for urban renewal by authorizing capital grants of $1,350 million for the next 6 years. For each of the first 3 years, 1960–62, $250 million should be authorized, with $200 million annually for 1963–65. This forward authorization, together with administrative steps already taken to allocate the available funds equitably, should enable each community to develop a long-term communitywide plan which may then be financed in realistic annual installments.

(b) In accordance with the predominantly local benefits received, require States and cities to assume a gradually increasing share of the expense of buying and improving the land and of other net project costs. On projects initiated in fiscal 1960, the Federal Government should continue to pay two-thirds of the net cost and the State and local community one-third. In succeeding fiscal years the State and local share should increase by steps to 40, 45, and finally 50 percent in 1963–65. The increased non-Federal share should not prove onerous, since much of this contribution normally is provided through construction of improvements otherwise necessary and the increased property values in the completed projects will usually permit the local costs to be recovered in increased tax receipts, often within 10 years or less.

(c) Encourage more careful planning by requiring the States or communities to assume their share of the cost of planning from the start. At present the Federal Government advances the full amount for planning and the local share is paid only if the project actually goes forward.

(d) Aid nonresidential urban renewal projects by authorizing $150 million in loan commitments to assist local agencies to obtain financing from private sources. Projects of this type often can yield such substantial increases in property tax revenues that local communities should be able to finance them without requiring Federal grants.

Public housing programs: By the end of the fiscal year 1960, over 475,000 federally aided public housing units will be occupied by about 2 million people, and the additional 110,000 units already authorized will be under contract for Federal contributions but will not yet be constructed. These 585,000 units should meet most of the demand for such housing by low-income families displaced by highway construction, urban renewal, or similar governmental action in the next few years. I shall not ask for authorization for any additional units.

Insurance of private mortgages: Through the mortgage insurance programs of the Federal Housing Administration and the loan guarantee program of the Veterans' Administration, the Federal Government is underwriting private credit for a substantial share of all houses built and purchased. Twice during the past calendar year, however, orderly planning and financing of home building have been jeopardized when increases in applications for mortgage insurance exhausted or threatened to exhaust the maximum amount of insurance authorized by law. The emergency housing legislation already recommended to the Congress would increase the existing limitation by $6 billion. I urge that the limitation be completely removed in general legislation so that this self-supporting program will be available at all times to insure adequate financing of housing.

Several other major legislative actions should be taken to permit insurance programs of the Federal Housing Administration to meet demonstrated needs:

(a) Enact permanent authority to insure property improvement loans;

(b) Authorize interest rates for insured armed services and other rental and cooperative housing mortgages adequate to assure private financing of such loans;

(c) Establish a new insurance program for mortgages on rental housing for elderly persons to replace the present limited program;

(d) Broaden the special mortgage insurance for families displaced by urban renewal and other Government programs to include more effective aids for rental housing;

(e) Extend for another year the authority to insure mortgages for military housing;

(f) Increase the maximum amounts of mortgages on sales housing eligible for insurance.

Veterans' housing loans: The direct housing loan program of the Veterans Administration was extended and liberalized last spring as an antirecession measure. Requests for direct loans now exceed available funds in large part because the law does not permit interest rates that are adequate to attract private financing of guaranteed loans. I urge the Congress to act promptly to authorize the same flexibility in interest rates for the Veterans' Administration as the Federal Housing Administration already has for comparable programs, and to extend the voluntary home mortgage credit program. These two actions should enable private lenders to meet a large share of the unsatisfied demand by veterans for Government loans, and will also reduce budget expenditures.

Mortgage purchases: Under its special assistance programs the Federal National Mortgage Association purchases certain types of insured or guaranteed mortgages. From 1956 through 1958 expenditures for these purchases have been exceeded by receipts from repayments and from sales of mortgages acquired under earlier purchase programs. In 1959, however, mortgage purchases will exceed repayments and sales, and net expenditures will jump to an estimated $678 million, as a result of the billion-dollar program authorized last spring by the Congress to purchase mortgages on low-cost housing at terms favorable to the borrowers.

For the fiscal year 1960, the Association will endeavor to cover its expenditures for mortgage purchases by receipts from mortgage sales and other sources. To make this possible without diverting the flow of new funds from the mortgage market, an estimated $335 million in Government-owned mortgages will be offered to investors in exchange for certain Government bonds which then will be retired.

To avoid unnecessary budget outlays in future years the Housing and Home Finance Agency is increasing its efforts to obtain private financing for programs now largely financed with special assistance funds. These efforts, aided by those of the Department of Defense, have already proved successful in obtaining adequate private credit for the armed services family housing program which, until last spring, had been financed mainly from Government funds. New commitments of over $400 million are anticipated for 1960, mainly for the purchase of mortgages on housing in urban renewal areas and housing for the relocation of families displaced by governmental actions. Since the Agency is now permitted to control the prices at which it purchases such mortgages, the rapidly growing financing requirements can and should be met in substantial degree from private sources.

College housing: No additional authorizations were provided for college housing loans by the Congress last year. Accordingly, while processing of loan applications has continued, only limited new commitments have been made. The emergency legislation already before the Congress would provide $200 million in new lending authority at once. This should be adequate to meet the needs for loans for at least the remainder of the fiscal year 1959.

For the fiscal year 1960, no additional new obligational authority is requested for college housing loans. However, an estimated $50 million in obligations owned by the Government will be offered to investors in exchange for certain Government bonds which then will be retired. This amount will be available for loans to take care of unusual cases during a transitional period from direct Government loans to other means of financing college housing needs.

About 60 percent of the demand for college housing loans in recent years has come from State universities and other public institutions. Such institutions normally can borrow privately on relatively favorable terms because of Federal tax exemptions on the income from their obligations. Nevertheless, they have been encouraged to borrow from the Federal Government by the low subsidized interest rates required by law since 1955. For the remainder of the present direct loan program, the law should be amended to remove this incentive to Federal borrowing by (a) denying eligibility for loans to any institution qualified to issue tax exempt securities and (b) placing in the law a requirement that interest rates cover costs on loans to all remaining eligible borrowers.

For the future, and in order that there may be no hiatus in providing Federal assistance where it is most needed, this budget suggests that the Congress include in general housing legislation provisions relating to college housing which would authorize a limited loan guarantee program. However, it seems to me that the continued needs of colleges and universities for housing should be considered within the framework of the general problems of education. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare is now concluding its studies of these problems.

Small business: Recent enactment of the Small Business Investment Act and of legislation making the Small Business Administration a permanent agency is substantially strengthening Federal assistance to small businesses. New loan commitments to State and local development corporations and to newly authorized small-business investment companies are estimated at $73 million in 1960, thereby putting to work a much larger amount of private capital. Efforts will be continued to assist small businesses in obtaining a fair share of Federal procurement, to advise them on Government property disposals, and to provide them with technical and management assistance. The new program of grants for research on small-business problems and counseling for small firms is getting under way. The expansion in loans can be financed largely by increased receipts anticipated from loans made in prior years, so that net expenditures of $164 million for the agency's business-aid programs will be only $7 million greater than in 1959.

Area assistance: In disapproving the area redevelopment legislation enacted in the closing days of the last Congress, I expressed the hope that the next Congress would promptly pass a more soundly conceived program. The revised legislation which this administration is proposing would:

(a) Place the major responsibility on local citizens;

(b) Authorize loans to areas where unemployment has been well above the national average for 2 or more years;

(c) Authorize grants for technical assistance to these areas and to localities dependent upon a single industry or situated in rural low-income areas;

(d) Place leadership in the Department of Commerce, with the assistance of other Federal agencies.

To finance this program, I recommend initial appropriations in fiscal 1960 of $55 million. Based on the successful, comparable programs conducted by certain States, these appropriations should be adequate to meet the Federal share for redevelopment of all areas expected to qualify under the proposed legislation.

Civil and defense mobilization: Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1958 merged the former Office of Defense Mobilization and the Federal Civil Defense Administration into the new Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization. This merger is now substantially completed and permits improved coordination of our nonmilitary defense. New obligational authority of $87 million is recommended for 1960.

Methods for formalizing the means by which the Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization utilizes appropriate resources of other departments and agencies are now being studied. The OCDM budget includes $12 million for financing the assigned responsibilities of such agencies in civil defense and mobilization programs.

It also includes $21 million to carry out legislation enacted last year for sharing with the States the cost of civil defense personnel and administration, and for providing radiological monitoring devices to States and cities for training and operational use.

During the past year the administration accelerated a program of public education on the effects of fallout with the aim of stimulating preparations for fallout protection. The new obligational authority for OCDM includes $11 million for the continuing support of this program and for research and demonstration on shelters.

AGRICULTURE AND AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES

Expenditures for agriculture and agricultural resources are surpassed in magnitude in the budget only by outlays for national security and for interest on the public debt. The continuing heavy impact of agricultural programs on the budget is mainly the result of the continued high volume of agricultural production and our long established and now largely outmoded system of farm price supports. This system of price supports is not suited to the technically more efficient agriculture that has been rapidly developing in this country. The system provides production incentives that impede needed adjustments and encourages the production of surpluses which, in turn, result in increased Government outlays for commodity loans and purchases, and for storage and interest costs.

Legislation is urgently needed, therefore, to make further revisions in the price support program. Recommendations will be sent to the Congress in a special message on agriculture. In this budget I am recommending extension of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (Public Law 480) and the Sugar Act, major changes in the rural credit programs, and a reduction in the advance authorization for the agricultural conservation program.

Estimated expenditures for agricultural programs in fiscal year 1960 are $6 billion, which is $779 million less than the estimate for the current year, but $1.6 billion more than was actually spent in 1958. The main part of the decrease expected in 1960 is in the soil bank program, because the acreage reserve portion terminated at the end of the 1958 crop year.

[2] Compares with new obligational authority of $6,257 million enacted for 1958 and $5,414 million (including $1,241 million for anticipated supplemental authorizations) estimated for 1959.

Total new authority to incur obligations requested for agriculture and agricultural resources in 1960 is $5.1 billion. This amount includes, among others, $2 billion to restore the capital impairment of the Commodity Credit Corporation resulting from price support losses, and $1.2 billion to reimburse the Corporation for estimated costs and losses under other programs financed through that agency. All of these Commodity Credit Corporation costs and losses are reflected in budget expenditures of 1959 and prior years.

Price supports and related programs: Expenditures for price supports and other programs to stabilize farm prices and farm income will comprise about 75 percent of total expenditures for agriculture and agricultural resources in 1960.

Because of the many uncertainties with respect to future production, consumption, and exports of farm commodities, it is difficult to estimate the expenditures required for price supports. The budget assumes that crop yields in 1959 will be lower on the average than the record yields of 1958, but that a part of the land that was in the acreage reserve of the soil bank will be used to produce additional price-supported crops in the 1959 crop year. The shift of this idle land to crops will be a factor contributing to continued heavy Commodity Credit Corporation expenditures under existing laws.

Because of the technological revolution that is still increasing productivity in agriculture, farmers continue to produce more than can be marketed at home and abroad. Under our present open-end price support system, this excess production results in increased Federal loans and purchases and increased carryover inventories. Total loans and commodity inventories of the Commodity Credit Corporation on June 30, 1958, amounted to $7.1 billion. This accumulation is expected to rise to $9.1 billion by June 30, 1959, and still further to nearly $10.5 billion by June 30, 1960. To prevent continuation of huge Federal outlays, legislation will be proposed to make badly needed changes in the price support system.

Titles I and II of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 expire on December 31, 1959. Sales of farm commodities for foreign currencies under title I of this act and donations of commodities for relief purposes under title II have provided a temporary method of coping with some of the continuing excess production of farm commodities. This budget proposes extension of titles I and II of this act for 1 additional year, with an increase from $6,250 million to $7,750 million in the authorization for the Commodity Credit Corporation to incur costs and losses under title I.

The International Wheat Agreement between wheat importing and wheat exporting countries expires on July 31, 1959. The desirability of extending this agreement is currently being studied.

Although the Sugar Act, which serves to stabilize domestic sugar prices and assure adequate domestic supplies, does not expire until December 31, 1960, it is recommended that the act be extended at this time in order to give sugar producers needed time for production planning.

Agricultural credit programs: The Rural Electrification Administration has made a major contribution to the development of rural America. Over 95 percent of our farms now have central station electric service compared with 11 percent in 1935. Expanding use of power in the areas served by electric cooperatives, however, require substantial amounts of new capital every year to provide additional generating capacity and heavier transmission and distribution facilities. Rural industrial and nonfarm residential consumers, which already account for about one-half of total power sales by the REA system, are increasing their power consumption much faster than are farm consumers and comprise about 75 percent of the new customers being added. The prospective size of new capital requirements, together with the present state of development of the rural electric cooperatives, emphasizes the need to broaden the sources of capital from which the REA system may obtain the funds to finance needed expansion.

I am again proposing that legislation be enacted to assist both electric and telephone borrowers to obtain financing from private sources.

A reduction in the levels of the direct loan programs of the Farmers Home Administration is recommended in this budget. Direct loans for farmownership and for soil and water conservation are supplemented with private loans insured by the Federal Government. In order to attract additional private credit, the Secretary of Agriculture, under authority of present law, has raised the interest rate to be paid on insured farmownership and soil and water loans from 4½ to 5 percent.

Legislation will also be proposed to place the Farmers Home Administration on a revolving fund basis of operation. Under such legislation funds received in repayment of previous loans would be available for new loans and administrative expenses.

Conservation of agricultural resources: Payments to farmers representing a sharing of the costs of conservation practices performed during the 1959 crop year will require $197 million in expenditures and $242 million in new obligational authority for fiscal 1960. These amounts are needed to pay for the advance authorization in the 1959 Agricultural Appropriation Act which exceeded my recommendation. For the 1960 crop year a reduced advance authorization of $100 million is recommended. This amount, along with other public programs in support of soil and water conservation, will provide substantial incentives for farmers to continue the soil and water conservation practices required to maintain our agricultural resource base.

With termination of the acreage reserve, many farmowners are expected to place larger acreage in the soil bank conservation reserve. This shift, together with an increase in rental payments, will result in an increase in expenditures from $141 million in fiscal 1959 to $343 million in 1960. The budget provides for an upper limit of $375 million on payments in the 1960 calendar year, which is the same as was provided for 1959.

No additional funds are recommended for 1960 to initiate construction on watershed projects under the Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention Act. However, funds available from the 1959 appropriation will permit starting construction on 60 projects in 1959 and 40 more in 1960.

Research and other agricultural services: Expenditures for research, education, and other agricultural services financed from direct appropriations will be about the same in the fiscal year 1960 as in 1959, more than double the amount spent for these purposes in 1954. Research in foreign countries to increase industrial uses of agricultural commodities will be strengthened through the use of foreign currencies obtained from the sale of farm commodities abroad.

NATURAL RESOURCES

Expenditures for the development and conservation of natural resources are estimated at $1.7 billion in 1960, approximately the same as in 1959, which itself will be higher than any previous year. About two-thirds of the expenditures in 1960 will be for the development of water resources.

Work on many resource development projects under way was accelerated in the latter part of the fiscal year 1958 to aid in economic recovery, and the higher rate of construction has continued into 1959. To carry forward projects started in 1959 and earlier years will require some increases in appropriations for 1960. In view of this record program, no funds are provided in the 1960 budget for starting construction of new water resources projects. Further, the budget contemplates stretching out construction on some projects under way where this can be done without stopping work on the projects. Other programs will be continued at or below current levels. Even with these economies, total expenditures in 1960 for resources programs will remain at a record level.

Water resources: Flood control, navigation, irrigation, and related activities of the Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation are expected to require expenditures of $1.1 billion in 1960—an alltime high. Of this amount, an estimated $869 million will be spent on construction.

In the years after 1960, an amount of $5 billion will be required to complete going projects, and annual expenditures in 1961 and 1962 will be even higher than in 1960. In view of this extremely high level of commitments and expenditures the budget contemplates that in some cases work on new starts, for which appropriations were made for 1959, will be limited in that year largely to preconstruction activities, including land acquisition. No additional funds are requested to start new projects in 1960.

[1] Compares with new obligational authority of $1,456 million enacted for 1958 and $1,943 million (including $243 million of anticipated supplemental authorizations) estimated for 1959.

In the interest of sound water resources programs in future years, funds are recommended to continue investigations and advance planning and to assemble basic data for future projects. I continue to believe that, as part of sound advance planning, the Fryingpan-Arkansas project in Colorado should again be considered for authorization, but no appropriation to start construction should be enacted until the overall budgetary situation is more favorable.

Research will continue on processes for converting sea water and brackish water to fresh water. Design work and site selection for demonstration plants, initiated in fiscal 1959 under legislation enacted during the past session of the Congress, will be advanced in 1960.

One of the most pressing needs for achieving a sound water resources policy is the establishment of a consistent basis for cost sharing on flood control projects. Several distinguished commissions have emphasized the disruptive effects of requiring the Federal agencies responsible for flood protection works to operate under different and confusing cost-sharing standards. Legislation will be proposed to set a uniform basis of cost sharing for all projects not yet under construction that produce identifiable flood protection benefits to local areas. Under such legislation, non-Federal interests would bear at least 30 percent of the cost, with the value of lands, easements, and rights-of-way contributed locally counted as part of the non-Federal share. Operation and maintenance would be a State or local responsibility.

I again urge the Congress to take action early in this session to authorize the sale of revenue bonds by the Tennessee Valley Authority in order that the Authority may meet its needs for new generating facilities. Under such legislation the Congress would retain budgetary control of the program. This budget includes a supplemental authorization for fiscal 1959 of $200 million under the proposed revenue bond legislation.

To help improve financial management, legislation will be recommended for the establishment of revolving funds for the Bonneville, Southeastern, and Southwestern Power Administrations in the Department of the Interior. These Administrations market hydroelectric power generated at certain dams constructed by the Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation. With this legislation, part of the receipts from these power sales would be used directly, subject to such limitations as may be included in appropriation acts, for financing the operation and maintenance expenses of the marketing agencies, thus reflecting the results of these business-type operations in the budget on a net basis.

Other resource programs: In 1960, expenditures for conserving and developing the resources of the national forests, public-domain lands, and Indian lands will be somewhat lower than in 1959. Receipts from management of these lands are estimated at $300 million in 1960, an increase of $22 million over the 1959 estimate. In accordance with this administration's policy to obtain a fair return for use of federally owned resources, legislation will be proposed to revise the fee schedule for noncompetitive oil and gas leases on lands in the public domain.

Scheduled construction on Indian reservations will permit progress in providing roads, irrigation and water systems, and buildings and utilities. The major share of building construction will go for schools for Indian children who reside on lands held in trust by the United States.

Expenditures in 1960 for fish and wildlife resources will be at about the present level. An increase is recommended to acquire lands for additional wildlife areas in 1960. Also, to aid the fishing industry, the fishery loan fund will be augmented by $3 million and mortgages for fishing vessels will be insured by the Bureau of Commercial Fisheries in the Department of the Interior.

This budget provides for the continued improvement of our national parks and the development of the national forests for recreational use. A supplemental 1959 appropriation is recommended to enable the recently established Outdoor Recreation Resources Review Commission to undertake the first comprehensive survey of outdoor recreational resources and needs. It is anticipated that the Commission's findings and recommendations will provide guides for Federal, State, local, and private interests in considering how to meet the increasing demands for outdoor recreation.

Under present methods of utilizing natural gas, helium is largely being dissipated into the atmosphere. This unique gas is needed for atomic energy and missile programs as well as industrial welding and certain types of aircraft. Legislation is recommended to conserve for future use the Nation's vital helium. Maximum private participation and financing in accomplishing this objective are contemplated.

LABOR AND WELFARE

The Federal Government's labor and welfare services have grown significantly in the last decade as new programs have been enacted and old ones broadened and expanded. Budget expenditures for labor and welfare will have doubled between 1950 and 1960. Including payments from trust funds as well as budget funds, there is an almost fourfold increase, from $5.3 billion in 1950 to an estimated $19.1 billion in 1960. Much of the increase in budget outlays has been for grants-in-aid to States and local governments, which in 1960 will comprise three-fourths of budget expenditures for labor and welfare programs.

Total expenditures for these programs are estimated at $4.1 billion. This is $682 million more than was spent for these programs in 1958 but $251 million less than the estimate for the current year. The decrease from 1959 to 1960 occurs chiefly because of the expiration on April 1, 1959, of the antirecession legislation for temporary Federal unemployment compensation payments. Excluding these temporary payments, estimated expenditures in fiscal 1960 are $161 million greater than in 1959. Significant increases are provided in 1960 for the defense education program initiated in fiscal 1959 and for higher public assistance grants as required by legislation enacted by the last Congress.

While continuing to support programs necessary to stimulate greater State and local effort in areas of critical national concern, this administration has consistently endeavored to strengthen our system of government by encouraging State and local governments to assume responsibility for many public needs which they can provide well without relying on Federal aid at all, or by financing a larger share from their own revenue sources. Therefore, toward this objective, legislation is again recommended to—

(a) Discontinue Federal grants for vocational education and for waste treatment works construction and adjust Federal revenue laws as recommended by the Joint Federal-State Action Committee so the States can assume full responsibility for these programs starting in the fiscal year 1961;

(b) Modify the provisions for aid to schools in areas affected by Federal activities;

(c) Increase State and local participation in the financing of public assistance programs.

Specific proposals will be transmitted to the Congress during this session on each of these matters and I urge the Congress to speed their enactment.

The rapid growth in our population, when added to the increasing complexity of our economy as a result of rapid technological advances, brings us face to face with increasingly difficult problems in the fields of health, education, and welfare. We cannot continue to deal with these problems on a year-to-year basis. We must, as a Nation, arrive at an understanding on long-term goals. At the same time we must endeavor to reach an understanding on the respective contributions that should be made by government at all levels and by private groups in order to achieve these goals. I have announced in my state of the Union message a series of studies designed to facilitate the reaching of such consensus.

Science, research, and education: Expenditures for basic research, which provide the foundation for advancements in applied research and technology and assist in the support of our universities, will continue upward in 1960. Expenditures for the program of research grants by the National Science Foundation are expected to reach $80 million, an increase of $20 million above 1959 and more than double the 1958 amount. Basic research in other departments and agencies will continue to increase over past years. For all agencies combined, it is estimated that Federal expenditures for basic research will be about $500 million in the fiscal year 1960.

In the field of education, primarily in science and mathematics, this budget provides for increased expenditures by the National Science Foundation and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare for programs initiated or enlarged in fiscal 1959.

The National Science Foundation programs are carried out through fellowships to individuals and grants to institutions of higher learning. They are chiefly directed toward providing encouragement and opportunity for capable students to undertake careers in science, improving courses of instruction in sciences, and providing advanced training for scientists and science teachers. For example, in 1960, 28,000 teachers—including one out of every six science and mathematics teachers in our high schools—will have the opportunity to attend institutes devoted to the improvement of teaching in these fields. Expenditures for the science education programs of the Foundation in the fiscal year 1960 are estimated at $60 million, an increase of $9 million above the 1959 level, and four times the expenditures in 1958.

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, under the National Defense Education Act of 1958, is initiating a program of repayable contributions to loan funds for college students and of grants-in-aid to States. The grants, which will run for 4 years, will help pay for the testing and counseling of high school students, the equipping of laboratories in the secondary schools, and related activities. The budget includes a supplemental appropriation for 1959 of $75 million to augment the $40 million already available in fiscal 1959 for the defense education program and provides $150 million in new obligational authority for fiscal 1960 pending further experience with the program.

Schools in federally affected areas: Although education is primarily a responsibility of State and local governments, the Federal Government has an obligation to assist communities where large numbers of children of persons engaged in Federal activities impose an extraordinary burden on local school districts.

Programs to provide financial assistance to districts thus affected have been extended and liberalized several times since they were first started in 1950, despite the fact that they should be modified to assure greater and more equitable local responsibility. The Federal Government's responsibility is clear for those children whose parents both work and live on Federal property, and do not, therefore, pay local property taxes. On the other hand, it is only proper for the communities to bear the cost of educating children of those Federal personnel who, like all other residents, pay local taxes directly or indirectly for the support of public schools. In accordance with these principles, legislation will be recommended to place these aid programs on a more sound and equitable basis.

This budget includes appropriations of $181 million for these programs for the fiscal year 1960, the same amount as the appropriations provided by the Congress for fiscal 1959.

Government statistical and economic services: The rapid growth of our economy and the effective operation of markets for goods and services requires prompt and accurate national statistical information, as well as improved organization in the Government for its analysis.

This budget recommends a major increase in funds for obtaining fundamental economic and demographic data through the Eighteenth Decennial Census. It also provides for improvements in the compilation of regular price, construction, manpower, and related data to help produce more sensitive and useful information on which many private and Government policies are based. Additional price data will be collected for the Consumer Price Index by the Department of Labor, and a start will be made toward a revision of the index, which is to be completed in 5 years. Preparation of statistics on construction activities will be consolidated in the Department of Commerce. The responsibility for planning and publication of current comprehensive employment and unemployment statistics will be centralized in the Department of Labor, where the work on labor requirements will be strengthened.

Labor and manpower: The growth of our economy depends in large measure upon the full use of our manpower resources and the effective operation of the free labor market. The Federal-State employment security system, with an estimated 54,000 State employees in 1,800 local offices, makes an important contribution to the functioning of that market. This budget provides $329 million of appropriations for grants to States for administration of employment service and unemployment insurance offices.

These grants are presently financed from an earmarked Federal tax which flows through the general budget even though it is not available for general Government purposes. Legislation is proposed to place an amount equal to the proceeds from this tax directly in a trust fund from which the necessary grants can be appropriated, and any balance used as a reserve for employment security and unemployment purposes. The administration of this program would then be financed in the same way as other social insurance programs.

Our unemployment compensation system has again demonstrated its importance in providing income for the unemployed and thereby supporting the economy while alleviating hardship. Temporary assistance of the kind provided by the Temporary Unemployment Compensation Act of 1958 is in no sense a substitute for widening the coverage of unemployment compensation and extending the duration of benefits and increasing benefit amounts under the Federal-State system. I have many times urged such action. I urge it again now with added conviction as a result of last year's experience.

I am again urging prompt enactment of effective statutory protection for workers and the public from the racketeering, corruption, and abuse of democratic processes which have been disclosed in the affairs of certain labor unions. Additional statutory protection in the field of labor-management relations will likewise be proposed to promote equity and stability in the relations among workers, unions, and employers. I shall make specific proposals in a special message on labor affairs.

Legislation is also recommended to provide equal pay for equal work, to revise the laws relating to hours of work on Federal construction projects, and to extend the coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act so that several million more workers can receive its protection.

Last year Congress enacted legislation requiring regular reports and public disclosure of the provisions and finances of welfare and pension plans. Every effort is being made in administering the law to protect potential beneficiaries, and amendments to strengthen the basic authority will also be sought. In addition, the administration recommended and the Congress authorized enforcement of safety codes for longshoremen and harbor workers to overcome certain hazardous conditions in the maritime industry. Supplemental appropriations for administering these new laws are recommended for 1959.

Public health: Expenditures by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare for health programs, including those for research and construction of health facilities in fiscal 1960 are estimated at $675 million—more than double the amount 5 years earlier.

Large and rapid increases in outlays for medical research and training by the National Institutes of Health have occurred simultaneously with expansion in related research by other agencies. In 1960, expenditures for such purposes are estimated to increase to $254 million, which is more than three times the amount 5 years ago. The impact of this expanded effort on medical schools and research institutions, as well as its implications for broader policy in education and health programs, requires careful appraisal. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is completing a review of our long-term objectives in the field of medical research and training. The results of this study in terms of program and costs, including indirect costs, will be made available to the Congress.

Another large component of the health programs consists of construction of hospitals and waste treatment works through grants, and of health research facilities through grants and direct financing. Expenditures in the fiscal year 1960 for these programs are estimated at $186 million, which is $8 million more than in the previous peak year 1959. Proposed new obligational authority has been reduced in a manner consistent with the policy outlined earlier in this message relative to public works. For hospital construction, the Congress provided a sharply increased 1959 appropriation for antirecession purposes, a sizable portion of which will be available for obligation in 1960.

The future of our health programs depends on an adequate supply of qualified personnel. Legislation is recommended to extend the programs, which expire on June 30, 1959, for training of professional nurses and for graduate training of public health personnel.

Social security and public assistance: The Federal Government's responsibility for income maintenance should be mainly discharged through contributory, self-supporting social insurance. Today we have social insurance programs which help protect nearly all our people from loss of income due to old age, permanent disability, or death of the wage earner. The Federal old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system provides basic protection for nearly all workers; military personnel and railroad workers are covered in addition by special Federal systems; and Federal civilian employees are protected by special laws. The growth of the social security program since World War II is indicated below:

Old-age, survivors, and disability insurance

[Fiscal years]

	1946 actual	1960 estimate
Percent of workers covered	60	90
Total annual benefits paid out (in millions)	$321	$10,510
Average monthly number of beneficiaries (in millions)	1.3	13.7

Despite this tremendous growth, and despite the primary responsibility of State and local governments for the economic security needs not met by social insurance, Federal expenditures for public assistance grants to States will continue to rise in 1960—chiefly because of the 1958 amendments to the Social Security Act. Legislation raising the Federal matching share or extending Federal participation to new groups has been enacted five times in the last six Congresses. The following table shows the growth in this program in the period since 1946:

Public assistance grants

[Fiscal years]

	1946 actual	1960 estimate
Federal expenditures (in millions)	$446	$2,018
Federal share in total expenditures (percent)	44	57
Average monthly number of recipients (in millions)	2.8	5.7

Under the authority of recent legislation, an Advisory Council is being appointed by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to study the whole structure and financing of our public assistance programs. I have asked the Secretary to present to this Council, at the earliest possible time, the issue of what constitutes an appropriate Federal share in these programs. I have also requested him to develop recommendations, after consulting the Council, which can be presented to the Congress to increase State and local participation in the cost of the public assistance programs beginning in 1961. In this connection, I believe we must keep in mind the fact that the Federal share of such expenditures has increased to more than 57 percent on an overall basis and runs as high as 80 percent in many cases. I believe that this trend is inconsistent with our American system of government. If it continues, the control of these programs will shift from our State and local governments to the Federal Government. We must keep the financing and control of these programs as close as we possibly can to the people who pay the necessary taxes and see them in daily operation.

A basic problem in the public assistance programs is achieving the goal of helping people to help themselves return to self-support. Solution of this problem requires studies into the causes of dependency and its prevention. It also requires better training of local case workers. This budget provides for cooperative work with the States in these two areas.

Other welfare services: The rehabilitation of disabled people is rewarding in human as well as economic terms. This budget provides additional funds in 1960 for the Federal-State vocational rehabilitation program. It is estimated that services will be provided to 314,000 persons during 1960 and that the number rehabilitated will increase to 90,000.

Additional funds are included for the White House Conference on Children and Youth which I have called for 1960 so that the States, localities, private organizations, and Federal agencies can pool their knowledge of the best ways to meet the needs of our youth. Funds are also included in this budget for the 1961 White House Conference on Aging, which will provide an opportunity for all levels of government and our many private organizations to find means through which they can contribute to a better life for our 15 million elderly citizens.

Railroad retirement insurance: The railroad retirement system is a combination social insurance and industrial retirement program operated by the Government but self-financed from employment taxes on railroad workers and carriers. Several legislative steps should be taken to improve this system:

First, it should be placed on a sound actuarial basis. Although it is generally accepted that railroad retirement should be fully self-financed, studies made in recent years show that the system is incurring a substantial actuarial deficit. Therefore, taxes on railroad employment should be increased at the earliest possible time, without changing the status of such contributions for Federal income tax purposes.

Second, the wages covered for railroad retirement should be raised from $4,200 to $4,800 annually in line with the 1958 amendments for Federal old-age, survivors, and disability insurance. These two systems have been increasingly coordinated, particularly through the 1946 and 1951 amendments, but were not equally strengthened last year.

Finally, revisions should be made in the law governing Federal payments to the railroad retirement account for time spent by railroad workers in military service. According to the Comptroller General, the Government has already paid to the railroad retirement account an estimated $350 million more than will ever be required for the added cost of benefits resulting from military service previously rendered by railroad workers. Furthermore, the law requires Government contributions of several hundred million dollars on a 10-year installment basis to the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance trust funds for past military service, including the service of railroad workers for whom contributions have already been paid to the railroad retirement fund.

Legislation should be enacted to make the actual added cost of military service credits the basis of payment to the railroad account. This is the method already incorporated in law for military service by railroad workers before 1937 and is also the method specified for noncontributory service credits for old-age, survivors, and disability insurance purposes. Payment on this basis will save taxpayers an estimated $95 million in future appropriations for military service between 1948 and 1954. The past Government overpayments to the railroad system should be transferred to the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance trust funds as the annual installments of Government contributions to those funds become due. By providing the first such installment for 1960, this legislation will make unnecessary an $80 million appropriation from the general fund for that year.

VETERANS' SERVICES AND BENEFITS

The upward trend of expenditures in veterans' programs is expected to halt temporarily in the fiscal year 1960, mainly because declining workloads result in a decrease of $163 million for readjustment programs which have helped so many veterans of World War II and the Korean conflict to become reestablished in civilian life. Expenditures for disability and death compensation, which have increased in the last several years because higher rates were enacted, are expected to decrease somewhat in 1960 as the number of beneficiaries declines. However, expenditures for other permanent programs are continuing to increase, primarily because more veterans with disabilities not resulting from their military service are receiving hospital and medical care or pensions. The estimated total expenditures for veterans in 1960 of $5.1 billion are $110 million less than in 1959, and $62 million more than in 1958.

Most of the expenditures for veterans' benefits and services cannot be controlled by ordinary appropriation processes because the eligibility conditions and benefit rates are set by basic legislation, and payments must be made if eligible veterans apply.

This Nation has always shown deep gratitude and provided special benefits and privileges for its war veterans and their dependents, particularly for those veterans killed or disabled as a result of their service and for their widows and children. I am convinced that we will always continue compensation programs which reflect this policy. However, I believe that certain of our national policies and legislation governing other veterans' programs should be modified. This is particularly true of the benefits provided to veterans and their families for disability or deaths not resulting from or related to military service. With veterans and their families constituting nearly half of our population, the cost of these veterans' benefits is high, and will continue to increase as our veterans advance in age.

Pensions: We must continue veterans' pensions and increase pension rates for whose who are without other resources, particularly if they have families. However, eligibility should be determined according to effective tests of need, both as to income and as to net worth, so that payments will no longer be made where the veteran or his family has adequate resources for basic necessities from other sources. Properly applied, I believe this approach can better serve those who are now in need and at the same time minimize the burden placed on taxpayers by present laws. I have, accordingly, asked the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to present to the Congress legislation both to provide more equitable treatment of needy veterans and to modernize the veterans' pension program in the light of social developments and changes.

Compensation: Other veterans' programs also merit close continuing attention. The Veterans' Administrator will expedite and broaden the work underway in the Veterans' Administration on revising standards for rating of disabilities. For some of the seriously disabled veterans, whose activities are greatly restricted, increases in compensation rates are warranted. Likewise, improved rehabilitation services should be provided for those few peacetime ex-servicemen with substantial service-connected disabilities.

Hospital and medical care: This budget includes $891 million of expenditures for hospital and medical care for veterans in 1960. The increase of $6 million from 1959 is provided to improve the staffing and quality of service in the hospitals. Provision is made for hospital and domiciliary care for an average of 140,800 beneficiaries per day.

More than 2 million outpatient treatments or examinations for service-connected disabilities will be provided in 1960.

An appropriation of $20 million is recommended for modernization of hospital and domiciliary facilities; with balances from prior years, this appropriation will permit expenditures of $55 million for construction and modernization.

Administration: Administrative expenditures associated with veterans' programs will be lower in 1960 than in the current year because of declining workloads and increasing efficiency. Funds are provided for improving the top management and evaluation activities of the Veterans' Administration. The application of modern high-speed automatic equipment to the large volume recordkeeping and clerical operations will be extended. This will produce significant administrative savings in future years.

INTEREST

Interest payments are estimated to rise $495 million to $8.1 billion in the fiscal year 1960. These payments, almost entirely for interest on the public debt, represent more than 10 percent of budget expenditures.

Interest

[Fiscal years. In millions

Item	Budget expenditures			Recommended new obligational authority for 1960
	1958 actual	1959 estimate	1960 estimate
Interest on public debt	$7,607	$7,500	$8,000	$8,000
Interest on refunds of receipts	74	92	87	87
Interest on uninvested funds	8	9	9	9
Total	7,689	7,601	8,096	8,096

Since the spring of 1958, market rates of interest have increased, reflecting the strong recovery of the economy. The rise in market rates requires the Treasury to pay higher interest on securities issued to refinance the heavy volume of maturing Government obligations, a large part of which were issued when interest rates were lower.

In addition to higher interest rates, the amount of interest payments depends on the size and composition of the public debt. It is anticipated that the public debt will reach $285 billion by the end of the fiscal year 1959. On the basis of the balanced budget I am presenting, the debt will be no higher at the end of 1960, although there will be a substantial temporary increase during the year.

GENERAL GOVERNMENT

Expenditures for general Government activities are estimated at $1.7 billion in 1960, an increase of $62 million from 1959, primarily because of the volume of construction of Government office buildings started in earlier years, including the new office building for the House of Representatives.

[1] Compares with new obligational authority of $1,417 million enacted for 1958 and $1,799 million (including $157 million for anticipated supplemental authorizations) estimated for 1959.

General property and records management: Initiation of new construction is being deferred in the fiscal year 1960 and no funds are recommended for starting new general office buildings. In 1959, a total of $208 million new obligational authority was enacted for this purpose. Hence, expenditures in 1960 for Government office buildings started in prior years will increase sharply.

Central personnel management: The public interest requires a comprehensive analysis and modernization of Federal pay policies and systems. The salary and benefit systems for Federal civilian employees should combine the best practices of progressive private employers with the special needs of the Government. Government policy should promote efficiency, maintain a clear relationship at all levels between pay and work performed, and assure compensation reasonably comparable with that in private employment. Although some progress has been made in recent years, the present system falls far short of meeting these objectives. Accordingly, I again urge the Congress to establish a Joint Commission on Civilian Employee Compensation in the Federal Government.

Statehood for Hawaii and home rule for District of Columbia: I again recommend that the Congress enact legislation to admit Hawaii into the Union as a State, and to grant home rule to the District of Columbia. It would be unconscionable if either of these actions were delayed any longer.

Alaska: I am highly gratified to be the first President in 47 years to have had the privilege of welcoming a new State into the Union. Alaska takes its place as the equal of the other 48 States with both the privileges and the responsibilities that go with statehood. Recommendations will be transmitted to the Congress concerning certain changes needed in Federal law as a result of Alaska's admission to the Union in order to apply to Alaska the same general laws, rules, and policies as are applicable to other States.

The size of the new State, its geographic location, present Federal ownership of 99 percent of the land area, and Federal administration of services provided elsewhere by private enterprise and State and local governments create problems not previously encountered when new States were admitted into the Union. Furthermore, some time will elapse before Alaska can benefit fully from the revenues to be derived from public lands and other resources to be made available to the State by the Statehood Act. The Federal Government is cooperating with Alaska in developing constructive solutions to these transitional problems.

In the longrun interest of both the State and the Nation, the Federal Government should not continue special programs in Alaska which, in other States, are the responsibility of State and local governments or of private enterprise. The Federal Government should provide such financial assistance as is necessary to facilitate transfer to the State of such programs as highway construction and maintenance, airport operations, and public health services. Therefore, legislation will be proposed to authorize the payment of transitional grants to the State of Alaska in an amount not to exceed $10.5 million for the fiscal year 1960 and in declining amounts for the subsequent 4 years. Under the proposed legislation Alaska could choose between receiving the entire transitional grant or requesting that a portion be used for financing continued Federal operations during an interim period.

Expenditures for the transitional grants to Alaska will be largely offset by the elimination of existing special Federal programs in Alaska. Alaska will, of course, be eligible to participate in regular Federal grant-in-aid programs on a comparable basis with the other States.

Other recommendations for legislation: The last Congress enacted legislation to cover some of my most urgent proposals for amending the immigration laws. Legislation on the remaining proposals should be promptly enacted, and the expiring authority to issue visas to certain orphans and to aliens afflicted with tuberculosis should be extended.

I also recommend that the Congress direct special attention to the creation of additional Federal judgeships as proposed by the Judicial Conference, and the strengthening of Federal laws against organized crime.

To permit further timely improvements in the structure of the executive branch of the Government, I recommend that the Congress extend the Reorganization Act of 1949, as amended, which is effective only until June 1, 1959.

I again recommend that the President be authorized to make awards for distinguished civilian achievement.

CONCLUSION

This budget charts the course our Government should take as we embark on the decade of the 1960's. Since the end of World War II, the pace of achievement and universal change has quickened with each successive year, sharpening the need for adjustments in the relations of peoples and nations to each other. In the decade facing us, the challenges to representative government will be no less than in the past; indeed, the tasks which are certain to be laid upon the executive, legislative, and judicial branches will require from each increasing vision, understanding, and wisdom.

This budget is designed to serve the needs of the Nation as a whole as effectively as possible. It rejects the philosophy that the national welfare is best served by satisfying every demand for Federal expenditures.

Our objective, as a free Nation, must be to prepare for the momentous decade ahead by entering the fiscal year 1960 with a world at peace, and with a strong and free economy as the prerequisite for healthy growth in the years to follow. This can be achieved through Government actions which help foster private economic recovery and development, and which restrain the forces that would drive prices higher, and thereby cheapen our money and erode our personal savings. The first step is to avoid a budget deficit by having the Government live within its means, especially during prosperous, peacetime periods.

The 1960 budget reflects our determination to do this.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

JANUARY 19, 1959.

THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET MESSAGE

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the message just read is perhaps the most important of all the messages President Eisenhower has sent to the Congress during his administration. And it is one of the most important any American President will address to Congress in many years to come.

It is important both because of its content and because of the situation it is designed to meet.

Abroad we are confronted with the most powerful and implacable enemy which has menaced our country since the adoption of the Constitution. At home we are losing steadily in a mortal conflict with inflation. And the two are allies. Each plays into the hands of the other.

Of the two, inflation is perhaps the more dangerous because it is already sapping at the foundations of our economic system, already spreading like a cancer through every business and political activity of the Nation. It is driving to undreamed of peaks the quotations on the exchanges of Wall Street. It is increasing every morning the sun rises the cost of every breakfast table in America. And it is pricing the cost of national defense to totals out of all proportion to the costs of the production of competing armament in Russia.

The major proposal of the message and the budget is that we live within our means. For years we have been spending more than the national income. We have been spending money we did not have for things we could get along without. During these last few years when the national revenues have exceeded in volume the income of any nation in the history of the world we have increased disbursements faster than we increased revenues with no effort to pay our debts and without thought of the inevitable day of reckoning.

As a result we owe today the largest public debt ever owed, either in time of peace or in time of war, by any government in any country in any period of recorded time. The interest alone is increased nearly $500 million in this budget in excess of the interest on the public debt in the last budget. And this budget recommends another of a long series of legislative enactments raising the ceiling on the public debt—from $28 billion to $285 billion.

The alarming feature of the recommendation, Mr. Speaker, if anything could be more alarming than the debt itself, is that the Presidential message proposes that the increase be permanent. That one word "permanent" is one of the most significant in the entire budget message. It forecloses any reasonable prospect of reduction in the national debt or reduction in the stupendous burden of interest on the national debt in the foreseeable future. And in the meantime it is no longer necessary for the housewife to take a basket to the corner grocery. She can now carry home the week's supply of groceries in her arms. The cost of clothing to keep a child in school goes up every session of Congress, because the President has been recommending and Congress has been passing appropriation bills and other bills to spend money we do not have for things the local communities should themselves provide or which the States and the Nation have been doing without and which they could continue to do without.

Life savings are being swept away; money accumulated for old age is being dissipated; pensions and allowances are being reduced in buying power; life insurance is being eroded and all economic systems and plans for the future and for succeeding generations are being reduced to chaos.

All over the Nation this month boards of directors of countless corporations are considering plans for promotion, plans for new plants, and more widely distributed factories. But inflation has driven costs of construction and maintenance and operation so high that they are reluctantly canceling or postponing plans for expansion. As a result, communities everywhere are denied local branches and labor is denied employment and the economy of the country is denied the shot in the arm it so desperately needs. The paralysis of inflation is everywhere fostered by executive and legislative promulgations from Washington, is everywhere freezing and shackling the genius of America.

And yet the excess portions of this budget, and the last budget, are in nonmilitary items. Over the past 5 years total budgetary expenditures, not including the highway item, have risen from $67.8 billion to $80.9 billion. That increase came about solely by increased spending for nondefense items. A budget deficit is fuel on the fires of inflation and yet the budget before us is balanced by such a narrow margin—one-tenth of 1 percent—that a casual glance at the record of past budgets shows there is practically no possibility of the balance being maintained through the fiscal year for which it is proposed.

The burning issue in the Nation today is the battle against inflation. And it is not a cold war. It is at a critical point. If runaway inflation takes over it would be a setback not only for the United States but for the entire free world. Other nations are watching us apprehensively. Resolute action now along sound financial lines will reassure them.

WHO PREPARES THE BUDGET?

Let us concede right here that all fiscal recommendations start with the President. Congress does not make the budget. That is the duty and exclusive prerogative of the President. The law is clear and specific. He is directed by the statute to make such tax, spending, and appropriation recommendations as in his judgment are necessary. The President is in complete command in making the budget. He does not have to recommend bigger appropriations. He does not have to recommend extension of war tax rates. He does not have to urge new taxes—as he does in this budget. He is at complete liberty to recommend a cut of 5, 10, 15, 20 billion or any other amount. So when the administration talks economy and hope of tax reduction but submits record budgets that is the President's action, not that of the Congress. He cannot escape that responsibility because the law places it on him.

A SPENDER'S BUDGET

The razor-thin budget margin of $70 million rests on several important but uncertain premises. But there is no uncertainty about some features of this budget.

Mr. Speaker, this is a spender's budget. This budget for fiscal 1960 tops all previous record budgets from President Eisenhower. It proposes spending far beyond any previous Eisenhower budget submission—even beyond the record-breaking peacetime budget submitted just a year ago. It is $5 billion beyond the budget against which the people, and even the administration itself, rebelled only 2 years ago.

In the cold gray dawn of the morning after last November 4, the President's significant public reaction to his party's debacle the day before was that the American people had elected a spending Congress. And he gave notice of intent to declare war on excessive spending.

"I think every place we are spending too much money," the President was quoted as saying. He inveighed against lavishness, against waste and duplication, against what he termed "loose handling of our fiscal affairs." He was further quoted as saying "we must start right from the biggest and go right down to the smallest." He intimated reductions could be expected all along the line in his new budget. In his state of the Union message, he again spoke at some length on the subject of spending, about the inflationary and inevitably disastrous consequences of excessive and deficit spending. "Except only in critical emergencies," he said, "we must meet current costs from current revenue."

The President's $72 billion budget received 2 years ago this month established a record up to that time. Secretary Humphrey rebelled. Even the President in effect disowned it and invited Congress to cut it. The Budget Director testified he hoped it would be cut. And we cut it materially. This budget tops that one by $5 billion.

This budget rests on the assumption of a revenue take of $77.1 billion, not counting the highway fund—and $80 billion with it if Congress follows the President's recommendation and enacts the new gasoline and fuel taxes. That's the highest revenue since the Republic was founded. And this budget would also be out of balance except for the President's request, that wartime tax rates be again extended—although he has previously insisted that tax rates are too high.

SEVEN-YEAR COMPARATIVE RECORD

Lest any doubt remain about this question, Mr. Speaker, let me compare the 7-year record of fiscal years 1954 through 1960 under the present administration with the immediately preceding 7 years of fiscal years 1947 through 1953 under the previous administration. And keep in mind that in 3 of those 7 years we were at war in Korea:

Budget revenues during the present administration exceed the previous administration by $149.1 billion.

Budget expenditures under the present administration exceed expenditures under the previous administration by $163.1 billion.

The cumulative net deficit under the present administration, is $19.7 billion. Under the previous administration it was only $5.7 billion including the 3 war years of Korea. If you eliminate the war years, there was a surplus, not a deficit.

Now, the public debt: Including the budget received today, the debt has increased under the present administration by $18.9 billion, whereas under the previous administration it was reduced by $3.3 billion. In the 4 peacetime years 1947–50, it was reduced by $12 billion. But even with 3 war years included, it was reduced under the previous administration.

I include here several tabulations of official figures in support of the comparisons drawn.

(a) Including highway trust fund	487.0	506.2	−19.2
(b) Excluding highway trust fund as per budget	478.4	498.1	−19.7

[1] Original budget was a $0.5 billion surplus. Midyear review in September 1958 was a $12.2 billion deficit.

[2] In addition to items referred to in footnote 3, also assumes enactment of certain new gasoline and fuel taxes.

[3] Among many other things, assumes enactment of $350 million postal rate bill, and other revenue proposals. Also assumes enactment of various legislative propositions having expenditure reduction effects.

5. Total budgeted increase for the 7 fiscal years July 1953 to July 1960	+18.9

NOTE.—Old statutory limit of $275 billion has been raised as follows:
For fiscal 1955 by $6,000,000,000.
For fiscal 1956 by $6,000,000,000.
For fiscal 1957 by $3,000,000,000.

Under previous administration (fiscals 1947–53, of which 1951–53 were war years in Korea)	[1] −5.7
Present administration over previous	+14.0
7-year changes in the Federal public debt:
Under present administration (July 1953 to July 1960 per present budget—from $266.1 billions to $285.0 billions)	+18.9
Under previous administration (July 1946 to July 1953—from $269.4 to $266.1)	−3.3
Present administration over previous	+22.2

[1] The net deficit during the 3 Korean war years (fiscals 1951–53) was $9.9 billions. Thus the 4 peacetime years (fiscals 1947–50) would show a net surplus of $4.2 billions.

NOTE.—For simplicity here, and in order to tie directly to official "budget" figures, receipts and expenditures for the highway program for years 1957–60 under the highway trust fund, which began with 1957 to include programs carried in earlier "budget" totals, have been omitted.

NO TANGIBLE HOPE OF TAX RELIEF

Another certainty about this budget is that it affords no tangible hope for tax relief. There are vague references to a time in the foreseeable future when needed tax reforms can be made. But there is no provision for it in this budget.

The most accurate barometer to future spending is the amount of authority to obligate the Treasury. That comes first. Spending follows. The President recommends in this budget $76.8 billion of new obligating authority—$80.3 billion including the highway fund. To get the real dimensions of what this signifies as to future spending and hope of tax relief, his recommendations on new obligational authority compare with earlier years in this fashion:

	Billions
1960 budget request over enacted 1954—the first year of the administration	+$17.5
1960 over 1956—the first year of a surplus under present administration	+17.1
1960 over 1958—the last completed fiscal year	+0.3
1960 compared to current year 1959
Already enacted for 1959	+3.1
Total proposed, including $8.7 billion contemplated supplementals	−5.6

When he asks for more authority to obligate, he signifies more spending.

The reduction of $5.6 billion below 1959 total looks favorable, but it is somewhat misleading as to the trend. What has actually been enacted to date for 1959 shows 1960 exceeding 1959 by $3.1 billion.

The President indicates he will ask for fiscal 1959 supplementals of $8.7 billion. Over half of that is for the World Bank and International Monetary Fund, although Congress has not yet passed on it.

[1] The budget for 1959 recommended enactment of several amounts as supplementals for 1958 which normally should have been carried in the regular bills for 1959, principally a $1.3 billion defense supplemental; a $2 billion Export-Import borrowing authority and $2.3 billion reimbursement to CCC. Had they been handled as 1959 fiscal transactions, as usual, the comparison between 1958 and 1959 would be more realistic.

[2] The budget for 1960 proposes supplemental and deficiencies for 1959 fiscal in the abnormally high amount of $8.7 billion, including $4.5 billion special items for the World Bank and International Monetary Fund. Excluding these unusual items, the comparisons between years would represent a more normal situation.

IS THE BUDGET IN BALANCE?

The pending question is whether this new budget is in actual, or only apparent, balance. On its face, it is balanced by the narrowest margin—a mere pittance in the context of $77 billion budgets. And that rests on a number of contingencies. It assumes increased income of about $10 billion in fiscal 1960 over 1959.

The recommendation for legislation to raise postal income by $350 million, the request for new taxes to keep the budget in balance are matters for the legislative committees to process.

This is a big budget. It is a spender's budget. It is a political budget. It ignores the rule of prudence by failing to allow an adequate cushion against further essential defense costs or against a shortage in revenues. It makes no allowance for payment on our staggering debt. It is a standstill budget at best.

In light of unreliability of estimates in recent budgets, this nominal budget surplus of $70 million could vanish overnight.

In all but one of the five budgets sent down by the President, the original spending estimates of the President were not realized. They spent more each time. Compare the following estimates with this precarious figure of $70 million:

Spending (in billions)

	President's original estimate	Actual result	Exceeded original estimate
1959 budget (latest figures)	$73.9	$80.9	+$7.0
1958 budget	71.8	71.9	+0.1
1957 budget	65.1	69.4	+4.3
1956 budget	62.4	66.5	+4.1
1955 budget	65.6	64.6	−1.0

Original budget estimates of deficits and surpluses matched against actual results also affords comparisons pertinent to the present situation. The accompanying table indicates how far and how often the mark has been missed.

DEFENSE AND NONDEFENSE SPENDING

There is a general impression that deficit spending is necessary in order to provide national defense and therefore justified by the need. As a matter of fact the excessive budget increases have been due principally to nondefense spending, as will be noted:

[2] Includes $2.8 billion estimated to be expended from anticipated supplementals of $8.7 billion.
[3] Represents increase of nearly 8 percent over war year of 1953.
[4] Represents 50 percent increase over 1954.
[5] Represents 64 percent increase over 1954.

NOTE.—Highway trust fund began with fiscal year 1957.

This budget, as compared to fiscal 1954, the first year, recommends a 64-percent increase in nondefense spending—up $13.4 billion. Nondefense items in this budget are estimated at $8.4 billion more than in 1956 when they first showed a budget surplus. This is what the President urges. Does that signify they have spending under control? The facade of surpluses were not the result of retrenchment. They came solely from a rising tide of national revenue and war tax rates in time of peace. And even those small surpluses were consumed by prior deficits in recent years.

Mr. Speaker, the House should take no particular comfort from the $3.9 billion reduction in spending shown by this budget. It is largely the result of a handful of nonrecurring 1959 expenses, more or less automatically dropping from the 1960 budget, such as the monetary fund item, termination of the soil bank acreage reserve, temporary unemployment compensation, retroactive pay raises, and a few other special items.

All manner of increases are requested in appropriations.

BYPASSING ANNUAL CONGRESSIONAL REVIEW

Mr. Speaker, I should say again that, contrary to a widely held impression, the budget is not processed entirely through the appropriation bills. And the present budget is no exception to that rule.

This budget especially is contingent on enactment of many legislative propositions, both to secure more revenue and to secure reductions in spending. Its balance was arrived at on that premise.

The appropriation bills at one time disclosed the disposition of the budget recommendations of the President and how much money would be removed from the Treasury. Unfortunately that is no longer the case. In recent years Congress has, in practice, been legislating against its most vital prerogative—control of the pursestrings. It has done this to such an extent that it has substantially impaired its control of spending authority. Side doors to the Treasury have been opened through ingenious contrivances in ever-increasing volume and with ever-increasing frequency. The objective is simple. People want to get money out of the Treasury without having to pass the acid test of annual congressional scrutiny. The principal device is a harmless-sounding method called a "public-debt transaction," and there are others such as "contract authorizations." As we have previously shown, these devices are in every respect an appropriation because they permit money to be removed from the Treasury without further congressional action. But through this device, they have successfully escaped the regular legislative route and the annual scrutiny required of appropriations.

The dimensions of these end runs on the annual review process reached alarming proportions last year. The Senate undertook to preempt the appropriating powers of the House by originating a number of such schemes, for all manner of expenditures, carrying a total price tag of nearly $9 billion. And legislative committees of the House have insisted on concurring in this shortcircuiting.

For general reference, a tabulation of identified bills of the last session is included with the several amounts shown.

It is to be noted that the President indicates he regards these end runs on the appropriations process as inconsistent with sound standards of budgetary practice.

THREE WAYS TO STATE THE SIZE OF THE 1960 BUDGET

Mr. Speaker, a substantial portion of the business of the Government is financed through such devices as trust funds. These are outside the $77 billion general budget. Other techniques used to strike the general budget total tend to understate the gross dollar volume of Government business. There is interest in this matter because the sum of all these items gives a more accurate picture of total Treasury income and outgo. Accordingly, I include the following tabulation:

Three ways to state the size of the 1960 budget

	Receipts	Spending	Surplus
1. The administrative budget—This is the one most commonly used. Its ingredients are "net budget" receipts and "net budget" expenditures. It shows net budget expenditures against what might be termed general, unsegregated Treasury receipts. It is the one which shows the $0.1 billion surplus projection. The "administrative" budget totals are	$77.1	$77.0	$0.1
2. The cash budget—This is the term often applied to what the budget message refers to as "Receipts from and payments to the public"—an effort to portray the magnitude of the ebb and flow of funds between the Government and the public. Briefly, this combines "budget" figures (the administrative budget) and trust fund receipts and expenditures, and then eliminates intragovernmental and intrafund transactions which do not represent flow of funds either to or from the public (see tables, p. M10 and p. 931). As explained below, this method, as used in the budget, does not disclose the full magnitude. The "cash" budget totals are	93.5	92.9	.6
3. A 3d method—The cash budget calculation (No. 2, above) understates the full scope of Federal income and outgo. This is because "budget" receipts and "budget" expenditures are stated, as in the past, on a net basis.

Three ways to state the size of the 1960 budget—continued

	Receipts	Spending	Surplus
3. A 3d method—continued This is to say, certain receipts are not shown as "budget receipts," but rather are offset against gross budget expenditures, thus arriving at net budget expenditures. These receipts are collections of interest, repayment of loans, postal revenues, and other income (primarily from outside the Government) of Government corporations, the postal service, and various revolving funds. The budget makes the distinction in this respect basically because such receipts are available for use or reuse (respending) by the corporation or other enterprise concerned and thus are not available for general appropriation purposes. (In the case of postal receipts for services rendered, budget totals reflect only the net deficit or surplus.) Counting such receipts as receipts, rather than as offsets to expenditures, the following tabulation more fully reflects the ebb and flow of funds:
Net budget receipts (same as Item 1)	$77.1	------	------
Receipts treated in the budget as offsets to gross budget expenditures (see table 9, p. 18)	9.9	------	------
Trust fund receipts (p. 879)	20.5	------	------
Gross budget expenditures (net budget expenditures plus receipt offsets mentioned above)	------	$86.9	------
Trust fund expenditures (p. 879)	------	20.3	------
Subtotals	107.5	107.2	$0.3
Deduct intragovernment and intrafund transactions not directly involving the public (same items as are referred to in "cash budget" calculation in No. 2, above—see p. 931)	−4.1	−4.0	−.1
Totals (ebb and flow between Government and public)	103.4	103.2	.2

ANNUAL REPORT OF CORREGIDOR-BATAAN MEMORIAL COMMISSION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 52)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which was read by the Clerk and, together with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 193, 83d Congress, as amended, I hereby transmit to the Congress of the United States a report of the activities of the Corregidor-Bataan Memorial Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1958.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.
THE WHITE HOUSE, January 19, 1959.

ANNUAL REPORT OF NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 53)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which was read by the Clerk and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Science and Astronautics and ordered printed with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 507, 81st Congress, I transmit herewith the eighth annual report of the National Science Foundation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1958.

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.
THE WHITE HOUSE, January 17, 1959.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication which was read by the Clerk:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., January 19, 1959.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker of the House,
Capitol Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: In view of my pending assignment to the Committee on Rules I hereby tender you my resignation as a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Respectfully,

HAMER H. BUDGE,
Member of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

COMPOSITION OF CERTAIN STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 120) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That during the Eighty-sixth Congress the Committee on Agriculture shall be composed of thirty-four members;

ELECTION OF ADDITIONAL MEMBERS TO STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 123).

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Antonio Fernós-Isern, the Resident Commissioner to the United States from Puerto Rico, and John A. Burns, the Delegate from Hawaii, are hereby elected additional members of the following standing committees of the House of Representatives: Committee on Agriculture, Committee on Armed Services, and Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

The resolution was agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of 42 United States Code 2251, the Chair appoints as members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy the following Members on the part of the House: Mr. DURHAM, of North Carolina; Mr. HOLIFIELD, of California; Mr. PRICE, of Illinois; Mr. KILDAY, of Texas; Mr. ASPINALL, of Colorado; Mr. VAN ZANDT, of Pennsylvania; Mr. HOSMER, of California; Mr. BATES, of Massachusetts; and Mr. WESTLAND, of Washington.

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of section 601, title VI, Public Law 250, 77th Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Committee To Investigate Nonessential Federal Expenditures the following members of the Committee on Ways and Means: Mr. MILLS, of Arkansas; Mr. FORAND, of Rhode Island; Mr. REED, of New York; and the following members of the Committee on Appropriations: Mr. CANNON, of Missouri; Mr. MAHON, of Texas; and Mr. TABER, of New York.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the United States today is facing a serious situation. There is no question in my mind but that we must face it and must overcome it. Everywhere that a dollar is asked for by any agency it must be screened in the most careful manner, and we must try our very best to keep things down. Every unnecessary item must be cut down.

For instance, even the military construction must be put on what is practically needed for their construction, rather than the elaborate things that have been done in the past. We must do away with any more attempts to fasten other expenditures upon the people. We just cannot afford it and they cannot afford it. We will not meet our responsibilities unless we stand up to the rack and realize that further increases in expenditures or even the maintenance of the type of expenditures that have been going on shall be stopped.

I am not unmindful of the responsibilities that we owe. We owe a lot of debt. That debt cannot be met if we maintain a spending budget which is larger than the ones that have gone by. The present budget submitted is perhaps the largest peacetime budget since that budget that was sent up here in the last days of the Truman administration in 1953. It is larger than I like to see. I hope that we will be able to keep it down. I hope from what the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations told us this morning that he is going to lead the way. I am glad to see that he is taking that position.

The thing I want to caution the Congress about particularly is this: Do not get tied up to spending programs until after the Appropriations Committee has had an opportunity to hold hearings on things and find out the things that absolutely are necessary. We must not tackle anything else. We must meet what is necessary for the defense of the United States. We must meet what is necessary to maintain our governmental structure. But never in the world should we embark upon programs that are going to cost enormous sums of money. We should begin to whittle down some of these expenditures so that we can face the people of the United States back home. I do not think for a moment that we ought to take any chance on going ahead with new programs that may be foisted upon us to vote upon by all sorts of promoters. These promoters who are out for spending more money must realize that we do not have the money to spend. They must realize that we must face the obligations that we owe to our bondholders and to the people generally who are paying enormous taxes. I would like to see the taxes cut. At the same time I would hate to see them cut unless and until we can get things down to the point where we can afford to take a chance on that sort of thing.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. First of all, I want to commend the gentleman for the fine statement he is making. I want also to commend the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations who stands on the other side. If I understood him correctly he likewise stands for a careful scrutiny of all these items of expenditures. I might say, of course, that he as chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations is in a very important position to see to it that spending is held down. He referred to the increase from $65 billion to $79 billion over the past 4 years. I think it ought to be recognized by everyone that during those 4 years he has been chairman of that committee and his side of the aisle has been in control of the House of Representatives. After all, as the President so well said, the Congress of the United States in the final analysis holds the pursestrings over expenditures. I just want to say to the chairman, the gentleman from Missouri, that I applaud him for his concern over the rise in the cost of living and for his concern over the erosion of the value of savings of people when the value of the dollar goes down; and his concern over the public debt and the concern that he has otherwise expressed. I commend him for expressing that concern and I say to him that if he and those who stand with him will match those words with action and with votes in the months to come, we will keep this budget within balance. I wish to state right now, speaking for the people on my side of the aisle, that we will do our level best to keep the spending down to the end that the welfare of this country will be promoted. Certainly, we can do no less than that. And if I may add just one other word, I want to point out that already in the offing there are proposals from Democrat Members for spending additional billions and billions of dollars. Some of these proposals have been talked about here in recent months and some of them were proposed in a previous session of the Congress when we were told that if we did not vote for them the whole economy was going down the drain. Well, thank goodness, most of those latter proposals were defeated and the economy has not gone down the drain. On the contrary, the economy of the country has been coming along very well. We are coming out of the recession. We are within reach of another balanced budget. We ought to devote our energies to that end. I commend the gentleman from New York for what he has said.

Mr. TABER. We are facing a situation which is absolutely critical in the United States. If we do not meet our responsibilities we are going to contribute to total bankruptcy on the part of the Government. I do not want to be a party to that sort of thing. I hope that this Congress does not want to be a party to that sort of thing. I intend to take the floor when any of these large bills are under consideration, and express myself on how I feel, and I hope that the Congress will stand up and prevent these enormous expenditures going through.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. The President cannot spend one penny which the Congress does not appropriate. We all know that. It is the responsibility of this Congress to see to it that not one dime of the taxpayers' money is wasted.

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. JENSEN. Also the gentleman remembers well early in the last session of Congress when the Democratic floor leader brought to this House two resolutions, one directing the President to spend more money and faster for the military, and the other directing the civilian departments to spend more money and faster than the budget directed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, President Eisenhower has presented to the Congress a realistic budget which gives priority from the funds available to the country's urgent needs. It is based on the time-proven premise that to have a sound economy we must live within our income.

The President's financial plan deals realistically with our present needs and looks to the future. It gives recognition to the all-important fact that what fiscal course we follow today will have an impact on our national stability for many years to come.

The question is now before the Congress, and the major responsibility rests squarely on the shoulders of the Democrats who control both the House and Senate by substantial majorities. For my part, and I believe I express the position of my Republican colleagues, I intend to support this budget.

I am confident my Republican colleagues as a unit will vigorously resist attempts to make expenditures available for programs and projects that may be desirable but which are not essential. Next year promises to be the most prosperous in our history. If we cannot arrange for the Government to live within its revenue during such a period, there is no hope that we will ever be able to do so.

We cannot have our cake and eat it too. We must think not of ourselves, what we may like to have; but we must think of the country as a whole. We must exercise self-discipline.

Surely we will not allow political expediency to determine what we do that so vitally affects our national economy and our country's future. Let us not enter upon unessential spending programs that the people as a whole are robbed by rising prices and taxes for the benefit of a few.

I earnestly urge this House, which has primary responsibility for all appropriations, to support the President in maintaining a balanced budget.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, I think the budget proposals we received today will go a long way toward restoring the Government's fiscal integrity. While I have not yet had the opportunity to study all the items in detail, it certainly seems to me that all essential defense needs are met.

The budget provides for more and better missiles next year. Expenditures proposed for procurement of missiles alone are $3,825 million, up more than $1 billion over last year and up another half billion dollars over this year's procurement. Other new weapons and equipment for our Armed Forces are also to be purchased in large quantities. The present high level of research and development is to be further expanded. In fact, a more effective Defense Establishment is recommended overall.

At the same time, continuation of the reorganization and adoption of the other recommendations made by the President will make our defense dollars go farther. They will result in streamlining operations, in reducing duplication of weapons systems, and in cutting out unnecessary overhead. The proposals for accomplishing these objectives are sound and reasonable.

There are those who always complain that the defense budget is too small. But I think that if we go along with the President's proposals, which call for total security expenditures of over $45 billion, we will have an adequate military program for the year ahead and we will be getting more for each defense dollar spent.

Recommended expenditures for national security amount to about 60 percent of the total budget. They represent a burden which we must, can, and will bear. But we cannot and should not add unnecessarily to this burden. There is no excuse for waste. There is no excuse for unneeded spending—even for defense. I am convinced that we shall best support the Nation if we support the President's budget recommendations.

TAX ON TRANSPORTATION OF PERSONS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill to repeal the existing wartime tax on the transportation of persons.

The Members of the House will recall that this tax was reduced from 15 percent to 10 percent in 1954; 2 years later, we were able to lift this levy from the transportation of persons to foreign countries, particularly the Central and South American countries. Just recently, the 3-percent tax on the movement of freight was repealed.

We have a situation now, then, where only persons who desire to or who have to travel within their own country must pay a tax on such travel. The result constitutes a discriminatory tax on the lower income groups where 3 out of 10 people cannot afford automobiles and so must depend upon public conveyances for their transportation. Also hurt by this tax are those who live at places distant from the large population centers who are forced to pay a proportionately higher share of this tax.

The tax on the transportation of persons, like other excise taxes, was imposed during World War II to discourage nonessential travel by the public on airlines, railroads, and buses. Today, 13 years later, the tax is serving the same purpose—to discourage travel. At the same time, our common carriers, eager and able to handle all of the traffic they can find, are suffering under this travel restriction with increased operating costs and dwindling profits.

It took us only 3 years to remove this tax similarly imposed during World War I; it took Canada only 3½ years to remove her 15-percent wartime levy imposed on travel during World War II.

Increased travel by commercial carriers will increase their taxable income, thereby offsetting the contribution to the Treasury now being made through this tax, which is small in proportion to the size of the Government's multi-billion-dollar budget.

I hope the House will take swift action on this badly needed and long-overdue tax repeal.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BAILEY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order for today be vacated and that on Wednesday next, at the conclusion of the regular business, I may address the House for 40 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with grave misgivings to the President's budget message for 1960.

To the extent that this budget seeks to halt inflation, its purpose is laudable But when we weigh the most potent forces contributing to today's inflationary spiral—especially the accepted policy of administered prices in our basic industries—it becomes clear that the President's 1960 budget, even if implemented, would be of small consequence in solving the problem of inflation.

It is also clear, of course, that the budget is unrealistic for other reasons as well. Whether an adequate defense can be provided for the amount allocated remains in doubt. There is no doubt whatever, however, that anticipated receipts have been considerably padded in order to bring the budget into some kind of approximate balance. Most glaring, I think you will agree, is the revenue item based upon another increase in postal rates.

I find the President's budget unrealistic for still another reason, Mr. Speaker. It seeks to achieve economy by eliminating internal improvements and other governmental undertakings which are not only badly needed for economic development but which actually would return a far greater benefit over the years than their cost.

Failure of the President to include any new public works projects, approved and recommended by the Corps of Engineers, to my mind represents a short-sighted pound-foolish policy which jeopardizes the economic and international security of our country.

Consider for a moment the channel deepening projects recommended by the Corps of Engineers for a number of Great Lakes ports. In recent years $140 million has been authorized and spent by the Federal Government on the St. Lawrence Seaway in order to make possible, among other things, passage of ships of 27-foot draft through the various connecting locks and on into the Great Lakes.

But for the St. Lawrence Seaway project to be utilized to its full potential, as the Congress and the people of the United States intended, our Great Lakes ports must have channels of sufficient depth, that is 27 feet, to handle the larger vessels which the seaway makes possible.

To meet the problem of providing deeper channels in time for the seaway opening, the Corps of Engineers has engaged in a high priority, hurry-up program. Intensive studies have been carried out by regional offices of the Corps of Engineers in the Great Lakes area to determine where the greatest economic benefit will derive from deep channels. These studies have weighted anticipated economic benefits against the cost of improvement for each lake port under consideration. The final recommendations of the Board of Engineers approved only those projects in which the amortized economic benefits exceeded the cost of the improvement.

In other words, the Corps of Engineers—certainly one of the most highly respected, objective, and trustworthy sources of information—concluded that it was vastly to the national interest, financially and economically, to deepen the harbor channels at Ashtabula, Lorain, Cleveland, Duluth, and Toledo. Despite this recommendation of the Corps of Engineers, the administration has rejected their balanced judgment and under the banner of economy has deferred economic advancement.

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, all of this is like a man starting a trucking company who buys a terminal but forgets the trucks.

Mr. Speaker, if the President wants to do battle with the Congress on the issue of economy, I suggest that we engage him immediately on this front. When the people of our country are heard, I think the President will learn that real economy means sound investment as well as the curtailment of nonessential expenditures.

NO RELIEF FOR HARD-HIT CARPET INDUSTRY

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include extraneous material.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, for many years the carpet industry, of which a large part is located in my District in the great city of Amsterdam, N.Y., has been hard-hit by low-cost competition from abroad. As a result of this competition the carpet industry has felt a decline in orders and a decline in profits, and this, in turn, has been reflected in a decline in employment. A part of this industry has already moved out of Amsterdam to other areas, and the manufacturers who continue to operate in this area have been forced to lay off many of their faithful employees of long service.

As a result of this action, Amsterdam, like neighboring Schenectady, has been declared a labor-surplus area in a substantial degree.

It has long been clear, Mr. Speaker, to those familiar with the carpet industry that much of this problem has been caused by the provisions of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act under which foreign competition has actually been stimulated by deliberate Government policy.

At the time that the act was adopted in 1951 a so-called escape clause was inserted into the act which would make it possible for the U.S. Tariff Commission to increase tariffs or to establish quotas with respect to any specific industry or product particularly hard hit by foreign competition as a result of provisions of the act.

Under this clause the carpet industry last spring began a proceeding before the Tariff Commission designed to obtain just this kind of relief. Last week the Tariff Commission handed down its decision, and on the basis of a split vote of three to two denied that the industry had been hard hit and refused to grant the relief requested.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the decision of the Tariff Commission one wonders whether the so-called escape clause which was designed in theory to provide relief for our hard-hit industries actually provides any relief at all. Just how hard does a community or an industry have to be hit before the Tariff Commission is willing to acknowledge a need for special consideration? Anyone familiar with Amsterdam and the economy of that great city, as I have been familiar, knows that the decision of the majority of the Commission flies in the face of the facts. If these facts can be ignored by a majority of the Commission in the case of one industry, then it is hard to see how any facts can be recognized in support of any other industry. What will happen, for example, when the plight of the glove industry, which has been equally hard hit, comes before the Commission for determination?

In an effort to obtain justice for this industry in my district and to permit information to be presented with regard to further developments that have taken place since these hearings were begun, I have requested the Tariff Commission to grant a rehearing to the carpet industry.

I am hopeful, Mr. Speaker, that this request will be acted upon favorably by the Commission. To underline the necessity for this action, under unanimous consent, I include with my remarks at this point in the RECORD, the very able and vigorous dissent in this proceeding which was entered by Commissioners Walter R. Schreiber and Glenn W. Sutton. These Commissioners have fully grasped the urgency of the situation that confronts the carpet industry, and I am hopeful that their views in the future will become the views of the majority of the Commission.

DISSENTING VIEWS OF COMMISSIONERS WALTER R. SCHREIBER AND GLENN W. SUTTON

(Report made and published pursuant to law of the findings and conclusions of the United States Tariff Commission in investigation No. 67 under sec. 7 of the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951, as amended, relating to certain machine-woven pile floor coverings)

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION,
Washington, D.C., January 12, 1959.

We, Commissioners Schreiber and Sutton, dissent from the findings by the majority of the Commission. In our opinion, wilton, brussels, velvet, and tapestry carpets and rugs are being imported in such increased quantities, both actual and relative, as to cause or threaten serious injury to the domestic industry producing like products.

The considerations which have led us to this conclusion are presented below:

THE SOLE ISSUE

It appears to us that our colleagues of the majority have confused the issue to be resolved under section 7. In the case at hand, the issue is simply whether wilton, brussels, velvet, and tapestry carpets and rugs are being imported in such quantities as to cause or threaten serious injury to the domestic industry producing such rugs. When serious injury is manifest, as it is in this case, the Commission has no discretion under the escape-clause procedure provided for by the Congress; it must recommend the appropriate measures to prevent or remedy such injury.

In denying the applicants relief from the injury caused by imports it does not suffice merely to show that the respective domestic producers are exposed to other competitive situations which constitute as great a threat to their survival as does the ever-increasing flow of imports. One does not deny first aid to a victim of external bodily injuries on the grounds that he concurrently needs medical treatment for internal ailments. Neither does one oppose the adoption of adequate rules of highway safety, because there is also need for inspecting motor vehicles or for licensing operators. The existence of collateral problems provides no warrant for inaction. Nor is it germane to argue that some other domestic industry is enjoying an expanding market—i.e., some industry other than the one properly identified by both the majority and minority members of the Commission in this case as the domestic industry producing like or directly competitive products.

We concur with the majority of the Commission in their finding that, for the purposes of section 7, the domestic industry producing products that are "like" the imports covered by this investigation is coextensive with the domestic production of wilton, brussels, velvet, and tapestry carpets and rugs. We also concur that in recent years sales of new types of carpets and rugs—i.e., tufted and knitted carpets and rugs—have made rapid inroads on the U.S. market for domestically produced wilton and velvet carpeting. This trend, however, does not alter the fact that domestic producers of wilton and velvet carpets and rugs have in addition suffered increasing, substantial, and serious injury from imported wilton and velvet products. Manifestly, the injury from imports is in no way mitigated by these other hazards confronting the industry.

Notwithstanding the large consumer purchases of tufted and knitted carpeting, there remains a sizable residual domestic market for wilton and velvet carpeting. It is this residual market that is being engulfed by imports. Year by year domestic manufacturers have watched the remaining and narrowing domestic market for wilton and velvet floor products being taken over by imported merchandise, while their own facilities for producing these items have fallen into disuse and disrepair. It is relief from such injury that the applicants seek. Significantly, domestic producers have not requested escape-clause action in the case of axminster carpets and rugs—the type which has felt the major impact of increasing sales of domestically produced tufted and knitted products but whose residual market has suffered little from imports.

It would be a curious doctrine, indeed, that would deny an American industry the relief that Congress contemplated under the escape clause on the ground that the respective producers are also confronted with domestic difficulties in marketing their product. Should such a doctrine be consistently applied, it is doubtful that any domestic industry, however intense the import competition may be, could be granted relief under section 7.

The issue then is simple, clear, and unavoidable: Whether imports of wilton and velvet carpets and rugs are causing, or threatening to cause, serious injury to domestic producers of like products. Irrelevant facts relating to the domestic difficulties of the industry must not be permitted to obscure this issue. To deny relief to the domestic industry producing wilton and velvet carpets and rugs on any other basis would constitute a misapplication of the escape-clause provision and a travesty of the congressional mandate. Having dismissed the considerations that are not pertinent to a finding under the escape clause, it is then appropriate to examine the evidence pertaining to the serious injury caused by imports. We have done so and have weighed the criteria set forth in the statute; both individually and jointly, the facts enumerated below supply ample proof that such injury is unmistakable and crucial.

THE ACCELERATING RATE OF IMPORTATION

Imports of wilton and velvet carpets and rugs have increased dramatically and almost continuously since World War II. In 1957, the quantity imported exceeded that in any preceding year and was more than sixteenfold that in 1937 (table 4). A disturbing rate of increase is also apparent when other bases of comparison are used. In 1957, imports of wilton and velvet carpet and rugs were about 25 percent greater than the annual average for 1954–56, 150 percent greater than the average for 1950–52, and nearly 190 percent greater than in 1950.

In the 3 years prior to World War II (1936–38), United States imports of wilton and velvet carpets and rugs averaged a little more than 200,000 square yards. After the war, such imports began to enter in increasing magnitude. Between the two successive 3-year intervals—1950–52 and 1955–57—the average annual imports of wilton and velvet increased from 1.9 million square yards to 4.4 million square yards. In 1957, they totaled 4.7 million square yards. Although total imports of these products during the current recession year, 1958, may be a trifle smaller than those in 1957, there is every reason to believe that, unless appropriate action is taken under provisions of section 7, the trend of accelerating imports will continue.

FLIGHT OF THE INDUSTRY ATTRIBUTABLE TO IMPORTS

Imports of wilton and velvet carpets and rugs have been a direct and measurable factor in the declining production and sales of like domestically produced carpeting. In recent years, imports have supplied an increasing share of the total quantity of wilton and velvet carpets and rugs purchased by United States consumers (table 6). In the years immediately preceding World War II, imports were equivalent to less than 1 percent of the total domestic consumer purchases of these products. By 1950, the ratio had increased to 3 percent. Since then, the proportion of the domestic market taken over by imports has doubled about every 3½ years. In 1953, imports supplied more than 6 percent of domestic consumer requirements for wilton and velvet carpeting, and in 1957 they supplied about 12 percent. There is every prospect that further inroads of this character will occur during the foreseeable future, with consequent further deterioration of the domestic industry.

VULNERABILITY OF THE DOMESTIC INDUSTRY

The domestic wilton and velvet carpet-producing industry is peculiarly sensitive to competition from imported carpets and rugs. If wilton and velvet carpeting were enjoying an expanding, or even stable, market, increasing imports might be absorbed with something short of seriously damaging consequences to domestic producers. Such, however, is not the case. As amply shown by our colleagues in the majority opinion, consumers' demand for pile-surfaced floor covering is no longer supplied to the extent it was formerly by purchases of wilton and velvet types of carpets and rugs. Even without the drastically increased imports, the domestic industry producing wilton and velvet carpets and rugs is confronted with difficulties resulting from the rapidly expanding domestic production and sales of tufted and knitted types of carpeting. As so aptly and so graphically described in the statement by the majority of the Commission, some two-thirds of United States consumer purchases of pile-surfaced floor coverings currently consist of these newer types. Hence, in the residual and contracted market for their products, the domestic producers of wilton and velvet carpets and rugs are in an unusually vulnerable position; this domestic industry is less able than most others to withstand the heavy onslaught of increasing imports. The double jeopardy here described supplies no warrant for denying the measure of relief envisioned by the escape clause.

DECLINING DOMESTIC PRODUCTION

The annual changes in U.S. production of wilton and velvet carpets and rugs in recent years are measured by the following indexes (computed from quantity data in table 2):

[1950–52=100]

1950	121
1951	90
1952	89
1953	101
1954	84
1955	92
1956	90

Inasmuch as both 1950 and 1957 were unusual years these figures overemphasize somewhat the declining trend in domestic production. Because of the Korean crisis, production in 1950 was higher than would otherwise have occurred and, because of the recession, production in the last half of 1957 was at least moderately lower than it otherwise would have been. However, the 2 years following 1950 constituted a period of adjustment during which inventories, that had accumulated at the retail level, were liquidated.

The trend in production in recent years, therefore, is more accurately revealed by comparing the average annual production during successive 3-year intervals. In the period 1950–52, the annual domestic production of wilton and velvet carpets and rugs averaged 45 million square yards. In 1953–55, it averaged only 42 million square yards and, by 1955–57, it had fallen to 39 million square yards. Thus, during the last 3 years for which complete data are available, the average annual domestic production of wilton and velvet was 7 percent smaller than in 1953–55 and 13 percent smaller than in 1950–52. Production in 1957, however, was 21 percent lower than the annual average in 1950–52. There appears to be little likelihood that the total output in 1958 exceeded the 1957 level.

Notwithstanding that some of the decline in domestic production is attributable to causes other than imports, it is clear to us that Congress intended relief to be granted in situations of this kind. To this end, the following language of the controlling statute is pertinent:

"Increased imports * * * shall be considered as the cause or threat of serious injury to the domestic industry producing like or directly competitive products when * * * such increased imports have contributed substantially toward causing or threatening serious injury to such industry."

DOWNWARD TREND IN SALES

The decline in U.S. production of wilton and velvet carpets and rugs in recent years has closely approximated, and has resulted from, a marked decline in sales of these products by domestic producers. The following indexes (computed from quantity data in table 3) show annual changes in sales of domestically produced wilton and velvet carpets and rugs:

[1950–52=100]

1950	124
1951	86
1952	90
1953	97
1954	83
1955	92
1956	91

In 1950, largely as a result of the unusual demand engendered by the Korean crisis, manufacturers' sales were higher than in any other year during the 1950–57 period. In the adjustment period (1951–52) which followed, however, sales were substantially lower; they increased moderately in 1953 and then dropped off markedly in 1954. After a slight recovery in 1955–56, they decreased in 1957 to their lowest point for the period.

During the last 3 years for which complete data are available, 1955–57, the average annual sales of wilton and velvet carpets and rugs were 13 percent smaller than in 1950–52. Sales in 1957 were 21 percent lower than the 1950–52 average.

JOB LOSSES IN THE INDUSTRY

The general deterioration of the domestic industry producing wilton and velvet carpets and rugs, as reflected above by the decline in production and sales, was inevitably accompanied by progressive losses of job opportunities by workers who depend upon that industry for a livelihood.

The Commission obtained man-hour and wage data from most producers of wilton and velvet carpets and rugs. The reports submitted by 20 firms were sufficiently complete for the years 1950–57 for tabulation. The output of these 20 firms currently accounts for more than two-thirds of the domestic production of wilton and velvet carpets and rugs. The following indexes for recent years (computed from the data in table 8) show a generally downward trend in the number of man-hours utilized to produce wiltons and velvets in the plants of the 20 reporting firms:

1950	111
1951	95
1952	94
1953	90
1954	82
1955	87
1956	95
1957	88

The annual man-hours employed by the 20 firms in producing wilton and velvet carpets and rugs declined by about 10 percent between the two 3-year periods 1950–52 and 1955–57. In 1957, the man-hours of employment in such production were 8 percent smaller than in 1956 and 12 percent smaller than the 1950–52 average.

DETERIORATION IN THE INDUSTRY'S PROFIT POSITION

In terms of both absolute net operating profits and ratios of net operating profits to net sales, the wilton and velvet carpet-producing industry has been markedly less profitable in recent years than it was in the period before imports reached their current magnitude.

The Commission obtained detailed profit-and-loss data for recent years from most producers of wilton and velvet carpets and rugs. The returns from 17 producers, who currently account for more than two-thirds of the domestic output of wilton and velvet carpeting, were sufficiently complete to be used in analyzing the financial experience of the industry. Data covering their wilton and velvet operations only were consolidated for the years 1950–57 (table 9).

The decline in profits of the 17 firms on their wilton and velvet operations has been striking. Whereas their annual aggregate net operating profit averaged $19 million during 1950–52, it averaged only $15 million during 1955–57. In 1957, their aggregate profit was only $10 million. The dramatic decline in the net operating profit earned by the 17 firms on their wilton and velvet operations is revealed by the following indexes:

[1950–52=100]

1950	155
1951	45
1952	100
1953	96
1954	45
1955	83
1956	95
1957	50

From the foregoing it is apparent that the average annual profits earned by producers of wilton and velvet carpeting were about 24 percent smaller during the last 3 years for which data are available (1955–57) than during 1950–52. In 1957, their net operating profits, which were lower than in any year since 1954, were 50 percent smaller than the annual average during 1950–52 and 33 percent smaller than the average for the immediately preceding 3 years (1953–56). Preliminary data obtained by the Commission indicates that a further deterioration in the profit position of these firms occurred during 1958.

The decline in aggregate profits of the 17 firms in their wilton and velvet operations was paralleled by a decline in the ratio of their net operating profits to their net sales. The ratios (in percent) of net operating profits to net sales on their wilton and velvet operations, 1950–57, were as follows (table 9):

1950	14.2
1951	4.9
1952	11.0
1953	10.5
1954	5.4
1955	8.5
1956	9.8
1957	5.7

The foregoing consolidation of profits and losses for producers in the aggregate, however, fails to reflect the critical seriousness of the situation for a number of individual producers. Not only do declining profit margins threaten ultimately to destroy the industry, but recurring annual losses also forbode the imminent extinction of various individual firms. In all recent years one or more of the companies producing wilton and velvet carpets and rugs have incurred operating losses. Thus far, a total of 8 of the 17 firms have suffered such losses. In their wilton and velvet operations, one of the eight firms operated unprofitably in 6 of the years 1951 through 1957; one of them operated at a loss in 4 of those years; one in 3 years; three in 2 years; and two in 1 year. In addition, one large firm, which operated at a loss in every year during the period 1951–55, has discountinued operations entirely as a corporate entity.

CLEAR MANIFESTATION OF SERIOUS INJURY

In view of the foregoing considerations, we are of the opinion that the domestic industry producing wilton, brussels, velvet, and tapestry carpets and rugs has been seriously injured by increased imports of like competitive products. Unless relief is granted under the provisions of section 7, there is threat of further injury as imports continue to mount.

The salient facts which support our conclusion are: (1) Imports have increased in unusual proportions since 1950; (2) the increase in imports is, in substantial part, a direct result of the duty concessions granted under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade; and (3) in addition to other known difficulties besetting domestic producers, the greatly increased imports of wilton and velvet carpets and rugs have constituted—and unless relief is granted will continue to constitute—a cause of serious injury to the domestic industry. In considerably more damaging proportions than would have occurred without such increased imports, sales of domestically produced wilton and velvet carpets and rugs have declined. Unavoidably, the decline in such sales has resulted in lower levels of production and employment. These manifestations of increasing injury have culminated in a progressive deterioration of the financial position of the domestic industry producing wilton and velvet carpets and rugs.

Respectfully submitted.

WALTER R. SCHREIBER,
Commissioner.
GLENN W. SUTTON,
Commissioner.

FEDERAL LAW TO CURB BOMBINGS

Mr. CURTIS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a bill to make the sort of bombings which have recently shocked the Nation a Federal crime. This will make it possible to bring to bear the full power of the United States to curb these disgraceful crimes of violence.

The whole Nation has been outraged by the wave of bombings which have occurred in recent years. Seventy instances of this crime or attempts to commit this crime have been reported since 1954, and 27 during the last year.

These crimes, while horrible in themselves, are particularly ominous and disgraceful when directed against such public institutions as schools and places of worship. The bombing of a place of worship is a crime against God and man. These crimes involve mass intimidation of minority groups. Surely the American people will welcome every effort to strengthen the law in order to put a stop to these pernicious and un-American crimes.

There is therefore every justification for bringing to bear on this problem the power and majesty of the Federal Government by recognizing these crimes as within the Federal jurisdiction. This will enable the powerful law enforcement agencies of the Federal Government at once to lend their aid in apprehending the perpetrators of these acts of violence, and bringing them to justice.

In some instances it has been recognized that local law enforcement officials have been handicapped in their efforts to control these crimes because they have involved widespread conspiracies and illegal acts extending beyond local boundaries. These officials need assistance from Washington. They should have it. They must have it.

Fortunately Federal jurisdiction can be conferred without departing from sound precedent, without diminishing State sovereignty or jurisdiction, and without any undue extension of Federal power. Under our jurisprudence ordinary crimes are considered local in nature, and are best handled by State and local authorities. But the Federal jurisdiction extends to many crimes, particulary those having relation to interstate commerce.

Only 3 years ago the Congress saw fit to place on the statute books a law creating a new Federal crime, that of placing bombs in airplanes. Federal jurisdiction to help control the bombing outrages referred to above can be effectively conferred by provisions as to the transportation of explosives.

The bill which I have introduced is based on those principles, and amends the criminal code by adding a new section 837 to chapter 39 of title 18 of the United States Code.

I feel confident that the objective of this bill will receive strong approval from the Members of Congress and the American people.

THE GAS BILL OF 1959

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, the gas bill of last session has just been reintroduced as H.R. 366.

The greedy unconscionable gas and oil lobby, not satisfied with extreme tax favoritism and the highest rate of return on investment, has again attempted a raid on the pocket of the American consumer.

This bill is identical with last year's gas bill except for the inclusion of amendments to satisfy the coal lobby, which prevent dumping of surplus gas at low prices to large industrial users. The sole purpose of the amendments is acquisition of 15-odd votes from Congressmen in coal producing areas.

Everyone will recall the devious connivings and manipulations of the rapacious vested interests seeking enactment of this gas gouge bill during those two Congresses.

This bill was vetoed during those two Congresses because of arrogant and highly questionable lobbying practices used on its behalf. During the last session of Congress it was scheduled to be brought to the floor at the time that the famous Jack Porter letter fell into the hands of the press announcing that a $100-a-plate dinner was to be held in honor of a Member of Congress who would produce enough votes to secure passage of this fraud on the consuming public.

The bill completely does away with all effective regulation of natural gas producers, and, if passed, will cost the consumers better than $1 billion which will be extorted from the American people and placed in the coffers of the unconscionable gas and oil lobby. Anyone who uses natural gas to cook or heat his home will find his gas bill increased substantially if this measure passes.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VANIK. I want to take this opportunity to commend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] for calling the attention of the Congress to the fact that this bill has again been introduced. I hope a serious effort will not be made in this session of Congress to pass the gas bill. It is a vicious type of legislation, designed to help only the oil and gas industry which has already helped itself to abundant privilege at the expense of the Federal Treasury and the American people.

I cannot recall that any new Member of Congress was elected on a platform of special privileges for the oil and gas lobby and increased gas prices for the millions of natural gas consumers in the Northern and Eastern States. The mandate of the electorate last November was a directive to hold consumers' prices in line, and that mandate included utility prices.

How much more legislative time must be consumed before the oil and gas lobby is convinced that there is no congressional enthusiasm for a gas bill to specifically benefit their selfish interests?

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. For the benefit of the Members of the House, could they be advised as to the number of the bill so that they can check it?

Mr. DINGELL. H.R. 366 is the number of the bill.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Who is the author of the bill?

Mr. DINGELL. The author of the bill is the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the distinguished gentleman from Ohio for joining me in this effort. I know that he, as I, is well aware of the great cost of this bill to our consuming public. I am sure that he is well aware, as I am, of the difficulty which we had in connection with this bill in the last Congress. It was only through the greatest of good fortune that we were enabled to snatch victory from the jaws of defeat or that the opponents of the bill snatched defeat from the jaws of victory.

I shall look forward to the valued help of my very dear friend and colleague from Ohio in defeating this legislative monster again during this session of the Congress.

CUBA

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on January 17 I sent the following cablegram to Comdr. Fidel Castro, delegate of the executive branch in the army forces, Republic of Cuba, Havana:

SIR: People of America and all over the world are deeply shocked and horrified by the political executions now taking place in Cuba. In this hour of the 20th century of Christian civilization mankind in all nations has come to have confidence in a higher level and quality of justice.

In the spirit of peace on earth and the brotherhood of man, I appeal to you on the part of countless Americans and plead with you to temper with mercy the punishment of your fellow countrymen who have been quickly judged to be guilty of wrongs against the people of Cuba. I appeal to you for a fair trial of the accused. I appeal to you for a pattern of justice that brings faith and confidence to the Government of Cuba and respect to Cuba as a nation.

In the spirit of our ideals under God, in the belief of the canons of Christian faith, in our concept of equal justice under law, the American people, the people of the Western Hemisphere, and of the whole world of religious faith, focus their eyes and hopes upon you to establish a free democratic government in Cuba founded upon the commandments of God, upon justice and mercy, and upon honor and integrity.

It is the hope of free people everywhere this new Government of Cuba, in the words of the great American emancipator, President Abraham Lincoln, will be of the people, by the people, and for the people. Man must not assume unto himself that which belongs only to God.

EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,
Member of Congress, Fifth Massachusetts District, United States of America.

A $77 BILLION BUDGET—HOW BIG IS $77 BILLION?

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMSON of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, I believe the budget proposed by the President will provide adequately for all of our national responsibilities. Most of those who would attack it as inadequate cannot have much comprehension of the enormous sums involved. We talk about billions of dollars, but do we have any understanding of what these billions mean?

The $77 billion total of the budget is more than the amount of money needed a year ago for a whole calendar year—1957—to buy all the food and drink consumed by every American man, woman, and child. It would have paid for all our meals at home and in restaurants, for all our drink—including alcoholic beverages—and would have kept us all in cigarettes and tobacco to boot.

Another way of looking at $77 billion is to measure it against the national income. It amounts to about 20 percent of the total of the wages, salaries, business profits, interest, and rent earned by all workers, proprietors, professional men, and businessmen in the Nation for a whole year: one dollar out of every five. If we were to compare all government budgets, including State and local as well as Federal, the total would equal over one-fourth the national income—one dollar out of every four. Certainly that is enough government in a prosperous, peacetime year.

Our population has been rising rapidly, but Federal expenditures have been going up even faster. The President's budget recommends that next year we spend an amount equal to $431 for every man, woman, and child in America. This is $29 less than the $460 per capita we are spending this year, and the President deserves much credit for bringing it down. But it is still more than we spent in any previous peacetime year. It is almost as much as the $469 per capita we spent in 1953 while we were fighting a war in Korea. In contrast, we spent only $394 per capita as recently as 1955. And if we go back to the period before World War II, how wistfully I look at the $68 per capita Uncle Sam spent in 1939.

Let there be no misunderstanding. A $77 billion budget is a big budget. The Congress should join forces with the President to hold the size down. It should not push it higher.

LOWERING INTEREST RATE ON TAX-EXEMPT BONDS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HERLONG] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HERLONG. Mr. Speaker, the high rates of interest paid on new issues of State and local bonds are adding materially to the heavy burdens of these governments. With a view to broadening the market for these bonds and thereby improving the interest rates at which they can be sold, I am reintroducing the "broad passthrough" bill. My colleague on the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. CURTIS of Missouri, is joining me by introducing a similar bill, as he did in the last session.

The enactment of this legislation would provide State and local governments with a broader market for their securities by tapping the large and growing pools of funds held by investment companies. At the present time these companies are not interested in the bonds of State and local governments because the tax-exempt interest becomes taxable when distributed to the shareholders. The Herlong-Curtis bill would correct this by providing that the tax-exempt status of the interest paid on these securities would not be lost when it is passed on to the shareholders.

The broad passthrough legislation is designed to attract funds of all types of investment companies: public, private, regulated and unregulated, which are "pure" investment companies in that they derive 90 percent of their income from dividends, interest and profits from stocks and bonds. In short, this legislation provides an incentive to all investment companies to put a part of their funds into tax-exempt bonds.

The importance of this problem was brought home to me when I was in Florida over the Christmas holidays. Many of our communities are expanding rapidly and new capital facilities must be provided. The accepted method of financing such facilities, and in many instances the only feasible method, is by the sale of new bond issues. But when the bond market is flooded this becomes difficult. Local officials who have the responsibility for the sale of new issues have doubtless talked to other Members of Congress as they have to me about their worries over long-term financing. These officials point out that higher coupons must be placed upon new offerings if they are to sell, and this results in mounting debt service which will continue as far into the future as they can see.

The trouble, of course, is that State and local governments are attempting to sell new issues more rapidly than the market for them is expanding. This situation is made more serious by the fact that there is every reason to expect that the upward trend of new offerings will continue. The Severson projections which are so widely quoted show the annual volume of new issues crossing the $16 billion mark in 1968. This is more than twice the 1958 volume of approximately $7.5 billion, which is the record year to date. If the new bond issues are to be sold to advantage some of the funds accumulating in financial institutions which do not benefit greatly from tax exemption must be tapped. This is precisely what the legislation sponsored by Congressman CURTIS of Missouri and myself will do.

The need for legislation to broaden the market for State and local bonds is widely recognized. Leaders among the financial officials have been aware of this need for some time, and such diverse organizations as the American Farm Bureau Federation, Council of Chief State School Officers and chambers of commerce join such associations of local officials as the American Municipal Association and the National Association of County Officials in supporting the broad passthrough.

This is an efficient method for the Federal Government to assist the hard-pressed local governments. Municipal bonds are already tax exempt, and the enactment of this legislation will result in very little additional loss of revenue to the Treasury. The difficulty is that the existing law no longer provides enough incentive to place the bonds to advantage. This bill would extend the privilege of tax exemption to investors whose companies have funds to lend but are now withholding them because the exemption is lost when they act in their corporate capacity.

Another reason I like the passthrough as a method of assisting State and local governments is its simplicity. Existing relationships would not be disturbed. The control of the new offerings would remain with the local officials where I think it belongs. Each community would be free to build or not to build whatever it may choose with no supervision from Washington. I sincerely hope that this legislation will be enacted at this session of Congress.

THE BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON], is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, of course, it is impossible for Members of the House to evaluate at the moment the President's budget because it has just been presented to us. As I understand the presentation, the President in his budget is estimating $77 billion expenditures for the forthcoming fiscal year, and he expects to ask the Congress, and does in the budget, for $76.8 billion in his message today.

With certain carryover funds which would be available on July 1, 1959, the total availability to the Executive, in the event we should approve this budget as submitted, would be about $150 billion as of July 1, 1959. Of course, much of that money would be for long leadtime items and, of course, would not and could not, under programs agreed to, be expended in toto in the forthcoming fiscal year.

Now, it has been said here today that the real burden is on the Congress. It has been said that the Executive cannot spend a penny unless authorized to do so by the Congress. And, certainly, the Congress does have great responsibility and power in this regard. In defense of the Congress, I think it ought to be pointed out that, generally speaking, through the years, for the last 20 years, shall we say, the Congress has provided less money in appropriations to the Executive, be he Democrat or Republican, than the Executive has requested. In other words, generally speaking, requests for funds by the Executive exceed what Congress is willing to do toward the appropriation of public funds. So, if we are to judge by the previous actions and traditions of the Congress, it would seem that the chances should be reasonably good that the Congress itself would not go, certainly, very far beyond the recommendations of the Executive for spending authority. Of course, without knowing what the budget contains and what the facts and circumstances are surrounding the various requests, it would be impossible to predict just what will develop.

It could be pointed out that in the 85th Congress, 1st session, the Congress reduced the requests of the Executive in excess of $5 billion in funds requested for appropriation. I do not know what our future record will be, but as contrasted with the Executive, the record of the Congress for economy has been better in the past than the record of the Executive.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman whether during his entire service in the Congress he has ever seen a greater effort to shift the responsibility for Federal spending from the Executive to the Congress than has been made in this budget and on the floor here today.

Mr. MAHON. Your point is well taken. Of course, there has been a very great effort to place the full responsibility on Congress. We readily accept within proper limits the responsibility which is ours. But we cannot accept the responsibility for all expenditures of the Government and leave out of the picture the Executive, who, in turn, generally over the past years has requested more money for expenditure than Congress has provided.

Mr. GARY. And who prepares the budget and submits it to the Congress?

May I say to the gentleman that I, too, am willing to accept the responsibility that the Congress has; and, furthermore, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I shall not only try to hold down the outside expenditures we have heard so much about, but I shall also try to cut the President's budget. I believe it can be done, and I shall put forth my best efforts to that end.

Mr. MAHON. I think it would be well to point out that the country is expanding, is growing, and expenses of Government have been increasing through the years. During the 7 years preceding the present administration, during the last 7 years of the Truman administration, the national debt was cut by $3 billion. During the 7 years under the present administration, the national debt has increased in that period about $19 billion. And, generally speaking, those appropriations have been for items and for funds which have been requested by the Bureau of the Budget and by the President. Of course, Congress could always deny funds which are requested by the Executive. But in this budget we are requested to raise the national debt limit to $285 billion, and not on a temporary basis, as was done in the past, but on a permanent basis, with apparently the acceptance by the Executive of high spending levels by the U.S. Government.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FORD. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] is correct that over the years, whether the administration has been Democratic or Republican, Congresses have been more economy-minded than the Executive in the area of direct obligational authority. But the gentleman from Texas knows, because he feels precisely as I do, that, in this outside area where we give to the Executive the right to draw on the Treasury by bypassing the Committee on Appropriations, this Congress in recent years has done a very poor job. That is where we have gotten into our principal fiscal troubles in the last few years. We should stop policies of that kind. We should restrict operations of that kind and force all expenditures to go directly through the Committee on Appropriations. If we did that we would not have some of the problems that we have today.

Mr. MAHON. It is true that the chance of holding the President's budget to the present figure or reducing it when it comes to direct appropriations is greater than in the area of these so-called back-door entrances to the Treasury whereby, through means other than direct appropriations coming through the Committee on Appropriations, money is made available for expenditure. It is going to be necessary for us to watch all obligational authority, whether it be in appropriation bills, or in other bills from other committees. It is necessary to watch them all because they will have to be added up at the end of the session to determine what the box score is with respect to whether or not Congress has increased or decreased the President's budgetary requests.

The President has said that this is a balanced budget. That is based on so many "ifs" that one is constrained to feel that there must have been a great deal of misgiving in the holding out to the public of this hope of a balanced budget.

For example, this is not to be a balanced budget, according to the presentation today, unless the revenues of the Federal Government in the coming fiscal year are $9 billion greater than they are to be in this fiscal year. That is a pretty big "if." I hope they go that high or higher. Another contingency is if Congress provides for the 5-cent first-class postage; and a number of other things are in this picture before it may be said that this is a balanced budget. It is a balanced budget if we raise revenue through various legislative measures and if the national revenue from taxes on the people increase by $9 billion in the coming year, and that is a pretty optimistic hope on which to base this budget. We must remember that when the budget for 1959 was presented to the Congress last year it was estimated that the budget would be balanced—a surplus of $466 million was estimated. It was estimated that the budget of 1959, as presented, would be a balanced budget. The truth is the miscalculations were so great we are now going into the red to the extent of an average of about $1 billion a month.

NINETEEN HUNDRED AND SIXTY BUDGET—PROVIDES ADEQUATELY FOR IMPORTANT PROGRAMS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LAIRD] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, the discussions we have had on the floor of the House today regarding the budget message of the President have indeed been most refreshing. There has been a real concern on the part of the members of the House Appropriations Committee to see that we do have a balanced budget in the fiscal year 1960. There are also great pressures not only from the floor of the House of Representatives but in the other body to see that the revenue budget as submitted by the President today is reduced and the expenditures budget as submitted by the President is increased.

This may be good politics but it is certainly bad for America.

One of the striking aspects of the budget which President Eisenhower sent to Congress is how well his recommendations provide for meeting our national responsibilities while reducing spending nearly $4 billion from the swollen total for the current fiscal year.

Even before anyone knew the details of the budget, it was being attacked for endangering our national security or ignoring our domestic welfare. Now that we can see the budget, we know that the budget provides $145 million increase in spending for the Armed Forces; $137 million increase in spending for the new space agency; $115 million increase for atomic energy, with emphasis on power and other peaceful uses; $96 million increase for the Federal Aviation Agency; $89 million increase for the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare; $139 million increase for water resources and other public works, not counting the half-billion dollar increase in spending for highways from a separate trust fund.

All of these programs are larger than ever before in peacetime. How did the President succeed in providing for these important increases and still reduce the budget?

First, some large items in the current year will not be repeated in the coming year. These include the additional U.S. subscription to the International Monetary Fund, the temporary programs for the acreage reserve, the special purchase of housing mortgages, the advances to States for extended unemployment benefits, and the retroactive pay increase for Federal workers.

Second, the President is planning to make some Government lending programs support themselves by stepping up the sale of some of their portfolio assets and by encouraging more private lending with flexible interest rates.

Third, the budget estimates significant reductions for certain programs in the normal course of events. With normal crops, price support costs should be lower. Military assistance to our allies will be less in view of large deliveries in previous years. Stockpiling objectives are largely met.

Finally, the President recommends some legislative changes to reduce spending. The most important of these are revised postal rates and keeping the highway program on a pay-as-we-go basis.

Combined with careful review of many smaller items, these major reductions make it possible to balance the budget without a general tax increase and without slashing essential programs for national security, for economic growth, and for individual welfare. I think the President has done an excellent job of showing how our Nation can progress and keep a sound dollar.

PROPOSED STAMP TO COMMEMORATE BATTLE OF KINGS MOUNTAIN

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to point out to our colleagues that I have introduced again today a bill requesting the Post Office Department to issue a stamp commemorating the Battle of Kings Mountain, which turned the tide of victory in the southern campaign in the Revoluntionary War. This stamp would herald and salute those heroes from Tennessee, North Carolina, Georgia, South Carolina, and many from other States, who fought for freedom there.

That great organization of patriotic ladies, the Daughters of the American Revolution, are interested in this legislation. They have consistently worked to preserve the memories of those hallowed victories. I am sure, too, the veterans of this country, who have emulated the braveries of their forefathers, would appreciate this stamp.

I would like to review the history of that battle.

When Lord Cornwallis marched into South Carolina, he assigned to Tarlton, the territory immediately to his left, and to Patrick Ferguson, he assigned the territory farther to his left, and westward, being the mountain region.

Colonel Ferguson had marched through South Carolina and on October 5 or 6, 1780, he reached Kings Mountain and there he encamped. Ferguson stated that God Almighty and all the rebels out of hell could not move him. He had with him Tories or Loyalists, but no British troops.

The American forces had assembled at Sycamore Shoals, on the Wautauga River and at Cowpens, South Carolina. These were the over-mountain men and the Whigs of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. They had joined forces at Cowpens for the purpose of pursuing Ferguson and annihilating him. They numbered about 1,100 men. It is believed that the Tory forces also numbered about 1,100 men. Ferguson realized that he was being pursued by American forces, and fearing that he might be outnumbered, sent word to Charlotte, Cornwallis' headquarters, to send Tarlton and his forces to his aid. But, Providence, whom he had so recently challenged, took a hand as He always takes a hand, and the waters of the Catawba River over which Tarlton would have to cross were so swollen by heavy rains that he could not reach Ferguson.

As the American forces marched through the country, they were joined by many others. Even after the shooting started history tells us neighborhood farmers joined in the fighting, some for the Whigs and some for the Tories.

Ferguson evidently did not realize how close the enemy was, and was also holding to the hope that aid would arrive from Charlotte, but the Whig forces were hastening toward his encampment. They had gained much information from the people along the way and knew pretty well the lay of the land at Kings Mountain.

When less than a mile from the Tories, the American troops dismounted and left a few men in charge of the horses. They formed two lines of march in order to completely surround Ferguson. Colonel Cleveland led his men to the west side of the mountain. Colonel Campbell led his men to the east side and north of Ferguson. The Tories were now trapped and could not retreat.

Which side fired the first shot is not known, but the fighting started about 3 p.m. and went on for over an hour. The American forces had already learned that Ferguson was wearing a checked shirt over his uniform. Colonel Hambright, one of the American officers, issued orders as follows in his Pennsylvania German accent, "Well, poys, when you see dot man mit the pig shirt on over his clothes you know who him is, and mark him mit your rifles."

The British being on a high level were at a great disadvantage in having to shoot downward and in danger of hitting their own men, but the American forces were able to shoot over the heads of their comrades and were able to take much better aim. They also had many large trees to use for shelter.

During the battle, Ferguson mounted on his horse and blowing a whistle moved from one point to another to encourage his troops. He was sighted by the Americans and six or eight bullets hit him and he was killed instantly. The mountain was a holocaust of smoke and fire; the earth littered with the dead, and drenched with blood. After Ferguson was killed, Colonel de Peyster took command, but about 15 minutes later they raised the white flag.

The American losses were 28 and the British were about 300. The surviving Tories were captured and made prisoners of war.

The battle at Kings Mountain was not only the turning point in the American Revolution, but has been called one of the great battles of all history.

THE DEMOCRATIC CONGRESS MUST KEEP FAITH WITH SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the Members' attention to a letter which a small businessman wrote to President Eisenhower 2 days after the November 4 election. It reads:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., November 6, 1958.

Mr. DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER,
The President,
The White House,
Washington, D. C.

RESPECTED SIR: In your press conference yesterday you wanted to know what happened to the Republican Party—well I can tell you in two words, "big business."

The small businessman doesn't have a chance. A citizen cannot start a small business and survive, which is a terrible mistake, therefore, he must work for large corporations and become dependent upon them instead of being independent in his own small business.

Take my own case, the chainstores have driven the smaller stores out of business then these same chains have consolidated or bought up smaller chains and they now have a monopoly over the buyer, the farmer and myself and anyone else connected with the food business which is the biggest business in the United States—$50 billion a year.

I am a Republican but under the above conditions existing under the Republicans I'm quitting the party and millions of others are doing the same.

You are a smart man in many respects and a gentleman but you don't know or realize what big business is doing to all of us.

I am no crackpot as you can see from the enclosed telegrams received from a former President of the United States for my work during the war in which you played such a large part. I would appreciate hearing from you and the return of these telegrams for my records.

Cordially yours,

WILLIAM J. MCCORMICK.

The writer of this particular letter is a former president of his trade association—the United Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Association—and he has had occasion to observe the trends which disturb him, not just in his own business, but on a broad front. He is deeply disturbed by the growing monopolization of the retail grocery trade—a trade which has been regarded as the last stronghold of small business.

Yet this letter is no different in its essentials from the expressions we have all heard from small-business people in all lines of business.

SMALL BUSINESS VOTED DEMOCRATIC IN DESPERATION

There are some 5 million small businesses in the country, which is about the same as the number of farm families. I could not say just what part these small-business people played in the Democratic sweep last November, but I suspect that Mr. McCormick was not far off in saying that millions were, as he put it, quitting the Republican Party. In any case, we can be sure that small-business people have not left their old political habitat for light causes. They have left in desperation. They supported the Democratic candidates, not merely because they had no other place to go—they could have gone fishing. They voted for the Democratic candidates because the Democratic Party has seemed to offer some promise that it will do the things that must be done to give independent businessmen a fair chance to survive. I trust that we will keep faith with these people.

This is a serious challenge facing us. As we know, much more than just the welfare of small-business people is involved; the whole national welfare is involved in many direct and indirect ways.

SMALL BUSINESS NEEDS ACTION, NOT LIPSERVICE

But to fulfill our promise to restore fair competitive opportunity for small business will not be easy. This will require stern measures. We will get nowhere by passing measures which sound good but prove to have little effect. Small business people are disenchanted with lip service. Nor will we make friends by passing only potentially good measures and turning them over to an executive agency to implement. Small business people know as well as we know that such measures will come to nothing. So we must, I think, pass stern measures and make them definite and specific, so that each businessman can determine for himself what his rights and duties are; and when we pass measures that must involve administrative discretion, then at least we must try to put their administration in independent commissions or boards, as far removed from control and influence by the big-business policymakers as possible.

Getting down to specifics, there is no single measure which would restore a fair, competitive business climate. I wish there were one magic pushbutton which might solve all small business problems. The House Small Business Committee has found, however—and I think the same could be said of the Senate Small Business Committee—that these problems arise from a number of sources. To put it in a nutshell, our whole complex of laws and administrative regulations is biased in favor of the big; this encourages, certainly up to a point a steady trend toward monoply. Where the laws and regulations provide subsidies and incentives, they provide them most abundantly to the giant firms. And where the laws are deficient in their prohibitions—as is true of the antitrust and trade regulation laws—they permit abuses of power, and they permit consolidations of power to be made for no other reason than that greater abuses may be exercised.

MANY MEASURES ARE NEEDED TO RESTORE COMPETITIVE OPPORTUNITY

Just before this Congress convened, the Select Committee on Small Business in the 85th Congress submitted to the House its final report, giving an account of its investigations and setting out its recommendations. There are some 25 recommendations, which are too many and complex for me to discuss now. Copies of this report are, however, available for the Members' study and consideration. Regrettably, the major recommendations to be found in this report are the same ones which the House Small Business Committee made at the end of the 84th Congress 2 years earlier. The 85th Congress passed several small-business measures and, on the whole, made an impressive record of accomplishments for small business. But the more important measures are yet to be passed.

If I were to name the kinds of actions which are most seriously and universally needed by small business, they would be these:

Measures to bring about a more equitable distribution of the tax burden.

Measures to strengthen the antitrust laws, to close the loopholes in these laws and to put some teeth in these laws.

Finally, measures which will carry forward the program started in the last Congress to help small firms obtain access to long-term credit and venture capital. These are the things that are of overwhelming importance.

FEDERAL TAXES ARE DISCRIMINATORY

When we look seriously at the impact of the present Federal tax structure, the result is a shocking discovery that small firms are being taxed out of existence. The escape hatch from high individual income taxes which is generally available in the corporate form of business is not, as a practical matter, available to the many extremely small firms. Furthermore, the actual burden of the corporate income tax falls quite differently on corporations of different sizes. The big corporations have practical powers for shifting the burden of this tax in large degree, and in many cases completely. By the same power which permits them to administer prices, these corporations are largely escaping the corporate income tax, and, by the same token, they are providing their stockholders a means of accumulating savings and assets without paying individual income taxes.

There are many ways in which Federal taxes can be made more equitable. Many people say that to make these taxes completely fair, we would repeal the corporate income tax and require each stockholder to pay the individual income tax on his pro rata share of the corporation's undivided profits.

THE ANTITRUST LAWS ARE BECOMING A BAD JOKE

The antitrust laws are, I fear, becoming little more than a bad joke. Certainly there should be some real penalties for violating the Serman Act. The antimerger law should be made effective. And most of all, the antiprice discrimination law needs to be restored. Unfortunately, the Supreme Court several years ago made an interpretation of this Robinson-Patman Act which, when followed to its logical conclusion, has eliminated practically all restraints on price discriminations. Yet this practice of discriminating in prices involves the most universal abuse of power to be found in the business system today. It is doing more than anything else to destroy small firms unjustly, to enhance the artificial advantages of bigness, and to centralize the control of business.

SMALL BUSINESS IS STARVED FOR CAPITAL

Finally, if discriminatory taxes and broken-down antitrust laws were not enough, there is the problem of obtaining capital, even where a small firm offers a good promise of overcoming these first handicaps.

Few people have difficulty recognizing this problem where it occurs abroad. For example, the feature editorial of the Washington Post and Times Herald this morning observes that Latin America is starved for capital. And this editorial lauds the administration's agreement to help establish a new inter-American bank for the purpose of making additional capital available to Latin America. Yet, strangely, many people are slow to recognize the same problem at home. Small business in this country is also starved for capital.

Last year the Congress took an important step toward solving this problem when it passed the Small Business Investment Act. At that time the Small Business Administration, after some delay, came around to acknowledging that the problem exists, and finally the SBA gave a lukewarm endorsement to legislation to correct this problem. Many of us came to believe that perhaps the SBA had been converted and that it would put this new program into effect promptly and with some of the vigor which the program requires. In this belief, or at least on this hope, the SBA was given the job of administering the act. The results have been most disappointing. It is clear now that the Administration really has no intention of putting this program into effect, except perhaps eventually, on a token basis.

CRITICIZING THE ADMINISTRATION'S FAILURES IS NOT ENOUGH

It is not enough that we Democrats criticize the SBA for its failures in administration. Small business people have had enough of that. They have known for some time that the SBA is mostly a hoax. I hardly ever receive a letter or hear a small businessman express himself about his experiences with this Agency that has anything good to say about it. I do not mean to criticize unfairly the many conscientious employees of this Agency. I know, in fact, that most of them are devoted to the task of helping small business, and they work hard, and they work long hours. This does not overcome the fact, however, that they really have very little to work with. The policies made at the top side are deficient. We must then, it seems to me, change the method of administration if we are to show small business people we really mean to help them and not merely make partisan noises about the failure of this administration.

If we can bring about corrections in these three fields I have mentioned, we will, I think, make a tremendous restoration of opportunity for small business.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DIXON (at the request of Mr. HALLECK) from January 18, 1959, to January 31, 1959, inclusive, on account of official business.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

Mr. HERLONG (at the request of Mr. MCCORMACK), for 10 minutes, today.

Mr. ROOSEVELT, for 1 hour on Monday next, January 26.

Mr. MAHON, for 10 minutes, today.

Mr. HEMPHILL (at the request of Mr. ALBERT), for 5 minutes, and revise and extend his remarks at that point in the RECORD.

Mr. LAIRD, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. VANIK, for 15 minutes, on January 20, 1959.

Mr. PUCINSKI (at the request of Mr. ALBERT), for 30 minutes, on January 22.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to extend remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or to revise and extend remarks, was granted to:

Mrs. KEE (at the request of Mr. BAILEY).

Mr. TEAGUE of Texas and to include extraneous matter.

Mr. RAY.

(At the request of Mr. ARENDS, and to include extraneous matter, the following:)

Mr. JENSEN.

Mrs. DWYER and to include extraneous matter.

(At the request of Mr. ALBERT, the following Members to extend their remarks and include extraneous matter:)

Mr. DENT.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 39 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 20, 1959, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

348. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on the audit of the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1958 (H. Doc. No. 46); to the Committee on Government Operations and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

349. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on the audit of Federal Prison Industries, Inc., for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1958 (H. Doc. No. 47); to the Committee on Government Operations and ordered to be printed.

350. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on the audit of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1958 (H. Doc. No. 48); to the Committee on Government Operations and ordered to be printed.

351. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on the audit of the Export-Import Bank of Washington for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1958 (H. Doc. No. 49); to the Committee on Government Operations and ordered to be printed.

352. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on the audit of the Federal home loan banks for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1958 (H. Doc. No. 50); to the Committee on Government Operations and ordered to be printed.

353. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on the audit of Federal Crop Insurance Corporation for the fiscal year 1958 (H. Doc. No. 51); to the Committee on Government Operations and ordered to be printed.

354. A letter from the Secretary of Defense, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation entitled "A bill to provide for the promotion of economic and social development in the Ryukyu Islands"; to the Committee on Armed Services.

355. A letter from the Acting Assistant Secretary of Defense (Supply and Logistics), transmitting reports on Army, Navy, and Air Force prime contract awards to small and other business firms completed during fiscal year 1959 through October, pursuant to Public Law 85-536; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

356. A letter from the President, Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation entitled "A bill to amend the act entitled 'An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove dangerous and unsafe buildings and parts thereof, and for other purposes', approved March 1, 1899, as amended"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

357. A letter from the President, Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation entitled "A bill to amend the act for the regulation of the practice of dentistry in the District of Columbia, and for the protection of the people from empiricism in relation thereto, approved June 6, 1892, as amended"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

358. A letter from the President, Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation entitled "A bill to amend the act entitled 'An act to provide for the taking of a school census in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' approved February 4, 1925"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

359. A letter from the President, Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation entitled "A bill to amend the act entitled 'An act relating to the levying and collection of taxes and assessments, and for other purposes,' approved June 25, 1938"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

360. A letter from the President, Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation entitled "A bill to make the act approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. 1045, 1057, ch. 422), providing for the appointment of special policemen by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, applicable to Government departments and agencies"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HOSMER: Petition of certain residents of the 18th Congressional District of California requesting Congress to take the necessary action to insure continuation of the Un-American Activities Committee, the past achievements of which have been of inestimable value to our national security; to the Committee on Rules.

42. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the president, Kiwanis Club of Six Points, Corpus Christi, Tex., relative to reconsidering the proposal to close the overhaul and repair department of the U.S. Naval Air Station, Corpus Christi; to the Committee on Armed Services.

43. Also, petition of the secretary, Lodge 102, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Minneapolis, Minn., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to endorsing statehood for Hawaii; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

44. Also, petition of the president, Dothan Ice Cream Co., Dothan, Ala., relative to a resolution adopted by the Dothan Rotary Club requesting that the proposed lock and dam on the Chattachoochee River at Columbia be named after Hon. GEORGE W. ANDREWS, Congressman for the Third Congressional District of Alabama; to the Committee on Public Works.

45. Also, petition of the executive secretary, American Association of State Highway Officials, Washington, D.C., relative to a resolution adopted by the highway officials at the recent annual meeting at San Francisco dealing with a request of the Territory of Hawaii to study the need for a defense highway system in the Territory; to the Committee on Public Works.

46. Also, petition of Eugenio C. Nicolas, Manila, Philippines, relative to war damages payable to the Nicolas Estates; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Text of Address by Hon. L. H. Fountain, of North Carolina, Before the 35th Annual American Municipal Congress, at the Statler-Hilton Hotel, Boston, Mass., December 1, 1958

OF
HON. FLORENCE P. DWYER
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, January 19, 1959

Mrs. DWYER. Mr. Speaker, it is a well-known fact that one of the increasingly critical situations we face today involves the need of growing metropolitan areas for more efficient means of servicing their huge populations.

One of the principal handicaps in the way of developing such improved means is the lack of coordination between the large number of Federal, State, regional, county, and local governmental units that exercise at least partial legal authority within metropolitan areas—despite the fact that their individual problems are often areawide in scope.

The challenge that this situation represents to the people and the governing bodies of such areas has been strikingly set forth in an address delivered before the 35th Annual American Municipal Congress in Boston on December 1, 1958, by our distinguished and esteemed colleague, Congressman L. H. FOUNTAIN, of North Carolina.

His address, which I include as a part of my remarks in the RECORD, is the kind of clear-minded and thoughtful analysis of a complex problem which we have come to expect from the gentleman.

His awareness of the problem, his understanding of the factors delaying progress, and his insight into the need for integrating and coordinating the activities of the various levels of government impressed me greatly.

This is a problem that concerns metropolitan areas generally, but none more than the greatest metropolitan area in the world, the tri-State region surrounding New York City, part of which I am honored to represent.

As ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations, I have found it most pleasant and instructive working with our chairman, Mr. FOUNTAIN. I look forward to a continuation of this constructive association, especially in regard to the matter at hand.

Meanwhile, I commend Congressman FOUNTAIN'S address to all our colleagues, particularly those Members who represent the three-fifths of our total population presently living within the 174 metropolitan areas in the United States:

CITY-FEDERAL RELATIONS

I am grateful for the privilege of being with you today. I am honored to be able to speak to so imposing an assemblage of outstanding Americans as are gathered here on the occasion of the 35th Annual Congress of the American Municipal Association.

I feel at home in seeing the familiar faces of so many mayors who testified last year at the hearings of the Intergovernmental Relations Subcommittee, which I have the good fortune of chairing. It is an interesting coincidence that we are meeting today in the very city where the subcommittee commenced its regional hearings in September 1957. The city of Boston is also the home of our great and universally admired majority leader in the House of Representatives—JOHN W. MCCORMACK.

We are concerned at this meeting with a fundamental problem of American government; namely, the relationship of the Federal Government to the cities. In constitutional terms, of course, the cities have no independent status in our Federal system. Although the Constitution is silent on the role of the cities, realism as well as our democratic values make it imperative that municipal problems be given appropriate attention when dealing with intergovernmental affairs.

In the context of modern-day society, it is meaningless for many purposes to speak exclusively of Federal-State relations without due recognition of the municipal level of government. By the same token, realism prompts us not to delude ourselves into believing the State government, because of its shortcomings, is an outmoded political institution that will disappear in the framework of a new federalism. What is sorely needed in these times is a candid appraisal of the facts of present-day American federalism.

Woodrow Wilson said in 1908: "The question of the relation of the States to the Federal Government is the cardinal question of our constitutional system." That observation is equally valid today. However, in ascertaining the proper Federal-State relationship, we must not lose sight of some dramatic changes that have taken place in the half century since President Wilson's time. Let us briefly review some of these developments and assess their significance for the Federal-State relationship of today.

First, the growth of urban communities, and particularly of metropolitan areas in recent years, has been nothing short of phenomenal. Although this distinguished audience certainly needs no introduction to this development, it might be useful for the purpose of perspective to indicate the magnitude of this trend.

At the beginning of the 20th century less than 40 percent of the American people were urban residents. Today, with an urban population totaling more than 104 million, nearly 2 out of every 3 Americans live in an urban community.

In 1910 only 44 population centers, with a total of 25 million people, were found to meet the census classification of a metropolitan district, although the number of such districts would have been somewhat larger under the present definition of a metropolitan area. Today there are 174 metropolitan areas containing close to 100 million people. Almost three-fifths of our total population live in these areas, and this percentage is constantly increasing. In this connection, it is estimated that roughly nine-tenths of the Nation's population growth since the 1950 census has occurred in the metropolitan areas.

With the continuing growth of new and the expansion of existing metropolitan areas, we are witnessing a development which has been described by some observers as the urban region. The largest of these regions now extends for more than 600 miles along the eastern seaboard from north of Boston through the urbanized area south of Washington, D.C. It is not difficult to envisage the extension of this continuous urban band from Maine to Florida, as well as westward, in the years to come. Needless to say, the increase in the density of our population and the formation of contiguous urban communities increases the cost of Government services and the need for intergovernmental cooperation.

While we have become largely a nation of urban dwellers, this development has not been adequately reflected in the composition of State legislative bodies, which continue, all too frequently, to retain the representative character and outlook of our earlier rural society. Despite this political lag, municipal problems continue to increase in complexity as our growing and mobile population overflows local political boundaries to form newer satellite communities. The result is an imbalance between political institutions and social and economic patterns, an imbalance which usually means financial difficulties for the core city and the inefficient or even conflicting use of governmental facilities in the metropolitan area.

What is the remedy for these problems? As a first order of business, State legislatures should enlarge the taxing and other "home rule" powers of the cities to an extent commensurate with their administrative capabilities and their fiscal needs and capacities. At the local level there is need for bold experimentation with new organizational forms and methods to relate our large cities to metropolitan area needs and resources. These are not easy tasks. In a few minutes I want to discuss the outlook for their accomplishment and the Federal Government's responsibility in this connection.

It is my firm conviction that we must have strong local self-government in this country if we are to preserve our Federal system. Monopoly is no more desirable in Government than it is in industry or science. The free competition of ideas and a broad base of participation in the political affairs of the Nation are indispensable ingredients of democracy.

Whenever the States and the municipalities are able and willing to perform a particular public function, I believe it important that the Federal Government avoid exercising monopolistic control in that field, unless it can be clearly and convincingly demonstrated that the national interest requires a highly centralized program. State and local governments, like individuals, should and must be permitted to develop their full potentialities.

On the other hand, if the States and localities neglect their responsibilities, whether we like it or not the consequences will surely be a further concentration of power in the Federal Government. I was impressed by an eloquent expression of this thought made during the hearings of our intergovernmental relations subcommittee earlier this year. The witness said:

"The real danger to our Federal system lies not in deliberate aggrandizement of the National Government but in the invitation to national action which lies in disuse or misuse of State powers. The first line of defense against complete centralization is not in Washington but in the State capitols, the county courthouses, the city and town halls, and the polling places where State and local issues are decided."

There is much wisdom in that statement.

The question of a proper division of responsibility between the Federal Government and the States and localities is a perennial one in a Federal system.

The proposal has been made that we distribute public functions in such a manner that each level of government will have complete and independent responsibility for particular activities. In my judgment, however, it is unrealistic to assume all governmental problems can be neatly compartmentalized and handled in this fashion. Certain functions by their nature can and should be performed exclusively by a single level of government. Others, however, require a high degree of intergovernmental cooperation for effective performance.

The proper balance of Federal, State, and local responsibilities is a changing one which should depend, among other considerations, on the competence, responsiveness, and the resourcefulness of the various levels and units of government.

People sometimes lose sight of the fact that cities must undertake large capital investment programs to construct the facilities necessary for providing public services. Unfortunately, too, it is ordinarily much more difficult for a city to embark upon a capital improvement or expansion program than it is for a private corporation. Not only is municipal action frequently circumscribed by rigid debt and taxing limitations, but the city fathers must also wage a successful sales campaign for public approval. And all too often it is a thankless task to convince the voter that he should agree to bear a heavier tax burden, especially if the project is something as remote and unappealing as a sewage treatment plant which might be of greater direct benefit to the people downstream than to the local community.

Yet, as the world's wealthiest nation, it is essential that we devote a portion of our resources to public capital improvements, not only for our own welfare but also as a legacy for the generations of tomorrow. As to our financial ability, although our national debt is many times larger than the combined debt of all of the other nations of the world put together, it is a sobering experience to compare the gross national product of the United States with that of less fortunate nations. For example, the total market value of all goods and services produced last year in India, with its nearly 400 million people, was under $30 billion, or less than one-fifteenth our current rate of output of almost $450 billion a year. India's total national product is not much larger than the amount of the decline in the American economy during the 1957–58 recession.

It is clear that as a Nation we have the financial ability to meet our public responsibilities. The problem is more basically one of stimulating our social consciousness. For some purposes, the use of Federal incentives is unquestionably a valid method and Federal leadership a necessary condition.

However, as a political ideal, the responsibility for public services should be decentralized to the maximum extent possible. The cities should be permitted and encouraged to perform all functions within their competence and the States likewise should assume greater responsibility for meeting public needs. When the cities cannot do the job alone in some necessary but costly programs, they should, as a general rule, first look to the States and fight at the State level for assistance. If the States cannot or will not help, the cities are then justified in seeking assistance from the Federal Government.

The theory of local responsibility most often breaks down in practice, as you gentlemen are well aware, because of a restrictive attitude at the State level. It is indefensible when State governments remain unresponsive to public needs and, at the same time, prevent their political subdivisions from acting in these areas. While some State officials complain very bitterly about centralization of authority in Washington, local officials in the same States complain about the centralization of State government. I believe that the States should endow their municipalities with adequate legal authority and taxing powers to govern themselves in local matters. The fear of abuse of power by locally elected officials, which undoubtedly motivated many of the State restrictions now in existence, is generally an anachronism as applied to the cities of today. Municipal government has come a long way since Lincoln Steffens reported on the shame of American cities in a series of articles published little more than half a century ago. Inflexible and minute limitations on the powers of local government also suggest a distrust of the local electorate, which is most unflattering to a democratic society.

While State government must assume a large share of the blame for obstructing local self-government, this does not absolve municipal officials and local citizens of an obligation to exert greater effort for the improvement of these conditions; nor does it automatically justify a reliance upon Federal aid. How many proposed bond issues and constitutional amendments, we might ask ourselves, have been defeated at the polls because local officials did not do an effective job of educating the voters as to their merits?

I must frankly question whether the cities are doing all that they might to solve their problems. Not infrequently cities, as well as States, neglect performing tasks of which they are capable with the expectation that the Federal Government will come to their assistance. It is my feeling that at times local people ask for help in providing services which they would be unwilling to pay for themselves. And I think it is equally true that groups interested in particular public services often take the easier course of seeking assistance at the national level rather than fight for effective and representative government at the State and local levels. For our Federal system to fulfill its greatest promise, it is essential that public officials demonstrate initiative, imagination, and responsibility at all levels of government.

Although in many States the cards are stacked against the urban communities in connection with obtaining an equitable voice in State policy determinations and adequate home rule powers, there is much that persistence and hard work can accomplish.

Existing conditions call for an organized action program directed to the State level. I believe that a great deal might be accomplished by an intensive effort to awaken citizen interest and support in this area. Your member organizations might take the lead in joining with other civic groups to conduct an all-out campaign for the fair apportionment of State legislatures and for State constitutional reform.

It is regrettable that a number of State legislatures have failed for so long to comply with their State constitutional requirements relating to the reappointment of election districts. Obviously, it is not an easy step for them to take, but it is a situation which can best be remedied by the States themselves. If these States persist in neglecting their duty to reapportion, such inaction may well be interpreted in some quarters as an invitation for Federal court intervention—a step which I believe many of us would dislike because of other fundamental principles involved. It is significant, I think, that last summer a Federal court panel for the first time accepted jurisdiction in a case involving apportionment, but it deferred a decision on the issues in order to allow the new Minnesota State legislature, which meets in January, an opportunity to take appropriate action.

Now let us examine the question of what constitutes an appropriate Federal policy toward the cities.

As a basic proposition, I would suggest the need for a Federal leadership role to help assure the maintenance of a strong, healthy Nation. National strength cannot exist without strength and vitality in our State and local governments. Our Nation has become so interrelated that disease, poverty, illiteracy, or crime in any of its parts is inevitably transmitted to the whole and weakens our national social fabric. The provision of research and technical assistance to the cities and States for combating problems such as these is universally recognized as a proper Federal responsibility.

A related method by which the Federal Government can and should help the cities to help themselves is through the planning grant. It is imperative in these times that our social inventiveness keep pace with our scientific and technological achievements. This is especially true with respect to solving the traffic, mass transportation, education, urban blight, water, and other problems that plague the large cities and metropolitan areas. Planning assistance, such as that authorized for certain urban areas under the Housing Act, is a constructive approach for solving these problems which are nationwide in their impact.

Another constructive way to facilitate local self-reliance is to assure the availability of adequate revenue sources. The Intergovernmental Relations Subcommittee, in its recent report on Federal grants-in-aid, stressed the importance of the Federal Government's making available to the States and localities those revenue sources that are not of primary importance for Federal financing and which are well adapted for State and local use. While such Federal self-restraint would be wholesome in any event, we must recognize as a weakness of this policy the fact that it would not benefit the cities in many cases without corresponding State action.

In view of this difficulty, and also in recognition of the fact that fiscal ability does not always coincide with the need for services, the subcommittee concluded in its unanimous report that the Federal grant should be regarded as a valid method of harnessing cooperative governmental effort for the accomplishment of well-defined national objectives. The subcommittee rejected the idea that there are easy classification schemes for determining whether or not a grant program should be undertaken or continued. It concluded, instead, that each grant proposal ought to be judged completely but very carefully on its merits.

Finally, and by no means least in importance, I would suggest that the Federal Government take all reasonable steps to promote a closer and more effective cooperation and understanding between the levels of government. One move in this direction would be the establishment of a permanent Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, as was recommended by our subcommittee. Such a central body, representative of the local, State, and Federal viewpoints, would, I hope, provide needed machinery for the cooperative study and consideration of common problems. I intend to introduce an appropriate bill in the 86th Congress to implement this recommendation and invite the support of your organization for that measure.

I have no illusions that a permanent advisory body will be a panacea for all intergovernmental problems. Nevertheless, as a medium for improving communications and mutual understanding, I believe it is a step in the right direction. I sincerely believe there is an urgent and growing need for the establishment of better cooperation and closer working relations not only between the Federal Government and the States but between State and local government officials as well.

I am reminded here of Alexander Pope's couplet which says:

"For forms of government let fools contest;
Whate'er is best administer'd is best."

These lines undoubtedly overstate the case, but they contain a message worth contemplating. Organizational arrangements are useful tools for achieving objectives, but they do not guarantee the desired goals. We must still rely to a large degree on the ability and the willingness of men, and units of government, to see each other's point of view and to seek better working relationships.

As a note of personal philosophy, I cannot emphasize too strongly my belief that the possession of rights entails corresponding responsibilities. States rights should not be used as an excuse for indifference to public problems. Neither should easy access to Washington be used as a means for centralizing political power, a development which could ultimately destroy our Federal system.

There are no easy solutions or automatic mechanisms for running a democratic government. Constant vigilance and hard work are the price we must pay for our democratic institutions.

I thank you.

The Birthday of Robert E. Lee

OF
HON. BEN F. JENSEN
OF IOWA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, January 19, 1959

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, on the 19th of January 1807, at Stratford on the Potomac, Westmoreland County, Va., a baby was born. His name was Robert E. Lee.

There were about 6 million people in the United States at that time—some 900,000 in Virginia at that time. That year people would be talking about Napoleon's threat to the peace of Europe. They would take sides about Aaron Burr's acquittal on a Federal charge of treason at Richmond. They would wonder at the success of Robert Fulton's steamboat Clermont, on its run from New York City to Albany. What was this world coming to?

The world was in turmoil when Robert E. Lee entered it. It was still in turmoil when he left. His character left an indelible imprint upon millions, during his lifetime; and upon many millions more since his death.

He has been known as an outstanding engineer. He has been known as a brilliant military tactician. He has been known as a wise educator. He has been known as a Christian gentleman.

I know him as a troubled man who searched his soul to find which of his divided loyalties he must follow to the end.

I see him the more clearly as he wrote to his son, Custis, shortly before the outbreak of the Civil War:

> The framers of our Constitution [would] never have exhausted so much labor, wisdom, and forbearance in its formation * * * if it was intended to be broken. * * * Still a Union that can only be maintained by swords and bayonets, and in which strife and civil war are to take the place of brotherly love and kindness, has no charm for me. I shall mourn for my country and for the welfare and progress of mankind.

I see him just as clearly as when, during that same period of crisis, he wrote to his friend, Markie Williams:

> If a disruption takes place, I shall go back in sorrow to my people and share the misery of my native State, and save in her defense there will be one soldier less in the world than now. I wish for no other flag than the "Star-Spangled Banner" and no other air than "Hail Columbia."

It must be said that Robert E. Lee was a stanch believer in States rights, as so many Americans are to this day. There are no geographical nor philosophical limits to this creed which guards so well the sovereignty of our several States, even to this day.

The President's State of the Union Message

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ELIZABETH KEE
OF WEST VIRGINIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, January 19, 1959

Mrs. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and include copy of my weekly newsletter "Keenotes" which was released today:

KEENOTES

(By Representative ELIZABETH KEE)

One of the highlights of the opening days of a new session of Congress is the President's state of the Union message. There has grown up in recent years a tradition that the President deliver this address in person before a joint session of the Senate and the House. Millions of people throughout the Nation share this experience through the magic of television.

For the most part, the state of the Union message is couched in general terms. The President tries, at the beginning of a new period in his administration, to sum up just where he thinks the country is going, how we are doing as a Nation in meeting the problems which beset us at home and abroad. He indicates, in general terms, what he wants Congress to do during the months ahead.

It is always a thrilling experience to be a part of this annual ceremony. It is history in the making. This year was no exception. The President appeared before the assembled legislators, Supreme Court Justices, Cabinet members, and foreign diplomats in the House Chamber. I was pleased to note that he appeared to be in the best of health. He delivered the 45-minute speech in a vigorous manner. To the eyes of a layman, he appeared to have bounced back from illnesses that plagued him earlier in his administration.

Because so much of the address was couched in general terms, it is difficult to arrive at any definite conclusions about the Presidential message. As everyone knows by now, the President centered his emphasis on a balanced budget. He spoke of the need to tailor all of our programs, including defense, to the objective of a balanced budget. I got the impression that his insistence that budgetary requirements transcend even defense needs received a distinctly cool reception, even from some of the Republicans. This battle between the budget and defense is shaping up as one of the major fights of the session. Democratic leaders in both Houses will insist that our defenses not be neglected to achieve a bookkeeping balance between revenue and expenditures.

The battle will be joined when the President presents his budget. He already has announced it will be in the neighborhood of $77 billion and will be in balance. However, many people are skeptically awaiting full details. For instance, can we balance a $77 billion budget without an increase of about one-third in tax revenues? And will business increase that much? Or can the President count on additional revenue from a further increase in postal rates and the gasoline tax?

Many Members will insist that urgently needed programs not be delayed or abanboned as a sacrifice to a balanced budget. For example, the West Virginia delegation is united in the belief that a depressed areas bill should be passed. How economical is it to stave off this program and allow thousands of men to continue on the unemployed rolls? Wouldn't it make better sense to invest money to create jobs to restore these men to the tax rolls and give them an income that would create additional jobs?

The President indicated he would ask additional money for foreign aid and credits to finance economic development abroad. Many Members will balk at expanding this foreign activity while cutting back on identical programs at home.

The state of the Union message is a valuable part of our system of government. The President, as head of the executive department, has the responsibility for initiating a program of action. The old saying, "The President proposes and Congress disposes," is certainly true. But Congress has a responsibility, too. It must examine the President's proposals, abandon them and change them to fit existing conditions.

Details of the President's program will unfold in a series of special messages during the coming weeks. No doubt there will be many differences of opinion between the President and Congress. But these differences will be worked out or compromised. Emphasis may be shifted from one program to another and Congress may decide to go further than the President wants. It is the genius of the American system that these differences are never allowed to paralyze Government.

Chief Robert V. Murray, Metropolitan Police Department

OF
HON. OLIN E. TEAGUE
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, January 19, 1959

Mr. TEAGUE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, last week a colleague of mine, who has just been assigned to the District of Columbia Committee, was quoted in the newspaper as stating that the Police Department of the District of Columbia is one of the worst in the world.

Mr. Speaker, I have been a member of the District of Columbia Committee for 12 years. I have observed the Police Department and believe that they have one of the most difficult police jobs of any city in the world and that they do one of the best jobs of any police force of any city.

Washington is certainly the crossroads of the world. The Capital of our Government is located here, as well as many foreign diplomats, and each of these groups cause a special police problem.

It is true that there is a high crime rate in Washington, but for sure the police do not cause the crimes.

I want to compliment the Washington Metropolitan Police Department and their chief, Robert V. Murray, and to include at this point a copy of a resolution adopted by the House District of Columbia Committee commending Chief Murray:

Whereas Chief of Police Robert V. Murray, of the Metropolitan Police force of the District of Columbia, has rendered outstanding services to the Nation's Capital in the field of law enforcement: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives hereby commends Chief of Police Robert V. Murray, of the Metropolitan Police force of the District of Columbia, for the distinguished service he has rendered as the chief law-enforcement officer of the Nation's Capital, and the committee also commends and approves his administration of the Metropolitan Police force of the District of Columbia.

Resolved, That, the chairman of the committee is authorized to have prepared and to present to Chief of Police Robert V. Murray an appropriate replica of this resolution and to extend to him the sincere best wishes of the committee for continued success in his administration of the Metropolitan Police force of the District of Columbia.
